Police detain man in sexual misconduct case

By Francine Stewart
Staff Writer

A man was stopped and detained at Cal Poly Wednesday afternoon by Public Safety in relation to a sexual misconduct incident in the Robert E. Kennedy Library.

A man ejaculated on the back of a student while she was sleeping with her head resting on a of a student while she was sleeping on the fifth floor of the library. The woman awoke to find semen on her back. She then informed the librarian at the circulation desk and Public Safety of the incident.

Berrett said the victim would look at a photo lineup late Wednesday afternoon to determine if the detained man will be a suspect in the crime.

Public Safety Investigator Mike Kennedy said the individual responsible for the crime will be charged with disorderly conduct and lewd behavior. Kennedy said before the man was detained that campus police collected semen samples from the carpet, the chair and the clothing of the victim.

Kennedy also said that they had an excellent description of the individual but they didn't know if he is a student. David Walsh, dean of Library Services, said that the individual described in this situation is thought to have bothered at least three other women.

Campus police did not divulge the name of the man they detained or confirm that the man was a Poly student by press time. Kennedy said there have been a number of other cases of individuals masturbat­ ing in the library. He said that descriptions of these people are kept on file in the Public Safety office.

Walch said that buildings with semiprivate areas such as the library are prone to certain incidents like this.

The library is occasionally troubled by individuals who have the characteristics of exhibitionists and voyeurs and sometimes worse. — David Walsh, Library Services

Allen Settle puts his politics to practice

Cal Poly professor has more to his life than running for City Council

Brenda Lynn Mills
Staff Writer

A 22-year resident of San Luis Obispo is running for City Council, and there is more behind the man than just politics.

Cal Poly political science professor Allen Settle is a former City Council mem­ ber and is currently on the Planning Commission. Settle is not only involved in city government — he is involved with the university and with environmental is­ sues.

Settle, 48, has been married to his wife, Kathleen, for 21 years and has two sons. At ages 14 and 17, Settle said his sons definitely keep him busy.

Over the years, Settle has taught municipal government, public ad­ ministration, finance and law classes at Cal Poly. Settle said he enjoys working with students.

"Cal Poly students are bright, upward mobile, innovative and fun to work with," Settle said.

Settle also emphasized the community's need to recognize both Cal State and Cal Poly students because they are the largest single economic group in San Luis Obispo.

Mike Harkness, a political science senior, has had Settle as an instructor for four public administration classes at Cal Poly and as his senior project adviser.

One thing Harkness said that impressed him about Settle is that he's not just an academic but also a practitioner.

"Allen Settle brings real world experience to the classroom, not just what he picked up 20 years ago when he went to school," Harkness said.

When the two first met, Harkness said Settle was "fumbling with enthusiasm and knowledge."

Harkness said Settle is always willing to go out of his way for his students. He said several times Settle has even been willing to go to his office and talk after giving a four-hour night lecture.

"Besides having a ton of energy," Harkness said, "Allen Settle has a great sense of humor and he encourages audience participation even in classes of 45 students."

Settle isn't only involved academically at Cal Poly. He said his love for the stu­ dents got him involved as the adviser to the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity on campus. He said he enjoyed helping them get colonized and helping them find a house.

Settle is also an advocate of on-campus housing for married students, a greek row and faculty housing.

Settle said there is a lack of com­ munication between the students and the community and he'd like to bridge the gap.

"By being on the City Council," Settle said, "I could offer a better relationship between the city and the student body."

"It is important that the council doesn't take any actions pertaining to the stu­ dents unless they (the students) are in­ volved in the decision and in session," Settle said.

Currently, Settle is working on the city's general plan. He said one of his goals as a councilman would be to provide continuity to complete the city's 1992 General Plan.

Barry Karleskint, chairman of the Planning Commission, said he has known Settle for almost as long as Settle has lived in San Luis Obispo.

"We live in such a close community, be­ sides being on the commission together, we've gotten to know each other through swim meets, school events and the Rotary Club," Karleskint said.

Presidential election holds student interest

John Cristofano
Staff Writer

Despite the fact that the lowest voter turnout rate among Americans is the 18- to 21-year-old age group, the high amount of interest among some Cal Poly stu­ dents show in the upcoming November presidential election shouldn't come as a surprise.

This was the message Cal Poly political science professor Carroll McKibbin conveyed after listening to the views of some Cal Poly students.

"Nothing I've heard about student views on the subject seems the least bit unusual," McKibbin said.

The views to which McKibbin referred were those of 10 stu­ dents interviewed.

One of those students, Jeff Oyog, a mechanical engineering senior, said his interest level in this year's presidential election was not high, higher than usual, but added that "the choices we have just aren't very good."

"My interest level is higher because of the direction the country's going," Oyog said. "The least we (college students) can do is register and vote."

April Perez, a liberal studies junior, said she was interested in the upcoming election, but wasn't pleased with the "little political games the candidates play."

"I wish the candidates were better," Perez said. "But the best of what you've got is what you have to vote for."

Electrical engineering junior Jason West said his interest level in the presidential election is just aren't very good.

Questions about prison camps in Bosnia-Herzegovina persist

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Muslim-led forces battled Wednesday to break the Serb stranglehold on the city, and the United States again called on the U.N. to investigate reports of mass executions at detention camps in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The leader of Bosnia's Serbs denied his forces were operating concentration camps, and invited international agencies to see for themselves.

The Muslim-led Bosnian government also invited the United Nations, Red Cross and journalists to inspect its operating concentration camps, and invited internation­

NEW YORK (AP) — President Bush today reaffirmed his opposition to abortion "no matter the political price" in this election year, and told an appreciative Roman Catholic organization he would use a second term to help restore America's values.

"And if you're looking to restore America's moral fiber, why look syntochic when you can get real out of the president told the Knights of Columbus annual meeting as he set out on a two-day, pre-convention swing through three states.

Bush articulated differences with Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton on welfare reform, education and prayer in public schools without even mentioning his general campaign rival by name.

But his comments on abortion drew the largest ovation from his audience.

Abortion looms as perhaps the most contentious so­cial issue of the election campaign. Clinton supports a woman's right to choose an abortion, and Democratic leaders in Congress are searching for enough votes to send Bush legislation that would expand abortion rights in the wake of a recent Supreme Court ruling that nar­rowed them.

China arrests 126 people; busts alien-smuggling ring

BEIJING (AP) — Authorities have arrested 126 people who planned to enter the United States illegally, including the leaders of an alien-smuggling ring, an offi­cial newspaper reported.

Increasing numbers of Chinese are being smuggled to the United States. According to U.S. immigration figures, Hong Kong's crime syndicates, known as triads, have smuggled an estimated 40,000 illegal Chinese aliens to the United States in the past two years.

The Xinhua Evening News reported Tuesday that police in Fuzhou, capital of coastal Fujian province, con­fiscated train tickets, more than 120,000 in Chinese yuan and more than $7,000 in U.S. currency from the 126 people, who were arrested on Saturday.

The Shanghai newspaper was seen Wednesday in Beijing.

The newspaper identified three of the accused ringleaders, Zhang Mingliang, Chen Baomin and Chen Zhaohua. It said Zhang was not from China, but did not identify his home country.

Gloria O'Dell of Kansas and Geri Rothman-Serot of Missouri won Democratic primaries in their neighboring states, becoming the eighth and ninth women to gain Senate nominations so far this year.

Both face Republican heavyweights who may walk vic­tories in their own primaries Tuesday — Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and freshman Sen. Christopher Bond of Missouri.

It was a night of unwelcome change for two House in­cumbents, Dick Nichols of Kansas and Gray Vander Jagt of Michigan, who were ousted by challengers. They be­came the 14th and 15th congressmen to lose primary races this year.

LAPD officers indicted on federal civil rights charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Four police officers whose ac­quittals in a state trial sparked deadly riots were in­dicted on federal civil rights charges in the beating of motorist Rodney King, the U.S. Attorney said Wednesday.

The grand jury indictment set the stage for a reprise of the Simi Valley trial which resulted in the four men's acquittals on most criminal charges on April 29.

The indictments, handed down late Tuesday and un­sealed Wednesday, charged officers Lawrence Powell, Timothy Wind and Theodore Briseno of aiding and abet­ting each other in beating, stomping and kicking King under color of law.

The fourth defendant, Sgt. Stacey Koon, was charged with failing to prevent an unlawful assault by the of­ficer under his command.

U.S. Attorney Lourdes Baird said prosecutors will not allege that the beating was racially motivated, although the defendants are white and King is black.

"As far as a racial motivation, that is not part of these charges and we are not making that allegation," Ms. Baird said.

Baird said the right that is alleged to have been vio­lated in the right of all citizens to be free of un­reasonable assault by police officers "regardless of race or sex."

The indictments capped three months of secret grand jury hearings launched shortly after the April 29 ver­dicts set off rioting and prompted President Bush to denounce the jury's decision.

Ms. Baird maintained there was no political pressure to return indictments before the presidential election and said she never discussed the case with the White House.

The Ventura County location of the state trial on a change of venue was blamed by many for its outcome, and Ms. Baird said she expected no such shift of location in the federal trial. The federal district draws on seven counties for its jury pool.

She stressed that the investigation into the case was continuing but declined to say whether additional in­dictments were expected.

Two Poly colleges name interim deans

By Kali Blomstrom
Staff Writer

Harry Sharp Jr. and John Rogers have been appointed as the interim deans for the colleges of Liberal Arts and Business Administration, respectively.

The appointments were announced by Cal Poly Vice President of Academic Affairs Robert Robb.

Sharp began his new position on Monday, Aug. 3. Sharp said interim deans typically hold their positions for one year, so he said he expects to be here until next summer.

While in this position, Sharp said one of his main goals is to try and integrate into the college the departments and programs which recently joined it, including psychology and human development, graphic communications, and liberal studies.

Sharp said he would also like to do all he can to help everyone in the college, including faculty, staff and students, cope with the reduction of resources.

"We're all going to have to work as hard as we can under these difficult circumstances," Sharp said.

Sharp has been the associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts for four years, and has been at Cal Poly since 1975.

Rogers will begin his duties on the first of September.

Rogers has been the business administration department head since 1990 and has been at Cal Poly since 1986.

Marybeth Armstrong, associate dean of the College of Business, said search committees will be formed during the fall quarter to look for permanent deans for these two colleges.

Armstrong said these committees are usually made up of people from within the college, another dean and representatives from across the campus.

The best thing about the future is that it comes only one day at a time.

Cal Poly student runs for school board

Brenda Lynn Mills
Staff Writer

According to the San Luis Coastal School Board's youngest candidate, if he is elected in November, change will be the operative word for the next four years.

David Greenwald, a 19-year-old political science sophomore, said his candidacy for school board was inspired by the need for certain issues to be tackled, resolved and implemented in the school district.

"There are things about the school system I don't like, and given the chance, I'd like to change," Greenwald said.

Although he acknowledged that he may not be the most experienced candidate for the position, Greenwald said having been through the San Luis Coastal school system is a definite asset.

"I believe the voucher system would destroy the nucleus of the public schools. I will never support any sort of voucher system."

David Greenwald, School board candidate

Greenwald has lived in San Luis Obispo almost all his life.

He attended both Pacheco and Simshon elementary schools and Laguna Middle School. He graduated from San Luis High School in 1991.

Brian Miller, a math teacher at San Luis High School, has been in close contact with Greenwald since he started high school.

Miller also is the adviser to the political action club at San Luis High School, of which, he said, Greenwald was an active member.

"David is a very dedicated young man who has a lot of great ideas," Miller said. "He doesn't just talk about doing things. He actually does them."

Miller said Greenwald has always been involved in politics and is following his convictions by running for school board.

He said Greenwald didn't just jump in to the race, but that Greenwald thought about it for six months before making his decision.

Miller said it will also show the board that it's not always going to be the business owner that runs for a seat.

"David will bring a unique balance to the board if he is elected," Miller said.

Greenwald has already taken a stand on many issues in his political platform.

One issue Greenwald believes needs to be voted on is school board elections.

He thinks this is not the answer to the budget problem and would create more problems than it would solve.

Greenwald also takes a stand against the voucher system because it costs the public schools a tremendous amount of money.

"I believe the voucher system would destroy the nucleus of the public schools," Greenwald said. "I will never support any sort of voucher system."

Progress he would like to see implemented in the future include elementary, full-time, after-school recreation, teacher assessments and restructuring of high school classes.

Greenwald believes that high school is too centered on college skills and assumes that every single student plans to attend college.

"We need to create classes to give those students who aren't going to college the job training they will need so they can be qualified to go out into the world," Greenwald said.

He believes that teachers should be held in equal worth and prestige as doctors and lawyers.

"If they are going to be worth more, they must uphold the same standards as doctors and lawyers," Greenwald said.

Greenwald says his greatest strength is also his greatest weakness. He says he is idealistic and it often gets him into "comparative trouble."

"Because I have high ideals, it often gets me into a lot of arguments," Greenwald said.

Greenwald hopes his idealistic nature will be what the school board needs as well as the deciding factor when people go to the polls in November.

The best thing about the future is that it comes only one day at a time.

Yes, I am all for a fee increase to California State University students. The percentage of the increase can vary, but I would agree to a 40 percent increase. The quality of my education is important to me. If a fee increase can sustain or even raise the quality of my education, I will go for it.

The fact is that California is in big trouble with the whole budget situation. The state has issued IOUs to people who are dependent on that income for basic survival.

The way I see it, either we as students take the hit now or take the hit later. We should take the hit now.

I would rather pay more now and be able to get the classes I need, than pay the same amount and not get the classes I need. If I don't get the classes I need, then that is more time I will have to spend in school, and things are just going to get worse.

Look at it this way: If you take another year or two to graduate, then that is one less year that could be used toward earning potential. Sure, a lot of people can say things like, "Well, in the bad economy, there are no jobs," but I would rather have a degree in my pocket than hope to have a degree in my pocket. With a degree, I have a chance that I can be one of the lucky people and land a great job right after graduation.

Another thing many people can happen with both the school and my personal life that might get in the way of my getting my degree.

I always keep this in mind, too. If no one is beating down my door to offer me a terrific job, I know that I can do what a lot of other people do and go to graduate school.

The Employment Status Report for 1990-91 for Cal Poly graduates shows that when full-time employment goes down, graduate school enrollment goes up.

In 1990-91, 14 percent of those who responded decided to go to graduate school as compared to 10 percent in 1987-88.

With a slow job market, advanced study is an option for many. In the history of the report, there has never before been as many students moving on to master's and doctoral degree programs.

There is no doubt in my mind that a college education has to be affordable for students to attend.

But I also think that with a fee increase, we, as students, are still getting a lot for our money. What we pay does not cover the entire cost it takes to send us to school.

I'm not saying that we should get on our hands and knees to thank God for all that we have, but I do think that we have to keep our minds open.

I suggest to students to get into school, take care of business and get out as soon as possible before the whole system falls apart.

I don't want to have a lower quality of education. A degree means nothing unless you are able to use the skills that you learned in a job situation.

At Cal Poly, the "learn by doing" philosophy is a good thing. We as students have a prime opportunity to get the most out of the college experience.

There is only one group of students that a fee increase can affect.

Those students who are on financial aid don't have to worry as long, as their aid is proportional to the fee increase.

Those students who happen to be wealthy enough to not care about an increase here or there are not affected by this.

What is left is the middle class of students, who once again have to carry the weight of the mismanagement of our tax money.

Francine Stewart is a journalism junior with a concentration in public relations.

Francine Stewart has been an invaluable asset as the dean of the College of Liberal Arts. At Roger Ramp, we tried to get involved in the cute these students have.

Our activities were not confined to lecture halls and laboratories. We were exposed to experiences they may not normal experience the world for myself. Looking back, I feel that, as one of the Rampers over the summer, I was able to use the skills that I learned in a job situation.

Liberal Arts dean will be missed

Sidney Ribeau has been an invaluable asset as the dean of the College of Liberal Arts. In this time of budget tensions, Dr. Ribeau's stature has only increased. Instead of deciding unilaterally which programs in the College of Liberal Arts to cut funding for, he assembled a committee to address all points of view.

This just shows his true character — that of an articulate and compassionate administrator willing to think objectively and make a quality decision.

Dr. Ribeau will be sorely missed, and the College of Liberal Arts will not be the same.

We can only wish him the best, and we at the Liberal Arts Council hope that everything in life will go well for him.

Political Science
Outreach project a great success

In response to the article in Summer Mustang about Koger Kamp (July 30), I feel that, as director, there are a few points to be cleared up.

First, Koger Kamp was a great success. The community stood strongly behind the Kamp, and I could not be more pleased.

Although it is true that some of the Rampers overheard some negative comments, these were insignificant in the overall scheme of things. At Roger Ramp, we tried to focus on the positive, instilling optimism and vision in our Rampers. While at the same time teaching them the need to bend with life's twists and turns.

Second, the Rampers were very active during their five-day stay in San Luis Obispo. Their activities were not limited to dancing, barbecues and tours.

They were exposed to experiences they may not normally have had. These activities included lessons in physics, chemistry, astronomy, mathematics, engineering and marine biology, as well visits to local businesses.

I viewed the Kamp not as a vacation, but as an attempt to give a balanced and enriching experience to a group of young people deprived of the opportunity. I believe that goal was reached.

Third, my reference to the behavior of students at Poly Royal was not intended to paint everyone who participated in Poly Royal with the same brush; that would be prejudging, something I and my guests from South Central are all too familiar with.

My hope was to open some closed minds that have fallen victim to the trap of stereotyping a group of people they know little about.

The behavior of the Rampers was exemplary, and my hope is that members of the community took notice.

Overall, I though your article was positive, and I thank you for covering the Kamp in Summer Mustang.

Cotton candy days heat up Mid-State Fair fun

By Romina Vitos
Staff Writer

Some like it hot, and those who do make their way to the California Mid-State Fair.

For two weeks, Paso Robles is the place for fast food, live music, carnival rides and daily temperatures that soar into the 100s.

According to information compiled by the Paso Robles Chamber of Commerce, last year’s mid-state event brought more than 425,000 fairgoers into the sizzling city. Russ James, special events coordinator for the fair, said he expects that this year’s fair will be no different.

“We’ll get 25,000 to 25,000 people in the gates every day,” James said. “And those are only the paying customers – media representatives and special guests not included.”

Among the “special guests” appearing at the fairgrounds are country artists George Strait, Randy Travis and Dwight Yoakam. And for those whose tastes stray from the country theme, Dana Carvey, Kenny G. and Color Me Bald, among others, will be performing.

The list of attractions, both paid and free, is certainly a long one.

For the first time ever, the fair will offer the public the chance to free-fall from 125 feet. Yes, bungee jumping has come to the Mid-State Fair.

For $80, a willing fairgoer can be lifted via crane into the air, and dropped to within inches of the ground. World Bungee, the group responsible for the most recent attraction, is headquartered in New Zealand and has been in the United States on two other occasions.

“They’ve had over 80,000 jumps without even a nosebleed,” James said, “so we know their safety record is out of sight.”

Aside from bungee jumping, there are exhibits, livestock competitions, games, carnival rides and free shows ranging from live bands to western gun fights to hypnotists.

Working toward the write stuff

Aspiring authors share novel criticism, publishing tips through SLO club

By Jackie Jones
Staff Writer

Finding better opening lines than “It was a dark and stormy night” or “Once upon a time” and helping its members get published are only two of the tasks tackled regularly by a San Luis Obispo creative writing club.

Ann Phillips, a retired English professor at Santa Monica College and member of Nightwriters for almost two years, said the 4-year-old group’s purpose is to discuss, critique and stimulate a need for writing.

“There are times I think we need this group, but it turned out I really did,” Phillips said. “The group doesn’t just say ‘neat.’ They tell you what doesn’t work, and what isn’t grammatically correct.”

Nightwriters’ current president, Tom Best, said the group often meets to listen to a professional writer speak, take care of any business matters and allow four or five people to read some of their writing.

If a member wants additional help, he or she can join any of the three workshops, which include a screenwriter/playerwright workshop and morning and evening fiction-writing workshops.

Currently, the group meets once every two weeks. When members are working on novels, however, the club may meet once a week.

Phillips said that the group at one point had three members working novels. They each would write a new chapter every week, and the group would meet weekly to read these chapters.

Suzanne Champeau, mother of four and member of Phillips’ fiction group stressed how important these workshops were to her writing.

“Being a mother of four, it’s difficult to find the time to write,” Champeau said. “If you know you are expected to read at your next meeting, then you sit down and do it.”

She emphasized that the group was very instrumental in helping her get published. Champeau said that the group exchanged tips on what editors were looking for and what was selling.

“Rejections are nice when you can zero in on what you are doing wrong,” Champeau said. “The group shows you why you are getting rejected and how to improve.”

The program is open to all levels of writers.

SLO Nightwriters welcomes the public free of charge to meet with them on the second Monday of every month at 7 p.m. at St. Joseph’s Episcopal Church, 1344 Nipomo St. For more information, call Tom Best at 543-8808.

And then there’s the rodeo, which comes to town Aug. 13, 14 and 15. This year the rodeo has two added attractions: two giant video replay screens, each measuring 169 square feet. James said the screens will give the audience an exciting and close-up view of the action.

As usual, there are many attractions geared toward the younger fairgoer. There’s the Kiddieland Carnival and the Swan Brothers Circus, complete with two clowns and LuLu the Wonder Dog. Riders in the Sky, a musical comedy group, will also perform, as will Captain Byrd and his Wonderful Macaws.

“The circus is the funnest,” said 5-year-old Ashley McCall, who spent Monday at the fair. “It allows you to watch and give you prizes and make you laugh.”

Here is one couple that believes the best present of all is giving.

Dr. Philip C. Armstrong, D.D.S., and Jeannette Armstrong, married for 53 years and residents of San Luis Obispo for 15 years, have filled their lives by giving. They believe that generosity can be fun and beneficial.

The Armstromgs recently donated four pieces of commercial real estate in Oceano, two to Cal Poly and two to Willamette University in Oregon. Later this month Dr. Armstrong will give one scholarship, probably in biochemistry, to each university.

"We strongly believe in education," said Dr. Armstrong. "Our daughter, Phyllis Daves, a graduate of agriculture business and one time woman of the year at Cal Poly, knew we wanted to invest in a university, and she suggested Cal Poly."

The Armstromgs eventually decided to divide the property among Dr. Armstrong's alma mater at Willamette and his daughter's at Cal Poly. The Armstromgs were introduced to Robert Griffin, Associate Executive Director of the Cal Poly Foundation, to arrange the donation.

"We were one of the first donors, so we had to work out all the angles and tangles," said Dr. Armstrong. "It took about three months."

According to Griffin, the Cal Poly Foundation, acting as a trustee, sold the property and invested the proceeds. The Armstromgs received an income for life and numerous tax advantages through the gift.

"It really is a smart investment. Especially in a struggling economy, you want to invest in such a way that enhances your financial status," said Dr. Armstrong. "We now have terrific tax breaks."

Mrs. Armstrong said that she and her husband were relieved that the property would not be a hassle to their children. "Our three children are all successful."

Professor McKibbin said that the notion that students don't like the choices their president is very common.

"But to me it's a lame excuse," he said.

"Everyone thinks there should be some knight in shining armor that will show up and rescue us out of our troubles," McKibbin said. "It never happens," McKibbin said.

"The responsibility of taking care of all of the country's problems is being on us, the college students," West said.

"A lot of students are so focused on school that they don't see beyond the next test," he said. "Somehow, we've got to broaden our vision to look down the road 20 years."

Glenn Curtis, a computer science senior, said that he thinks only now students are realizing that if we get the right people in government we've got a chance at change.

"Students are starting to personally see some of the effects government can have on them," Curtis said.

"The fee increases and cuts at Poly are good examples of that."

28 high schoolers come for journalism workshop

By Francine Stewart
Staff Writer

Twenty-eight top high school journalism students from throughout Central and Southern California are at Cal Poly for the 41st California Scholastic Press Association Workshop. The students arrived on July 26 and will stay until Aug. 7.

The students were selected from 50 applicants, said Don McCaleb, university coordinator for the workshop. The applicants were required to write an essay and submit samples of articles they wrote, he said.

McCaleb said the program has been going quite well. He said they wrote, he said. "It will be worth it when it's busy with the workshop classes," going to Cal Poly after graduating. "I'm really enjoying the people and the instructors. Yong is a senior in high school and is considering going to Cal Poly after graduation."

Rally Underwood said that attending the workshop will give her an opportunity to experience the many aspects of journalism. Underwood said she is kept busy with the workshop classes, but "it will be worth it when it's over."

The students are required to produce a television news segment, shoot and develop still photographs and complete a variety of writing assignments in deadline situations.

The group has already toured the San Luis Obispo County Telegram-Tribune and KSBY facilities in San Luis Obispo.

The workshop is co-sponsored by Cal Poly's journalism department and the College of Liberal Arts. The workshop was founded and operates for many years by longtime Los Angeles-area journalist Ralph Alexander and his wife, Millie. Both Alexanders died in 1981.

Workshop faculty are media and communications professionals who volunteer their services. The instructors include Wall Street Journal columnist Tim Ferguson and Los Angeles Times reporters Steve Harvey, Chris Baker and Scott Harris.

sometimes worse," he said. "It is upsetting, frustrating and particularly demeaning to those individuals that they bother."

There has been success in catching suspects of this type, before, Walch said. When Sun Public Safety, the victim and the library work together, there is a good chance of catching the perpetrator, he said.

"In every reported instance, the library informs Public Safety and seeks their assistance in apprehending the individual," Walch said.

This incident was announced to all of the library department heads by Walch at a meeting on Tuesday morning. Usually, only a incident report is made and distributed to the different departments in the library. He said it is left up to the individual departments to inform the stu­dents of the situations.

As for working on the Planning Commission, Karleskint said Settle is definitely a team player, but one with his own agenda in planning and politics. Karleskint said Settle is very focused and vocal, characteristics which help him pick up on things quicker than most.

"Settle has served on the Planning Commission before, which gives him more polish," Karleskint said. "He knows how to work with the community."

Settle said he enjoys working in government because he see the results of his actions, but he admitted he likes to pursue his other interests as well. "If we can't control land use, we can't control the budget," Settle said. "We need to try to control land use."

"San Luis Obispo is the best place to live in the entire United States, if not the world," Settle said, "that is why we must all work together to keep it that way."
