Accusations fly in final presidential debate

By Kevin Dalrymple

Staff Writer

Accusations were flying thick and fast as the Republican and Democrat candidates met in the final debate of the campaign, and many of the issues that have been the focal point of the campaign debates over the past several months were revisited.

President Baker invited students over to his house Monday for an informal meeting / page three

From the beginning when we tried to get this place going," said bath Brown, food service director for ARA Service, which contracts with CSUB.

"Times have changed dramatically in the last nine years (since The Pub opened)," he said, "and people have come to enjoy what we have to offer here.

"We haven't had any problems with fighting, people drinking too much or our administration," he said. "We run a good, respectable, profitable operation."

Administrators at CSUB are also in favor of the business The Pub offers.

"From the beginning when we tried to get a license, the faculty, students and administration backed it 110 percent. But we've had these problems on campus."
Man survives 15 days on arctic island eating snow

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A Danish fisherman survived for 15 days on a barren, arctic island off Greenland by living under his upturned boat and eating snow, police said Monday.

When fishermen first spotted 30-year-old Henrik Carlsen on Sunday, they thought he was dead.

"While here don't want to get involved when they see a dead body.... So they rushed back to alert me," said police constable Madel Christensen in the village of Upernavik, Greenland. "The fishermen didn't get close enough to see he was alive." Two hours later, police arrived at the island 280 miles north of the Arctic Circle and found the Dane. He was suffering from exhaustion, had frostbitten feet, and had lost nearly 45 pounds, Christensen said.

Carlsen stopped at the island to seek shelter after he lost his way and his boat ran out of fuel.

China has new Politburo, blessing given by Xiaoping

BELING (AP) — China's Communist Party sought to ensure regime stability and expand its power base by approving a new top leadership Monday that is dominated by technocrats and market reformers.

Senior leader Deng Xiaoping, 88, made a rare public appearance to give his blessing to the new leaders, who he hopes will continue his policies into the next century.

The appointments capped a weeklong party congress that strongly endorsed relaxing state controls over the economy in favor of free markets.

Deng believes growing prosperity can best ensure the party's future in power. However, the congress ruled out political liberalization and made no serious efforts to confront the problems of official corruption and power abuse that have eroded public support and could trigger future challenges to party rule.

The party named a new 20-member Politburo on which only six members were carried over. Eight men over age 65, including several hard-line ideologues, stepped down to make way for a new panel dominated by engineers and accountants experienced in implementing economic reforms on the local level.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A biotech company's effort to rush an experimental AIDS vaccine to large-scale human trials was rebuffed by government researchers, so it went on the old-fashioned way: it lobbed.

It hired former Sen. Russell Long, one of Washington's legendary powerbrokers who now is a lobbyist with a rare asset — access to the Senate floor.

The result? Congress slipped $20 million into a $250 billion Pentagon spending bill for the coming year, earmarked for trials of the Connecticut company's developmental drug.

But that move, which circumvented the scientific process the government normally uses to allocate research dollars, created what some say is a dangerous precedent: That politicians, not doctors, can make life-and-death decisions about drug testing.

"I don't know how in good conscience you can go to a patient and say, 'We're giving you this drug because a lobbyist chose it,'" said Dr. Bernardine Healy, director of the National Institutes of Health.

Dr. Mervyn Silverman, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, said, "AIDS is the most political disease I've ever dealt with, and this only further politizes it."

The provision in the defense appropriations bill, already signed by President Bush, earmarks $20 million for large-scale clinical trials of the vaccine gp160, a genetically engineered version of a protein that surrounds the virus that causes AIDS.

The pioneer and leader in gp160 research is MicroGenetics of Meriden, Conn. The company is represented in Washington by Long, a former Louisiana senator who chaired the tax-writing finance committee for more than 15 years.

At least a dozen potential vaccines to prevent or treat AIDS are in development. The Microgenetics product is one of about half a dozen such drugs now undergoing limited trials in human patients.

Healy said Long had approached her agency and asked for special treatment for gp160, to "pull it out of line" and give it expedited consideration. At one point, he asked to have the NIH brief senators on the relative merit of all the developmental vaccines. The agency declined.

most Wanted concept may work for child support bills

BAKERSFIELD (AP) — Parents in Bakersfield who are behind in child support may find their faces splattered on television in hopes they'll get embarrassed enough to pay up.

A local group called Parents Who Won't Pay is booking up with the Warner Cable outlet in Bakersfield on this latest list of television's "Most Wanted" characters.

Parents Who Won't Pay is asking people to provide information about deadbeat fathers or mothers they think should be exposed. Parents who have custody of the children will have to provide a court order showing nonpayment and the exact amount owed.

A photo of each deadbeat parent who is chosen along with the amount he or she owes will be shown on the cable channel for 15 seconds per hour for seven days. The screen will display a telephone number people can call with information on the whereabouts of parents who owe child support.

Baker meets with students
Poly president eats ice cream and talks with students

By Gabe Joynt
Staff Writer

Cal Poly President Warren Baker met with students for ice cream sundaes Monday afternoon, giving students a rare chance to talk with him informally.

It was a time for students to compare the image they heard of President Baker with the real person. Most students said they were impressed.

"Before (today) he seemed rather distant," said environmental engineering junior Mig Ponce. But, Ponce said, Baker seemed "genuinely interested in the welfare of the students."

"Now I know who he is," Ponce said.

One new student who said he hadn't heard much about Baker said he didn't understand why he had a bad reputation among students.

"I feel he definitely has our best interests in mind," said Paul Feather, a first-quarter architectural engineering junior.

Feather advised students to "wake up a little bit. Instead of picking on President Baker, they should vote for their state legislators and start affecting change where it matters."

Hazel Scott, vice president for Student Affairs, said people have unrealistic expectations of Baker.

"He's the target," Scott said. "He's ultimately accountable, ultimately responsible for everything... he's going to work hard for the students."

Scott said this interaction between students and the president was nothing new. The president meets with a group of about 20 students about once a month to talk about student concerns.

Baker was available to students for four hours on the patio of his on-campus home. Invitations to the social were circulated through the residence halls and WOW counselors.

Life in a shoebox

By Gabe Joynt

I don’t have to scrub my toilet. I don’t have to cook. I don’t have to pay monthly water, electricity, gas, or cable bills. I get free cable! HA! The dorm experience represents a compromise of freedom for convenience. You can’t even grow mold in your refrigerator in the dorms! The resident police will arbitrarily come into your room and document your mold. Imagine if Bill Clinton had lived in the dorms here instead of at Oxford... instead of talking about smoking pot, he’d have to convince the public that he was growing blue cheese or doing a Penicillin experiment.

Some things are just private business, I say.

There’s just too many rules in the dorms.

We can’t have even empty beer cans in our rooms (or even those cute Little-Bud can wind toys), and if my girlfriend spends the night, I can get reported to the authorities and have to do some community service “rehabitation,” as they call it in Dormspeak (is prohibited).

And then there’s the food.

Two words: Chicken Dijon.

Two more words: Beef Burgundy.

You thought you couldn’t screw up pasta?

Welcome to visa Grande country, pilgrim.

I had this tortellini last night:

$11 worth of juice and chips with their meal card is going to get his stupid ass kicked all the way down to the stalls, where he won’t have to figure out how much his beef burgundy will cost him.

But, 1 degrees. As promised, I do have a point here.

The Point:

The dorms are great for first-time students. Honest! But it is.

I lived in the dorms my first year here, and when Gabe Junior goes to college (if my testicles haven’t been irradiated by the Crab Delights I just ate), I’ll insist that he live in the dorms, no matter how repressive and gastronomically brutal the dorms are.

But there is more to life, and living space, than a 9 by 19 room. People at other schools can get on-campus apartments with living rooms and kitchens.

Why don’t we have kitchens?

We have one option for on-campus housing (read: no off-campus.

And the community hates us for it.

The dorms are simply not what the returning students want.

So they move to Laguna Lake, live a student-style life and in-furate residents who bought homes 20 years ago in what was a family neighborhood. These people get together and get city government to make laws regulating how many students can live in a house (driving rents up), and try to regulate students’ life-style back into dorm room days (where Cal Poly’s dorms belong).

The serious problems of student-community relations revolve around a lack of appropriate housing for students, and there’s nothing funny about Bill Clinton.

(please note there is still a lot to laugh at when it comes to on-campus food).

The Cal Poly Housing Department seems to be caught in a one-room dorm paradigm. And you are suffering the consequences.

At least you’re not suffering the cost.

What about married student housing? What about faculty housing? Does the university really believe all of the students’ housing needs can be served by the same inflexible non-option available to us now?

We have housing options on campus that the students will like... maybe they’ll live it and never want to leave.

Hey, maybe Proposition 165 (pete wilson for King of California) will pass, and then people can stay in on-campus housing forever (which will be how long it will take to get back to a CHEF if pete gets his way).

Moratorium on club food sales

The issue: The moratorium issued by Campus Dining, brought before the ASI Board of Directors at last Wednesday’s meeting. The moratorium prohibits clubs from selling hot food on campus.

While the document presented by Campus Dining may mention other things, such as staff wages, it is primarily a moratorium on club food sales.

The campus is comprised of a number of units working together. The university hires professors, administrators and staff.

But first and foremost, this university was set up for the students, and extracurricular activities are just as important to a school’s identity as academics.

The moratorium presented to ASI is just one more step toward the dismantling of many extracurricular activities that depend on food sales for their existence.

In the past two years, the lack of Poly Royal and the lack of a raise in ASI’s funding from the students have left many clubs to scratch and claw for survival.

Reggio Rodriguez, a member of MECHA who spoke at last week’s ASI meeting said it well:

“We are not asking ASI to fund us, we are not asking the Foundation to fund us. We want to be able to raise our own funds.”

And it’s becoming almost impossible for clubs to do that.

Campus Dining shouldn’t be in the position to make things any more difficult for clubs the MRC’s.

Campus Dining wants to preserve their well-being at the expense of others, and who knows, maybe develop a monopoly in the process.

Clubs should be able to sell what they want, when they want.

Wranglers, boots and books

Agriculture. What exactly does that mean? Webster's New World Dictionary defines it as the science and art of farming: work of cultivating the soil, producing crops and raising livestock. But agriculture is much more than that.

It is the #1 industry in California. But you "反ag"s", did you hear me? It is the NUMBER ONE industry in our state. Twenty-five percent of the jobs in California are directly related to agriculture and are dependent on the ag industry — although many of us believe that we are not affected. Wake up!

Agriculture affects each of us daily, from the clothes we wear to the food we eat. But many of us seem to be illiterate to that fact. Have you ever asked any "city folk" where milk comes from? Ask someone. I'll tell you the common answer. "It comes from a cow."

And we call ourselves scholars. That is embarrassing. No, milk does not come from a cow, it comes from a cow. You know the saying, "The clothes you wear are made from the hair and white animals that you see at the Cal Poly Dairy Unit and at Unit Haul moving vans."

And what about the clothes we wear? Where do you think the materials come from? No, not the fabric store. More like from animal by-products, hides and other things that we don't think about that when you go shopping next time.

What about the steel industry? The auto industry or the sports industry? I let most of you believe that products of agriculture are not related to any of these. But, in fact, you're wrong.

The steel industry relies on beef tallow to produce molten steel, so does the automobile industry for producing tires. And I know there are a lot of sports fans out there. Have any of you given any thought about what baseball is made of? The outside is made of cowhide. And all 108 stitches are sewn with wool thread. Who would ever believe.

If you're the average Cal Poly student, you are probably oblivious to these facts. Take me, a journalism student that was born and raised in northern California. Before I came to this school, I was an idiot when it came to agriculture. If I even heard the word, I laughed. I didn't know the difference between dairy cattle and beef cattle. And let me tell you, there is a difference.

Now I'm not telling you to go out and educate yourselves on the importance of agriculture. But, you might actually learn something. Let's be smart about it. Don't get around knowing agriculture. And especially don't make fun of the people that are "aggie"s". Without them, there might not be food on our tables or clothing for us to wear.

Our school is bigger than "ag"gics" because we dress a certain way and we choose not to listen to country music. But, we sure act like it. We laugh at the classes that agriculture students take, but how can we? Have any of you taken one of their classes? Have any of you taken the time to visit the dairy unit, swine unit or the like? Do you even bother to learn about what this school is noted for?

No! Too bad.

And the funny thing about that is that "ag"gics" are just like you and me. They have the same air, travel the same roads and they even go to the same school. But we don't seem to care.

Look around your classes. I bet that you'd see a few people with wranglers and boots on. But look closely because there might just be a "preppy" or a "surfer" that just happens to be an aggie at heart. Talk about shock! It's entertaining to me when my friends meet someone that doesn't fit their "image" of what an aggie should be. I'd like to know what the definition for "aggie" is. I didn't know you could have a little aggie in you.

And especially don't make fun of these. But, in fact, you're wrong. What about the clothes you wear? Where do you think the material is from? The outside is made of cowhide. Of course they are not related to any of the clothes we wear, but we wear them. And we tend to poke fun at the classes that agriculture students take, but how can we? We are no better than "aggies" because we dress a certain way and we choose not to listen to country music. But it's true.

There are many different facets of agriculture. We do not just "cows and plows." There is an extremely important industry out there that many of us seem to over look. And we tend to poke fun at those in the industry.

Remember, at one time I was Miss "anti-ag" herself. But since coming to Cal Poly, I've learned to appreciate it. I now realize how important agriculture is to me and to our society. It's not too late for you to realize that either.

Just think about what you are wearing right now or about what you ate for breakfast this morning. Have you even bothered to learn about what this school is noted for?

Noo! Too bad.

And the funny thing about that is that "ag"gics" are just like you and me. They have the same air, travel the same roads and they even go to the same school. But we don't seem to care.

Funding leaders say money hasn't bought them

By Liz Weber

The two City Council candidates with the most campaign contributions disagree with one of their competitors that "special interest" money will influence their political campaigns.

City Council candidate Allen Settle asked in an interview Sunday how fellow candidates David Romero and Dodie Williams could be their own candidates "if they receive such a large volume of special interest, defined as real estate development interest money," she said. "I am beholden to no special interest groups," she said. "I am not supported by any special interest as we speak."

Settle also said the council candidates are "tainted," Williams added. "It doesn't mean that that money is tainted, Williams added. It doesn't mean that I am going to lean toward them on any given issue."

Settle also said those who donated to Romero and Williams would "expect a return on their investment."

Romero said he wouldn't be influenced by his contributors. "I think I've always been able to separate city interest and friendship," he said.

Settle also said many voters believe it is a conflict of interest to accept donations from people whose business interests might one day come before the City Council. But Williams said she could not be bought. "I'm not beholden to anybody," she said, "and if anyone thinks they can buy me for $100, I've got news for them. It isn't going to happen."

"I'm a little bothered that Allen Settle would stoop to that kind of statement," Romero said. "I don't think we have anyone listed as a developer." Romero said the majority of his large donations came from homeowners, retired citizens and longtime friends. "I've had contact with so many people, all over the city," he said.

Williams said her contributors come from a variety of sources. "I have a lot of contributions from a lot of different people," she said. "My first half-dozen contributions were $100 contributions. They were from retired people who have never before contributed to a political campaign—ever."

"I have, I think, two contributions from developers," Williams added. "The most anyone can contribute is $100, so you know that that's all I could have received from either of those two."

Williams said her contributors are community members, not merely business people. "I would say that in large part, most of my large contributions—granted many are from the business community—but they're also members of the community who live here and have kids who go to school here," she said.

"Granted many (funds) are from business, but they're also members of the community who live here," Dodie Williams said.

"Because they're in business doesn't mean that they've bad, doesn't mean that that money is tainted," Williams added. "It doesn't mean that I am going to lean toward them on any given issue."

POLY BEATS SAN FRANCISCO 3-1

Cal Poly wasn’t supposed to have a chance at making the NCAA Division II women’s soccer playoffs this year.

It’s only the Mustangs’ first year playing at the Division II level and postseason play was supposed to be unthinkable.

But after posting a 3-1 win over the University of San Francisco on Sunday, the Mustangs (8-5-2) still have a chance at reaching the postseason.

“We’re still in the hunt,” said Cal Poly coach Alex Crozier.

If Cal Poly is not among the six teams that are selected for the Division II playoffs in November, it could be as a result of losses to Cal Poly Pomona on Sept. 23 and to Cal State Dominguez Hills on Oct. 7.

“We basically shot ourselves in the foot when we lost to them,” said Crozier.

Kristen Johnson’s foot gave Cal Poly a 2-0 halftime lead on Sunday as she scored both of the Mustangs’ first-half goals.

San Francisco, a Division I team, scored early in the second half to cut Cal Poly’s lead to 2-1. Michelle Vernon scored with two minutes left for the 3-1 final.

On Saturday, Cal Poly played UC Davis to a 0-0 draw.

Cal Poly plays State Hayward on Sunday at Mustang Stadium at 1 p.m.

When one person in the room of 35 people raised his hand, Sperry, a Perot supporter, said, "It is a terrible form of literature."

Sperry said that in (the proposal), he (Clinton) mentions end results, but doesn't fill the gaps.

Corey Daniel, a industrial technology senior and a Cal Poly representative for Perot volunteers added to the lively debate when he said that "Perot is the only person people can trust. Both the Democratic and Republican candidates have covered up things all the way through."

James Green, an engineering student, responded to Daniel's remarks.

"Bush seems to think if you say things over and over again, people will eventually believe you," Green said. "All along the Bush/Reagan slogan has been 'image before reality'."

Daniel, however, stood by the man who has so far run last in the polls.

"We have had a giant outpouring for Perot support on campus," he said. "Why are there no volunteers for Clinton and Bush? Why is there no table out in the U.U. for Clinton and Bush."

"When people learn the facts, they will realize Perot is right," Daniel said.

City Counselman Bill Roallman, a self-proclaimed Clinton supporter, was present during the heated discussion which followed the debate.

"Perot is a phenomena, but not a serious candidate," Roallman said. "He is a billionaire, so I can't relate to him."

Roallman said he believes that "Perot would be an aloof president", one who would "not (be) in touch" with his constituency.

"Bush is at the end of his career and doesn't show the energy that Clinton does," Roallman said.

Rob Stiles, a business major, said the debates will play a factor in his decision.

"I sided with Clinton in the past, but since the debates, I'm leaning towards Bush," Stiles said.

Other Cal Poly students watched the debate from downtown bars.

At Tortilla Flats Darren Shafter, a Cal Poly graduate and business owner, said, "I've never seen so much interest in an election. I think I'm going to vote for Perot. I just decided today. I don't trust Clinton. I think he's dishonest."

James Lewis, who was also at Tortilla Flats, said, "(Perot) won't shut up. He talks and takes all the time away from Bush. He's defending Clinton, but he's there to sandbag Bush."

"Clinton's a walking debate. He's such a smooth liar. I like Clinton, but he's dangerous. Clinton is like a used car salesman — he'll do anything to sell a car. He's a seedy son of a bitch," Lewis said.

Chip Griffin, a city and regional planning student, watched the debate from McClintock's, where he works as a bartender.

"I've been thrown for a loop on who I'm going to vote for," Griffin said. "I think the people of San Luis Obispo should focus their attention on local politics."

Stacey Hahn, a Cal Poly business major and waitress at McClintock's, said, "I still can't figure out who I'm going to vote for. I think the debates have helped me rule out Clinton. Now I need to decide between the other two."
