Professor lands service award
Hal Johnston honored for aiding off-campus community

By Rick Shandley
Staff Writer

Students who get involved in off-campus community service will be an asset to any company or community they are involved with. That’s the view of Hal Johnston, who received this year’s Faculty Distinguished Service/Learning Award Tuesday morning.

Johnston has taught construction management for the School of Architecture for the past four years. He was recognized for his outstanding efforts to involve construction management students in academically-related service.

“The significance of this award is to recognize faculty who do an outstanding job of using off-campus community service activities as methods of learning,” said Sam Lutrin, Student Community Service adviser.

“The whole construction management department has a great record of faculty/student community service projects,” Lutrin said.

Lutrin agreed with Johnston’s emphasis on community projects.

“I think it’s part of a national effort to get more faculty to do this kind of thing,” Lutrin said, “to encourage other faculty to consider becoming involved in community service projects with their students.”

“We need to look at ways to get students with intensive course loads involved in community service by including community service in the curriculum,” Lutrin said. See AWARD, page 3

Stolen permit leads police to other goods

The owner of the bike has not been found. “The bike probably belongs to a student,” Kennedy said. “It is a Specialized Hard Rock mountain bike, colored teal green. It had a cut kryptonite cable lock next to it.” Also found in the car was a tool box with the name “Hudson” on it. Kennedy said he is not sure whether it is stolen property or not.

“The bolts had been removed from the front passenger seat, so the suspect could have been stripping the car down to sell,” Kennedy said. “We are still investigating the case.”

Mileage Team works to champion efficiency

Cal Poly vehicle to compete in two national contests

The objective is to take 250 milliliters of fuel, insert it into an unusual vehicle, drive six miles around a track at 15 miles per hour and use as little fuel as possible.

If Cal Poly does it better than any other group, its Super Mileage Team will come home champions of efficiency.

“The whole construction management department has a great record of faculty/student community service projects,” Lutrin said.

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Driving for a June summit signing, Secretary of State James A. Baker III is ready to offer to cut even deeper into the U.S. nuclear arsenal if Russia agrees to a ban on its most dangerous weapons.

President Bush has proposed slashing 50 percent of the long-range missile warheads that would remain on both sides under last year's Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, or START.

But Baker intends to tell Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev here on Wednesday that Bush would consider going further — if the Russians agreed to scrap their land-based, long-range missiles that carry more than one warhead.

So far, even though the Russians are avidly cooperating on weapons cutbacks, they have not agreed to negotiate over their land-based missiles with multiple warheads.

At the same time, the Russians are zeroing in on the U.S. missile submarine fleet, the pride of the American arsenal because it is considered most likely of all to survive a nuclear conflict.

Supreme Court finds term limits are legal

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The drive in at least a dozen states to limit lawmakers' terms got a boost when the U.S. Supreme Court left intact California's voter-approved limits for state officeholders.

The term limits — which won't directly affect California politicians until 1996 — have already helped reshape the Legislature, with many lawmakers retiring or seeking higher office.

The justices, without comment Monday, let stand a California Supreme Court ruling that said the limits, adopted in a 1990 initiative, do not violate the constitutional rights of legislators or voters.

It was not a ruling on the merits of term limits; the action was hailed nonetheless by their proponents.

It shows the Supreme Court "understands and respects the prerogatives of people in the states to set their own destiny," said Louis Uhler, who helped write California's initiative.

Voters in Colorado and Oklahoma also passed legislative term limits in 1990.

Beach-side city erects monument of surf hero

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — City officials have erected a cliff-side monument to the hero of this surfing capital of Northern California.

Dedicated to "all surfers, past, present and future," an 18-foot-tall, two-ton bronze statue of a surfer was erected Monday near a 300-yard inlet that is a favorite surfing spot.

"Even when I was a kid, surfers had a bad name," said Bob Rittenhouse Sr., 67. "But we grew up to be successful people. We aren't delinquents. This proves it."

Rittenhouse and his fellow surfers, the original members of the 1936-era Santa Cruz Surfing Club, came up with the idea five months ago. They wanted it to be true to their era, however: no Day-Glo wet suits or eight-pound boards.

Back then, surfers carved their boards from cedar planks and often dove off the end of the Santa Cruz wharf into the icy waters of Monterey Bay. They paddled nearly a mile without a wet suit to get to the best waves.

The statue, by sculptors Tom Marsh and Brian Curtis, sports trunks and holds an unusually long board.

year. The Academic Senate gave permission to run the program with two trial courses. Philosophy 231 and political science 916, both general education requirements, were chosen. University-run teacher evaluations are confidential, and in past years students have tried unsuccessfully to conduct their own evaluations. But now, with the cooperation of the Academic Senate, Burnett says students will be able to see the printed responses.

The results of this program will be compiled early in spring quarter. Burnett hopes to make them available for students before fall quarter. If students show enough interest, this program may eventually be implemented university-wide.

Gregor is a member of the board of directors representing the School of Liberal Arts and is working on the ASI committee to have teacher evaluations published.

A 1988 spring quarter study asked students what it would take to get involved in community service. The students replied, "If faculty gets involved, we'll get involved," Lutrin said.

On that front, Johnston said the construction management department is making a more intense effort to involve senior projects with community service. "I've set forth some goals to become more involved in community service and to get students involved," he said.

"One of my students got involved in building a dental clinic in Encinitas, Mexico, for his senior project," Johnston said.

In addition, Johnston said his involvement in community service may have influenced the student club. Johnston advises the Associated Students of Construction Management who serve in Big Brother/Big Sister groups.

As an example, he and his students are involved in the design and construction of restrooms for the Atascadero Girls' Softball League teams because the community didn't have the resources to build them, he said.

"Employers look for student involvement in community service," Johnston said.

"It's good for the students in the short and the long run."
What do you think of the structure of finals week at Cal Poly and what is your worst finals week nightmare?

I think the finals system is fine, it's the dead week that I have the real problem with. If we're going to have a dead week, it should be done by everyone.

I stayed up all night studying and slept through my alarm. I felt really lame because that's the one day that you want to really make an impression.

I think that sometimes it can be really queer and weird with one final on Monday and one on Friday. I don't like the way that teachers will make you stick around instead of rescheduling the final.

The worst final situation was when I had one on my birthday. It was a good thing it was on my birthday and not the day after.

It was an English final but I didn't do very great. I just did okay. There was no present from the teacher on my finals day.

The finals system at Cal Poly is fine; it spreads things out. I understand you're not supposed to have three finals in a day and that's never happened to me.

My worst finals story: I stayed up until four to study for a final, woke up a half hour before and I was out of coffee. ... I was just addicted to the heat of the warm beverage, and it didn't help and I had a headache through the whole test.

I' ve had to finish a take-home final at the last minute and read a book at the last minute. I've also forgotten assignments the day they were due. I've done it all.

I' d rather see finals spread over two weeks like some semester schools. That way, if you can work it out, you can have a whole extra week and a half of spring break. I could deal with that.

My worst finals week was when I came in to class late when the final had already started.

I stayed up all night studying and slept through my alarm. I felt really lame because that's the one day that you want to really make an impression.

I guess my worst finals experience was last December. I got to class late and the only seat left was next to the heater. I started melting.

I followed Dan to their door. They greeted him with smiles and recounted their story to him.

"We caught them feeling with the box today, and we just got our cable recon­nected," she said. "No far, we haven't had cable for a month, and we've paid our bills." When Dan asked him about the cable he said, "I don't know man, I wasn't here today." Moses said, "No, we haven't. I don't know what you're talking about. How did you know that we have cable?"

I saw Dan pour out one of their beers and check their car for alcohol. "What the hell do ya want. Leave me alone," he said as Dan approached. He had a wily look in his eye, and his face was contorted with confusion. He was extremely drunk. He tried to get up and stumble away.

Dan sat him down. He began to swear loudly at Dan, calling him a number of colorful things. I had to stifle a laugh. I couldn't believe the things the vagrant was saying.

"The guy, whose hair had recently been shaved, showed Dan his military I.D. He had been here only a week, and this was his first day off. He was new and he was out on his own."

I found out he has a wife, three children and a home in Atascadero. "San Luis is too crowded. I like to be out in the open where I can play with my kids and my dog," he said.

"We'll be getting police dogs soon, and I hope I can get one to keep me company. It's got to be better than riding along with a journalism major," he said with a smirk. I guess my rapid-fire questions were getting a little tedious. Dan's attitude showed when we got our next call. The dispatcher said there was a drunk wandering around Williams Bros, jumping in front of cars and vomiting on people.

"Not to mention he is totally cute," Jody added.

"I hope we don't find this guy," he said. But we did.

"It's real exhilarating. I used to be more aggressive, but you get older and you realize it's just not worth it." Dan's attitude showed when we got our next call. The dispatcher said there was a drunk wandering around Williams Bros, jumping in front of cars and vomiting on people.

"We didn't exactly enjoy it," Dan said. "The new cars are nice, but they take getting used to."

After getting some general information on him, the officers put him in the back of the car. I was excited that this weirdo was going to be riding with us. I thought, what fun. However, Dan didn't share my enthusiasm, and I soon found out why.

We had to take him to the County Jail which is about 15 minutes out of town. The entire time the man cursed, screamed, and spit. My side of the car had no shield, just a metal grating, so I got a lovely shower.

Then he started in on me. "Who do you think you are with that flirty smile? You're just a bitch." At this point, I realized how far away the jail was. He continued to moan and bellow.

We pulled into a brightly lit garage enclosed by a metal fence and Dan reported in. The fence rose up and then closed behind us. He pulled the man out of the car and walked him into a small room as I held the door. As I stepped inside, the door slammed and locked behind me with such force my heart leapt.

Dan had already approached a small window that led to another enclosed room. The drunk huddled in the corner. A young woman and man greeted Dan in a friendly manner and handed him some papers to fill out.

Dan filled out the arrest forms and then had to search him. He struggled with him at first, but finally the drunk acquiesced.

He had to feel the guy all over, searching from the inside of his pockets to the soles of his shoes, and this vagrant was far from clean. The man's socks actually held their shape when Dan took them off, and what a smell.

Finally, they took him into the next room and put him behind bars. In four hours, when he sobered up, they would let him go.

While we waited for some reports to be finished, the police officers, who seemed to know each other well, joked around. They laughed at the fact that he started to harass me on the way there. They shared a distinctive sense of humor and outlook which I guess comes from having such a unique job.

The lady behind the desk commented that this was the first time she had seen Dan smile. I was laughing also and having a really good time. It must not have been that bad to ride along with a journalist major.

On the way back to the station, we chatted. Dan told me about some of his more interesting adventures on the force, and I was quite entertained. Actually, the whole evening was entertaining. Yet, it was also educational. Not only did I enjoy myself, but I learned that officers are people. They may be intimidating with their uniforms, hats, and fancy lights, but they are real.

They can feel sympathy and anger, and they have a sense of humor. They may not always do the nicest things, but being nice isn't their job.

So, the next time you see those smiling red and white lights. Don't be afraid or angry. Remember, the officer is a person too. If you show the officer respect and courtesy, most likely, he or she will show you the same.

Professional surfing is returning to the Central Coast for the first time in five years.

The Mustangs are now one victory away from compiling the first perfect league record in Cal Poly rugby history.

"We missed a couple of opportunities, but played a fairly solid game," Mallard said.

Cal Poly scored 12 unanswered points in the first half and seemed poised to run away with the match at halftime.

Some of the world's best surfers and bodyboarders will be competing for a piece of the $20,000 purse.

"We are designing the project so we can utilize all the theories we learn in class," Graves said.

One new change to the exclusion of the windshield for the vehicle. Instead, the vehicle will be driven through front- and rearview camera projections.

Graves said replacing the windshield with the cameras is helping to make the vehicle more streamlined, which in turn will improve the overall aerodynamics.

Graves said that change has led to an extremely streamlined vehicle body. He also said the vehicle features a low coefficient of drag, electronic fuel injection, suspension and continual variable transmission.

"With continual variable transmission, the engine can move at its most efficient speed consistently," Graves said.

Jannce, a mechanical engineering professor, said the team has reworked the piston to be half the size it was before and has improved the engine by making it more predator-like. The team has also added a heat exchanger on intake.

The single-seat vehicle, projected to weigh 75 pounds, will be made with layers of Spectra, which is similar to fiberglass. The layers of Spectra will be bonded together with epoxy. The vehicle also will include layers of foam.

Graves said the Super Mileage Team has been searching for funding and donations to help the team grow.

He said Broad Street Bikes has become a great supporter as well as Phil's Machine Shop and Champion Spark Plugs.

The Super Mileage Team also has sent portfolios, drawings and letters to potential industrial supporters out of the state. Although financial support and donations have been difficult to get, Graves said the group was pleased to receive a $1,000 donation in cameras to be used in place of the windshield.

The Super Mileage Team, which includes seven students doing senior projects on the vehicle, meets once a week. The group spends every Saturday and much of winter break in the aerohanger machine shop working on the vehicle.

Both Graves and Jannce said the team has a lot of work yet to do, but both have high expectations for the finished product.

"We're going to try to win this year," Graves said, adding that if all goes as planned, Cal Poly may have a chance to "clean up" the competition.

"Boett's group has done the best I've seen in the past five years," Jannce said. "I think they're going to do pretty well. They've done well in the past."

As a learning tool, Jannce said the project helps students to see the purposes of their mechanical engineering educations.

"It helps them to get to see the overall picture and to put all the pieces together."
