Wilson asks CSUs to raise tuition fees by 40 percent

By Allison Gatlin

California State University students will be paying as much as 40 percent more in fees next year, if Gov. Pete Wilson's budget passes as proposed.

The budget, proposed last Thursday, authorizes the CSU System to raise fees up to 40 percent. This is to compensate for a shortfall of $110 million from what the trustees requested, according to Jeff Chang, legislative director for the California State Student Association.

"If there's any clearer example of students balancing the budget with their fees, I don't know of one," Chang said.

Wilson's proposed budget also calls for a 1.1 percent budget increase for the CSU. This will allow for increased enrollment, but not for inflationary increases, said Colin Garrett, spokesman for the governor's office.

"It is not designed to compensate for last year's cuts. A fee increase will be necessary to maintain the current level of education," he said. "Students are recipients of state funding, and anyone who is a direct recipient of state funding, in times of recession, are the people hit the hardest," Garrett said. "That's a cold, hard fact."

Garrett acknowledges that the increase will cause more students to require financial aid. He said, however, that the budget increase and the fee increase will be used, in part, to fund financial aid.

In this respect, the fee increase is a form of "taxing the rich" to benefit those who cannot afford the increase, Garrett said.

The Board of Trustees is meeting today to discuss the budget, fees and enrollment.

Their decision on fees could be made then, or they may schedule a February meeting to discuss the matter further, said Colin Bentley-Adler, spokeswoman for the Chancellor's Office.

The proposed 40 percent increase is misleading, Chang said.

Last year's fee increase included a 10 percent, one-time surcharge, which was supposed to disappear in this year's fees.

The proposed budget carries over this surcharge, in effect making the increase 50 percent (10 percent surcharge plus 40 percent increase).

"According to state law and to our lobbying, it looks like a 50 percent fee increase," he said.

CSSA plans to fight the fee increase throughout the budget approval process, which ends June 15. They will begin with a lobbying day Feb. 24. Chang said.

Philosophy major opens — finally

Faculty applauds arrival of long-awaited curriculum

By Dax Jonas

Cal Poly's philosophy department has opened its doors to students seeking a philosophy major. After 1 1/2 years of discussion, a bachelor's degree in philosophy at Cal Poly was approved by CSU Chancellor Barry Monis on Dec. 19.

Effective this quarter, the philosophy department will accept internal transfers to the new major.

There have been a number of inquiries into a philosophy major and it is probable that the major will be up and running by the fall.

A philosophy major is currently available at all CSU campuses except for San Marcos. The only state university that has been a much-needed major at Cal Poly is widely recognized as having one of the best philosophy faculties in the state.

"We've been around for 20 years. I've been around since 1970, and I've been hoping for 22 years for a philosophy major."

Russell Lascola

philsophy professor

Lascola was excited by the in­stallation of the new field as early as 1970. It was actually approved in the '80s but it did not make it past the Academic Senate until last year.

Final approval came because of the already existing level of curriculum available at Cal Poly. In the absence of the qualified faculty, most courses were already in place. Internal transfers are expected immediately.

"We (the study of philosophy) have been around for 20 years. I've been around since 1970, and I've been hoping for 22 years for a philosophy major," Lascola said. "I'm absolutely delighted. It's long overdue."

"Before the San Marcos campus even opened, we were the only state university that had a philosophy major. We finally got it after all these years."

Cal Poly architecture junior Corbett Wafling, 21, of Arroyo Grande, pleaded no contest Thursday to the Nov. 30 rape of a 25-year-old Arroyo Grande woman.

Deputy District Attorney Larry Greene said Wafling agreed to the terms of a plea bargain reached Thursday, the day before Wafling's preliminary hearing was to begin.

It is expected he will be ordered to serve seven years in state prison when he is sentenced March 17.

Corbett Wafling is the son of Arroyo Grande police Sgt. Dan Wafling.

Greene said Wafling allegedly broke into the victim's house and held her at bay with a knife while committing the rape.

When Wafling left, Greene said the victim immediately called the police, who searched the area and found Wafling hiding in his van, parked on the same block as the victim's home.

"We would not accept a plea bargain that did not include a plea of guilty and the admission of the use of the knife," Greene said.

Greene said Wafling has not demonstrated any history of mental illness, nor does he have a criminal record. Wafling is currently free on $85,000 bail.

As part of the plea bargain settlement, Greene said, two additional charges were dropped. Those charges were burglary, for entering the victim's home to commit a theft, and sexual battery, for using a knife during the rape.

He said under the doctrine of multiple punishment, the judge sentencing Wafling could only award enhanced punishment for the rape crime.

"We did not sacrifice punishment by allowing him to plead guilty to one (charge) while dis­missing the other two," said Greene.

Greene said Wafling could not be reached for comment.

Prime minister signs non-nuclear agreement

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Prime Minister Chung Won-shik on Monday signed a historic agreement with Communist North Korea that calls for a ban on nuclear weapons on the divided peninsula.

As part of a thaw in long-hostile relations, the two rival nations agreed to the accord on Dec. 31.

North Korean Premier Yun Hyong Mak also is required to sign the agreement before both Koreas exchange the documents on Tuesday. After a further signing and exchange, the agreement will take effect in February at a sixth round of prime minister's talks.

Pacific Ocean changes could affect weather

WASHINGTON (AP) — A massive pool of warm ocean water is causing changes in the atmosphere that could produce unusual weather around the world in the next few months, the National Weather Service reported Monday.

As a result of this phenomenon, known as El Nino, more rainfall than normal is likely this winter in Texas and along the Gulf and Southeast coasts, said Ed O'Lenic of the federal Climate Analysis Center.

In addition, he said warmer than normal weather seems likely over the Midwest through March, while the Southeast will probably be colder than usual for the season.

AS MANY AS 7 DIE IN LAS VEGAS PLANE CRASH

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Authorities sifted through charred debris scattered over a quarter-mile Monday and tried to determine how many people died in the crash of a private plane Saturday night.

As many as seven people may have died in the fiery crash, Las Vegas Metropolitan Police and Clark County corner's office reported. The twin-engine plane, en route from Las Vegas to Reno, Nev., crashed 12 miles from McCarran International Airport here.

Controllers reported seeing a ball of fire seconds after the aircraft disappeared from radar.

GROUP PROTESTING CUTS PICKETS WILSON'S HOME

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — More tests are needed to learn if the Magellan spacecraft, crippled by a broken transmitter, will be able to send a faulty backup radio to send added pictures of Venus back to Earth, an official said Monday.

Engineers at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory managed to stabilize the backup transmitter's temperatures and are confident it will work, but it will be late Wednesday before they know for sure, said Jim Scott, manager of the $744 million Magellan project.

"We're still testing it," he said.

Lost money plagues meal plans

By Deanna Wulff
Staff Writer

Complaints about campus dining are part of the college tradition. But, today, Cal Poly students aren't just complaining about the customary, bland, tasteless and greasy food. Today, they are complaining about problems paying for it.

"I feel like I'm wasting my money," said Aleece Dimas, an animal science freshman. "I miss meals all the time, and I'm always under the limit."

Residents, like Dimas, are frustrated. They pay $1,980 a year for a 14-meals-per-week plan or $2,127 for the 19-meal-per-week plan. Yet, on average, students with the 14-meal plan eat an average of 10 meals and the students with the 19-meal plan eat 13 meals, according to Alan Cushman, the associate director of Campus Dining.

"When I used to go home on weekends I would lose about six meals. I just couldn't afford that," said Kristen Bouma, a civil engineering senior. "I wish it could have been like Campus Express, where you pay for exactly what you get."

What's happening Cal Poly! My name is Joe and this quarter, because of the strike, I'm being forced at gunpoint to write for Mustang Daily.

Surprisingly enough, I am not nervous writing for so many thousands of other people, because I know that most of you have skipping school, going straight to Calvin, and are probably stepping on my words right now.

Being a Cal Poly journalist is like pissing in a wetsuit - you get a warm feeling, but no one really cares. On the off chance you've made it this far through the column, let us continue.

It's a new year, for those of you keeping score (1992) and odd numbers are that you probably hate a few of your New Year resolutions.

This year I resolved to never watch KSBY Action News again (for obvious reasons), to try not to judge people by their appearance as much as their character, and to stop dating your sister. Well, two out of three ain't bad.

By now, if you have any brains at all, you are asking yourself, "Self... why is this man writing this column?" Well, since you asked, I am tired of seeing the media dance around the one universal truth I know to exist in this world.

The fact that every one of us is just a dork in cool clothing. What am I talking about? Well...

"What do I do?" Well, first, develop a better option. While it would be absolutely economically disastrous the quality of student would go up when we got an education, enrollment could be raised, but not in the way that Cal Poly wants to fit in somewhere, find a clique, be accepted by others like them. At the same time you want to be different from everyone else, not be cool, etc. The problem is that in your quest for social superiority and acceptance, you forget about the little things that make you cool.

Smiling at strangers, opening a door for another, and generally forgetting that kindness is kindness. Nobody cares that you are a 4.0 student if you act like a dick and treat people like you'd better than them.

And believe it or not, nobody will offer to work with you if you see little letters in your sweat shirt, put on a cape and become Superflex.

I'm not saying that every security girl does this, but try smiling at one when she's hangin' out with her "sisters," and watch how she acts.

This column is not designed to log on security girls, academic nerds, or anyone specific. If everyone in the world admitted that they were only dorks in cool clothing, people could finally stop trying to fit in somewhere, find a clique, be accepted by others like them.

Also, to increase rainfall, Henderson said the city used the cloud-seeding technique during the storms, sending airplanes up to release silver iodide which mimics Mother Nature and creates something similar to ice crystals.

With man and nature’s efforts combined, the city is hoping to fill both reservoirs this year. Historically, Henderson said, the Salinas Reservoir spills an average of once every two years. If San Luis Obispo residents continue this successful rain dance, 1992’s rainfall may bring the Salinas Reservoir several feet closer to its traditional spill. Students returning to Cal Poly to unload their Christmas gifts and settle in for winter quarter probably did so in a rare downpour.

Gary Henderson, San Luis Obispo Water Division manager, said storms passing through San Luis Obispo Jan. 3-8 dropped 2.39 inches of rain into the Salinas Reservoir. The reservoir provides the majority of San Luis Obispo with its water.

Henderson said January’s rainfall plus the 5.37 inches of rain dropped Dec. 27-30 hasn’t refilled either reservoir.

As a result, San Luis Obispo will remain at a required 15 percent residential conservation level for the next 10 years.

"We’re hopeful that by April we’ll have enough rainfall to modify conservation levels," Henderson said. Henderson said the area’s ground water is dry and the rainfall was soaked into the ground with everywhere running off into the reservoirs. This helped plant life and prevented flooding, but did not improve reservoir levels. "It really hasn’t done a whole lot yet," Henderson said. "The ground is close to saturation but right now we need more rain.”
