SLO mayor endorses polySCOPE at rally

Council candidates air platforms on student housing, community relations

By Carolyn Nielsen

San Luis Obispo Mayor Ron Dunin said Monday that having a student on the City Council would be "absolutely positive." "It is very strange for a mayor of a city to say we need student representation (on the City Council)," Dunin said at the poly­SCOPE kickoff rally in the University Union. "We need a student on the council," he said.

Dunin said there was a Cal Poly student on City Council 20 years ago and he was "very successful." "It is with great pride that I listen to your candidates. Any one of the three I think would do a very good honor to the students and the city by sitting on the council," he said.

Dunin said there were four candidates, but political science senior Vince Battaglia dropped out of the race "because of a prior commitment." Battaglia said he still gives his full support to polySCOPE and their activities and regrets that he cannot stay in the race.

Brent Petersen, a political science senior, was the first city council candidate to speak at the rally. "A community can be represented only when their City Councilmember is one of them," Petersen said. "Remaining a resident for the next four years will guarantee that the City Council will never know who he was that sent me. And by maintaining my residency as a student, Cal Poly will never forget who it was they sent." Petersen wants to plan "campaign-town meetings," develop a communication link with Mustang Daily as well as get a phone line and hold office hours to listen to student concerns.

Todd Fernandes, an agribusiness sophomore, said he hopes to "open eyes" in the community and "earn respect" for students. He focused his statements on issues of student housing and the problem that students are seen by the community as "transient." "A lot of students are tired of seeing red and blue lights in their driveways," he said.

He would like to see something done about student housing as students "are not forced to live in an area where they have to adjust their lifestyles," he said.

At least seven miles of bike paths may be added to city streets if the San Luis Obispo City Council approves a resolution tonight calling for a series of bicycle improvement projects. The projects in the resolution were recommended by the city's Bicycle Advisory Committee. Currently, bike paths cover approximately 20 miles throughout the city, said Craig Anderson, bicycle coordinator for the city's community development department.

The new resolution calls for construction of 11 bike lane projects that would increase the total area of bike paths in the city by at least 30 percent, Anderson said.

In some cases, parking and traffic lanes would be removed in order to install the bike lanes. Parking on portions of Laurel Lane, Foxhill Boulevard, Grand Avenue and the east side of Santa Barbara Street would be removed under the plan. The elimination of parking is expected to be the most disputed aspect of the resolution.

"I support implementing new bicycle lanes, but not the removal of parking, especially in residential areas," Mayor Ron Dunin said last week. A plan last year to eliminate parking on Foxhill Boulevard received enormous public opposition and was abandoned by the city.
North Korea presents report on nuclear sites

PYONGYANG, North Korea (AP) — North Korea says it will report on all its nuclear facilities this week, paving the way for long-delayed outside inspections sought by nations that fear the North is working on atomic arms.

"We have nothing to hide," Son Rap Un, head of the Foreign Ministry’s U.S. and Japan department, told reporters Sunday.

He reiterated the hard-line Communist state’s denials that it is trying to develop nuclear weapons. He also repeatedly denied the country has facilities for producing plutonium — a key nuclear weapon ingredient.

But Western and South Korean intelligence officials say they believe North Korea is building a reprocessing plant for making weapons-grade plutonium at Yongbyon.

North Korea’s denials have raised suspicions about whether it intends to keep some facilities closed to inspectors.

The United States, Japan and South Korea all have made international inspections a precondition for improved diplomatic contacts and economic exchanges sought by North Korea.

Serbian army attack may wreck peace talk

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — An attack by Muslim militiamen on a convoy of federal troops, promised safe passage out of Sarajevo in return for the release of Bosnia's president, appears to have wrecked last week's deadly riots in the capital.

Sarajevo in return for the release of Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, according to a report in The New York Times.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court gave federal judges more power to throw out "frivolous" cases as it dismissed a lawsuit by a California inmate who said he was injured in the flooding.

Radio stations are reporting daily that a vast, $50 million flood relief effort is under way. But many people were unprepared for the deluge that swept through the delta.

Future farmers hold annual conference

By Elizabeth Magill
Staff Writer

This weekend marked a highlight in the year for high school chapters of California's Future Farmers of America. About 2,000 FFA members from approximately 30 chapters traveled to Cal Poly for the 64th annual State Leadership Conference. The theme was "An American Tribute." Students were honored for their hard work by attending and competing in the conference.

The long-awaited event was organized by Cal Poly's CFFA (Collegate FFA) chapter. Close to 1,000 students offered their time and energy to organize the event. Twenty-five committees were formed to handle the event.

The State Contest Final was held before the conference. Members competed for awards in 22 areas. Competitions, such as ag pest control, livestock and soil judging, involved almost every aspect of agriculture, from production to marketing.

Britta Midtgaard, chair of the event, said the finals are a fantastic opportunity for the students to display a summary of a year's learning.

Every chapter was required to send two delegates to represent their school. These delegates participated in the business aspects of the weekend, including voting in six new state officers, recognizing FFA members and voting on proposed amendments that could be added to the FFA constitution.

Other FFA members besides the delegates were encouraged to attend, said Brad Dodson, event adviser for the past four years.

"Anybody that comes besides the delegates is great... we'd like to see them here," he said.

Plenty of activities are organized to keep non-delegates busy. In the past, educational tours have been popular. Students have toured San Joaquin Valley hog and cattle operations, Paso Robles horse facilities and the Monterey Bay Aquarium.

Educational workshops proved to be an important part of the weekend. Students had an opportunity to participate in programs such as successful resume writing, impromptu public speaking and computer agriculture.

One of the educational programs prompted to enhance the team-building spirit. The program allowed FFA members to work with each other in high-energy output exercises. Michelle Perada, an agriculture education senior, said the "team-builder" chairperson the delegates were encouraged behind team-building.

"The activities require individual and group decision-making and cooperation to see FFA, page 6

Chicano culture celebrated at Poly Cinco de Mayo festivities

By Cynthia Nelson
Staff Writer

A Mexican battle began in the state of Puebla in 1862 to drive out the oppressive forces of the French. The Europeans were defeated on May 5, 1862. That day of battle was celebrated Sunday on the Cal Poly lawn. The day's events included speeches, readings and entertainment, which involved dancing by El Ballet Folklorico de Cal Poly, plays by Teatro M.E. Chichano, Aztec dancers and different Mexican-style bands.

The day's events were sponsored by Movimiento Estudiantil Chico novo de Aztlán (MECHA). The day was not only to celebrate a victory, it was also to reduce the gap between families and Chicano students.

Many Chicanos find it difficult to consider themselves as both a student and a family member, said Armando Men-...
Those who have rational sympathy should back their claim

By Michael M. Welch

To the whites who have honest feelings of sympathy, but feel some of us have projects of our own and are wrong to express our concern, I respond to the Friday, May 1, edition of this society felt by blacks) or many whites (as so many do) to claim outrage at the continuing racism they feel. It is not wrong for whites to feel some of us have projects of our own and are wrong to express our concern.

C A L P O L Y W O M E N ' S G Y M N A S T I C S team demands more after its suspension. The athletic department's decision insulted gymnastics as a whole. The athletic department missed an opportunity to make a strong statement against racism in the school and in the community. The athletic department's decision reflected a lack of respect for the gymnasts and for the black community. No white person can all stand with the athletes and say, "But that's not my fault." The gymnasts and the black community deserve better from the athletic department.

Of sympathy, but they cannot fully understand the feelings that made them feel unwelcome at the rally. Part of the problem is that not only have whites been oppressing blacks in this country for more than 400 years, but that certain whites have also been coming to blacks and saying "I sympathize and I'm with you," for more than 400 years. Many of these whites were sincere, but we have been betrayed countless times by those who were not. Even many whites who are genuinely sympathetic to blacks, I don't know how many whites I saw interviewed on the news who claimed that they were shocked and appalled at the verdict. Even if they truly felt that an injustice was done, the fact that they were shocked by the verdict indicates that they had not previously accepted that this is an inherently racist society. If the "sympathizer" white does not accept this fact, we are going to have a big compatibility problem when we try to work together.

Analytic department's decision insulated gymnastics

The athletic department should treat all its teams like members of a family. The athletic department should be responsible for its own teams. As a team under suspension, gymnastics may have been in coma, but they were still technically a living member of the family.

Gymnastics' indefinite suspension made a reinstatement difficult to organize without a coach or an unified group of members. But, by the athletic department's own definition, the team was still alive.

The application process for Cal Poly women's gymnastics should have been made by the athletic department before declaring gymnastics dead and adopting another sport. As "next of kin," it was the department's responsibility. Ignoring the forgotten sport was an insult.

END COMMENTARY

This commentary is in response to the Friday, May 1 commentary, "We can all stand by each other against racism in society."

Peter Hartlaub has missed much of the message of Thursday's rally. Obviously, different speakers had many different things to say, but it is wholly inadequate to claim that the overall message was that whites are "wrong for having sympathy" (presumably for the outrage at the continuing racism that made them feel unwelcome at the rally). It is not wrong for whites to have sympathy. It is wrong for whites (as so many do) to claim outrage at the continuing racism they feel. It is not wrong for whites to feel some of us have projects of our own and are wrong to express our concern. It is not wrong for whites to feel some of us have projects of our own and are wrong to express our concern. It is not wrong for whites to feel some of us have projects of our own and are wrong to express our concern.

Because of this, it is difficult for us to allow you into positions of confidence merely because you say you understand. We also cannot show you off to you as a rally such as Thursday's without pointing out the hypocrisy within so many who claim that they are supportive. We recognize that this hypocrisy exists, you should have no trouble with us pointing it out. If you do not recognize it, we have another compatibility problem, even if your feelings are sincere. I have no problems dealing with or talking to whites in a friendly manner. But we cannot trust a white person or many blacks, for that matter, in matters of great importance to our struggle, merely because the person CLAIMS to be down for the cause. If you would like to change this situation, look at the source. When we are freeing our own people from the racist attitudes that engulf them. Deal with all your own people who are the source of this mess.

The reason why the sister in the red shirt called all of the blacks together is because this is what we are trying to do. We are working to work on our own people. No, Mr. Jeff Shanholtz, Malcolm X did NOT teach that we should have the whites, "next of kin," it was the department's responsibility. Ignoring the forgotten sport was an insult.

A 'jury of peers' is a misleading term

Marty Collins raises a good question (Where is the justice?) in his letter of May 3. However, there is one important point that Mr. Collins' system is misconstrued in his letter (there is no such thing as a juror). This point is crucial to answering his question.

Collins asserts that Rodney King's case was in accordance with the jury system and that this case is designed to give persons accused of criminal activity a fair trial by "a jury of their peers." In fact, the selection of the jury in the Rodney King case was in accordance with the principles of our legal system. The court would reject a jury sympathetic toward Rodney King. After all, how could the four police officers get a fair trial with a biased jury? It is interesting that all too often this judicial system has been criticized as unfair specifically because it protects defendants and weakens the jury system. The only system that "punishes the victors" or "protects the criminals" is the system that Mr. Collins describes, not the system that many have endorsed. Politics and the courts are accrued because the system punishes. The computer and the courts protect Daryl Gates.

In the first place, the question, "Where is the justice?" I have to say that it is nowhere, according to the case. Aside from the fact that our legal system is not fair to the accused, we have to acknowledge the most influential element in this case: the accused are agents of law enforcement, and law enforcers are inherently part of the legal system. This case, if anything, shows us that police officers cannot be tried fairly in court of law precisely because they are protectors of law and order. After all, they assume a position that is above the law. When the police become the accused, then the system cannot work because there is a double standard on the side of law and order. A.J. Schuermann

CSU standards are slipping away

I am appalled and concerned with the financial situation in the CSU system. While the California population is overtaxed trying to maintain the nation's third cheapest college education, the standards are slipping dramatically.

It's time we put the responsibility where it belongs, on the students! Funds could be conserved by eliminating the footlights and stage dress, thus giving a choice between fewer and larger classes or football. I'm confident they would choose a quality education.

I don't understand the theory behind cutting programs; phasing-out is more appropriate. Why would a program (ET) which is offered at only one other CSU be cut instead of one which has closures at many locations? The administration has not offered explanations or criteria on which they base their decisions.

They are the managers, and we pay them well for their expertise; however, impacted students deserve explanations as well as the chance to offer solutions. Universities today are a business, and I have no objection with that; however, smart management must find alternate solutions besides cut, cut, cut. This institution needs sensible decisions in order to stop the decay.

Black America is misunderstood

I am concerned about the verdict of the police brutality trial. I am concerned about the verdict of the Rodney King trial. But after reading Peter Hartshorne's article on May 1, I am seriously concerned with the fundamental and ongoing misunderstanding of black America. It is well known that much of black America was attacked under the guise of laws, during the Civil Rights struggle of the 1960s. Therefore, it should not be astonishing that black America has a deep-rooted anger toward the white American. Now, after black America has attempted to work within the judicial and political systems for racial equality, a nearly all white jury has said that the beating of Rodney King was justified. It should be expected that black America has a great frustration with the white population and those systems.

Even though these instances of injustice are described mildly, it should be blatantly obvious that black America is fed up. How can you expect black America to accept any of the white population? Should we trust those who take opportunities such as the Public Enemy concert and turn them into drunken fantasies? Should we embrace those who attack the black man on his way home? Before you criticize our demonstrative actions under the current circumstances, take a look at yourself and your actions, and maybe you will one day be capable of understanding.

European not the same as African

Mr. Wooldridge (of Monday's letters), when you say that you come from across the globe, I'm quite sure you mean Europe. Am I correct? And are you "proud" of your ancestors that came from a "sordid" heritage? Were you proud of Christopher Columbus when he was raping and pillaging the Native Americans and their land?

Oh, wait a minute. I forgot — he was "discovering." Or were you proud of your European ancestors that lynched my African ancestors? I just want to understand how you can be so personal, I personally, I just want to be proud of that.

I'm not saying that all Anglo-Americans are racist and I am not an advocate of violence. You claim that you study history. Well, if you've done a good job of that then you would know that the frustration of African-Americans has been compounding for 400 years.

We tried to get justice through peace (the judicial system) and that didn't work. What did you expect? Did you expect the African-Americans to sit back and say, "Oh, well — I guess that's just the way it goes." NO! Violence is going to erupt when peace fails. I would also like to add that I didn't quite understand your last sentence. Do you actually think that the people in L.A. are advocating violence only because of the unfair grievances of some of your black friends? I don't want to believe that, Mr. Wooldridge. You claim that your major is history — I suggest that you consult your history books one more time!

Hemp
all the cholesterol out of your arteries," said Herer.
Alan Brady, a Santa Cruz activist, agreed with Herer that hemp is an important food source and urged the crowd to help make it accessible.
"We've got to work for it and make it legal so we can just grow it bare and harvest it." Peron is the author of the medical marijuana initiative - his idea is to make the plants. Johnathan West, who was stricken with the AIDS virus and sued marijuana as a "kind of key to all the medicine he was taking," said Peron. He said, "Prohibition is so the other Johnathans in the world won't have to suffer like he suffered."
Peron, as member of the Medical Marijuana Restoration Association, said his group has one some major victories in their fight to see medicinal marijuana restored in California. He said, "The California Medical Association, in its recent convention in April, voted to reinstate marijuana as a medicine." This endorsement proves "it's not just a bunch of crazies saying this stuff," he said.
Proposition P won 80 percent of the vote when put on the ballot in San Francisco, according to Peron. He said that "it was very enlightening to get that big of a vote. It made me feel like we should go other places and do this."
Peron, a 24-year veteran of the legalization fight, began smoking pot in Vietnam to relieve stress and "mainly because I like the stuff."
Green Party candidate Lorenz feels "it is essential to legaliize hemp," because she said that it is a civil liberties issue. Consenting adults should be free to decide what they do to and with their bodies."
"Throur communities are disproportionately targeted for drug arrests," Lorenz said. "Eighty percent of the people in the country who use and sell cocaine are white. Eighty percent of the people in jail on those drug-related charges are people of color."
Lorenz feels that the legalization of marijuana and eventual decriminalization of all drugs would be a step in the right direction.
People are "not criminals just by using the drug," she said. However, if people commit criminal acts while under the influence of drugs, she supports prosecution.
"The most important thing is to be honest and openly talk about the real roots of drug use and abuse," she said. "It's a social and health problem to use any kind of drug." Lorenz said she wants to see the money spent on drug criminalization going into prevention and education channels.
Herer is also fighting politics. "The only people that have power to save the future of this world is us, by getting rid of these politicians and teaching the world there's a safe plant which we can smoke, grow, use for medicine, fiber, paper, fuel that's better than the rest. That plant's illegal. Stop it. Get the people out of prison, give them back everything and never give up," Herer said. He urged, "This year you can not only smoke pot, you can wear pot, you can learn to use with pot and you can eat hemp (seed)."
Peron called marijuana a wonder drug. "It believe it's a medicine that can help our society right now, and it's time to end the drug wars before this country falls into the abyss of Nazism and crime social."
Peron believes "the whole country is being manipulated by 13 percent of the population who believe in original evangelical Christianity." He views these people as the enemy of the crusade for medicinal marijuana.
"Our enemies are not strong in numbers but have power politically," he said.
Brady sent out a message of political participation, telling the crowd that "it does pay to vote for the lesser of the two evils, because these people elect judges. They judge us. Get involved in politics because it really affects us."
The day ended on a note of providence to K. O. Brown's disc jockey and rally emcee, Woodrymph, lit up a joint before the crowd.

achieve success.
Teamship qualities are also tested and emphasized," she said.
"Team building helps the students to become a better team player as well as leaders."
Parada hoped the exercise helped the students carry team-building characteristics they learned back to their FFA groups.
Monday afternoon both delegates and non-delegates were to combine and cast ballots for six new state officers. The convention had its moments of fun and games also.
Saturday, opening night, representatives from WOW's (Week of Welcome) East Coast helped put on "Playfair," an icebreaker to get students acquiainted with each other.
This was followed by an ice cream social. "This is the students' time to kick up their heels," Dodson said. The convention offered FFA students a closer look at Cal Poly as well as their own club, Midgard said. "The students can see how FFA works, including actions of leadership, such as voting for amendments to be added to the FFA constitution," she said.
Anderson echoed the importance of the conference, saying the students a chance to get involved in FFA at a higher level (state) as well as work with kids from across the state." he said.

stand why it is important for Chicano students to move away and go to school. It is difficult on parents to have their children leave when they are accustomed to help support the family. Going to school for five years is not as feasible and hard for families as the community. People have criticized as for not being motivated, she said. "Motivation has been confused with self-centeredness." We (Latinos) are motivated by family and culture. Europeans are motivated as individuals," he said.

Mendoza said that many Chicanos would sacrifice for their parents, even if that meant putting off school. However, those Chicano who pursue and complete a higher education go back to their family. "We don't like to be away," she said.

Velasquez spoke about racism and addressed the Rodney King beating, which she said represented the history of racist strife. "We need to fight this sickness of racism," she said.

POLYSCOPE, they've heard of it, but they don't know the effect it could have," he said.

Mike Charbonneau, a construction management junior, said the rally was "very informative." He said, "It shows students, taking an initiative to get things moving in our direction.

Political science senior Stefanie Hurst also watched the rally. She said, "The bottom line is that if students choose to vote, we could become one of the single most powerful voting entities in this community."
