Petersen, Romero caught in close council race

By Marla R. Van Schuyver and Carolyn Nielsen
Mustang Daily Staff

Correspondents Dave Romero and Carolyn Nielsen are keeping their fingers crossed for election tallies.

Council candidate Dave Romero is in a close run race for San Luis Obispo County. Early Wednesday morning tallies indicated Cal Poly professor Allen Settle and Petersen would be the next two to take seats on the council.

Settle is leading the race with a comfortable margin of 2.2 percent. Petersen, however, led Romero by only three-tenths of percentage point when all the precincts, excluding the absentee ballots, had been counted.

"I'm just holding out, waiting to hear the final numbers," Petersen said. "I'll be thrilled if they turn out in my favor. However, it is a long shot for my seat on the City Council.

The races were too close for election officials to have final election tallies. More than 950 absentee ballots from San Luis Obispo have not yet been counted, according to election officials. Those votes will decide the winners in the close run race for San Luis Obispo County. Early Wednesday morning tallies indicated Cal Poly professor Allen Settle and Petersen would be the next two to take seats on the council.

Although Settle agreed absentee ballots are traditionally cast by conservative voters, he thought the later votes came from a more diverse group, including many students. Settle added that the absentee votes "may increase Brent's margin of victory."

"Brent's support base is greater than just students," he said. "It comes from the Sierra Club, mobile home residents and others who see him as an individual young man with fresh ideas.

"We started out so well, but we just kept going down," he said. "This election (is an) unusual one. This is the first time students have turned in numbers in 20 years. I think everybody is amazed."

Petersen said he is disappointed that a large number of the student population was not allowed to vote for city elections.

Dorm residents cannot vote for city offices because they are living on state property, he said. "PolyCOPE knew when they decided to make an effort to put a student on the City Council that there are several thousand students unable to vote for council,

"It's too bad that it is stringently on where you live, instead of where you spend all of your time. Those students spend a lot of time in the city and definitely benefit or are hurt by those in office."

Absentee ballots should show final decision on Friday

The quiet room and barren walls at the Perot Headquarters in downtown San Luis Obispo Wednesday morning bore little resemblance to the festive gathering there Tuesday night.

In the aftermath of a tumultuous presidential campaign, two Perot volunteers took down the last of the signs and streamers that decorated the headquarters. Their spirits were down, but, they said, it's not over.

"Right now we're just waiting to hear from headquarters to see what to do next," said Joan Jenkins of Pismo Beach. "We plan to stay together and continue with United We Stand."

"United We Stand" was the theme of the Perot campaign. Jenkins said it was Perot supporters who started the "United We Stand" philosophy. Now that Perot has lost his presidential bid, she said, his supporters will carry on his ideas.

"Most likely, (United We Stand) will turn into a political party of its own," said San Luis Obispo volunteer Bob Heitzman.

"It looks like they had a good party,"

The change would not add any units to GE or R&S requirements. Bailey said if approved, 1994 entering freshmen would be the first affected, she added.

This initiative was the result of the efforts of several student, faculty and staff coalitions. It has also been endorsed by many campus academic committees, according to an Academic Senate Ethnic Studies Committee report. Several senate members stated that the "culture" of Cal Poly should reflect the diversity of California.

According to a separate report by Cal Poly's Educational Equity Commission, "All Cal Poly students should have an awareness and understanding of cultural, racial and gender issues and problems confronting society." ASI representative Nicole Brown said many students already take courses which would fill this requirement and want to take these classes anyway.

But senate member Carl MacCarley said students have too many requirements to fulfill and felt this would be an additional burden.

There are 50 proposed courses which would meet the requirement and there are many existing classes which "might fit the criteria for approval," according to the Ethnic Studies Committee report.

The senate voted to create a religious studies catalog prefix (RELS) and expand three philosophy courses into five religious-studies classes.

PHIL 305 (Judaic-Christian religions) will be split into RELS 306 (Judaism) and RELS 306 (Christian origins)."
Troubled Serbia rejects reform commission to ensure objective campaign coverage. Serbia rejected pleas to accept thousands of people fleeing fighting would dilute its strength. The opposition held the large number of constituencies which they perceive as favoring the Socialists.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said it would reduce the number of constituencies from 20 to nine. The opposition held the large number of constituencies which they perceive as favoring the Socialists.

But Dreier said Congress isn't likely to pass a term limit amendment and that the seniority system will probably survive. He said he hoped the U.S. Supreme Court would find the measure unconstitutional. "It stands to reason the largest delegation in the nation should not have its hands tied," he said.

Only one of 36 members of the House from California who sought re-election lost Tuesday. In that North Coast race, Democrat Dan Hamburg edged freshman Republican Frank Ruggs, R-Windermere. Another incumbent, Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Prevento, clung to an 448-vote lead over Republican businessman Talmadge Cloud with large numbers of absentee ballots still uncounted. Election officials said it could be several days before that race and two other extremely close congressional contests are decided.

California voters had to fill a record 52 House seats, more than any ever held by a single state. California was awarded seven new seats due to its rapid population growth in the 1980s. Democrat won 29 seats and were leading in the Lehman district and in a Riverside area race that also was too close to call. Republicans won 20 seats and had a razor-thin lead in a 21st district.

Democratic held 26 and Republicans 19 seats in the state's old delegation. Republican had hoped to win a majority of the delegation for the first time since 1956. But Democrats ran strong, despite a court-approved redistricting plan that threatened to cost them several seats.

Dreier said President Bush's pro-showing in California and a "sort of (negative) sentiment toward the (party's) spending ... created a drug" on Republican House candidates.

Fazio said issues like abortion rights helped Democrats in some normally Republican-leaning areas.

Women won seven House seats, a record for California, and had a shot at an eighth.

In that contest, Republican Richard Pombo, a Tracy city councilman, held a 905-vote lead over Democrat Patricia Gannemodi in a Sacramento-Stockton area district. Gannemodi is the wife of state Insurance Commissioner John Gannemodi.

California currently has three congresswomen. Two of them — Democrat Maxine Waters of Los Angeles and Nancy Pelosi of San Francisco — had easily defeated their opponents. The third, Democrat Barbara Boxer of Marin County, was elected to the U.S. Senate.

Petala City Councilwoman Lynn Wickersley, San Mateo County Supervisor Anna Zawah, Assemblywoman Lucille Roybal-Allard, D-Los Angeles, former Carter administration official Jane Harman and former Jerry Brown aide Lynn Schenk — all Democrats — also won House seats.

Harman and Schenk both defeated other women. Harman beat Los Angeles City Councilwoman Jean Mikes Flores in a Los Angeles area race. Schenk tapped nurse Judy Jarvis in San Diego.

Democrats, now with three seats in the delegation, will have four starting next year if a measure sponsored by Assemblyman Xavier Becerra, D-Los Angeles, will join Reps. Matthew Martinez, D-Montebello, and Estaban Torres, D-West Covina.

"It stands to reason the largest delegation in the nation should not have its hands tied." — Rep. David Dreier, R-Covina.

Repeal to bring taste of victory

"Schwing" elected, thanks Wayne

"I would like to think I would have won without Wayne and Garth, but it didn't hurt," Schenk said after retaining his seat in Tuesday's election.

At first, the non-presidential opponents when his signs — which read "Schwing" with a check mark in a box — kept disappearing.

But "Wayne's World," in which Garth and Wayne yell "schwing" whenever they spot women they find attractive.

Schwing liked the film and even welcomed the media attention the thefts brought. Only 20 of about 300 "Schwing" signs are left, he said, and three of them are in his front yard.

Schwing said his campaign buttons have also become a hot collector's item. And in a town parade last Sunday, Schwing said he had Wayne and Garth look alike ride in his convertible.

As Cal Poly industrial technology senior Brian Schwartz can attest, quitting chew is one of the hardest habits to break — and one of the deadliest to keep.

After an expensive and painful gum surgery, 22-year-old Brian Schwartz decided to do something about his can-a-day addiction. He is now a facilitator for Be Through With Chew, a county-wide cessation and education program.

Schwartz, who hasn’t chewed in almost a year, decided to become a facilitator for Snuff Out because "it keeps me motivated to stay away from the stuff." He added that, even with incentives to quit — including pressure from his parents, girlfriend and dentist — it was one of the most difficult things he’s ever had to do.

"If you can just make it to the first meeting, you’re on your way," he said. "Half the battle is won right there. You’re gonna make it if you can do that."

The program is modeled after the American Cancer Society’s cigarette cessation format," said Liz Cofer, project coordinator for Snuff Out. The program began in the fall of 1990, when several students approached Cofer about quitting. It is funded by moneys passed in 1988.

According to the American Cancer Society, chewing and dipping tobacco is a "chemical time bomb." It causes cancer of the mouth, lip, tongue and cheek, and throat. Other consequences are increased blood pressure and heart rate, discoloration of the teeth, bad breath, gum recession and tooth decay.

Schwartz said he started chewing his junior year of high school "because all my buddies still use it." After my surgery, my brothers thought about ways to chew. "Even when they took a big chunk of the roof of my mouth to replace the gums I had lost, I still thought about ways to chew. After my surgery, my brothers still use it."

Schwartz said that, thanks to Snuff Out, this is the longest he’s gone without taking a dip. "If you can just make it to the first meeting, you’re on your way," he said. "Half the battle is won right there. You’re gonna make it if you can do that."

Well, what can you say about the election that hasn't already been said?

It's OVER, that's what. It's over, it's over, it's over, the election that hasn't already made our lives hectic, frenzied, spent the last couple of months ("DEADLINE! GRIDLOCK!"). It hasn't been pretty. It's over, it's over, it's over.

Campaign season. I'll take with other.

It's over, it's over, it's over, way through the country like no other.

Some of them downright bizarre.

Others placed ads declaring support for "Peterson" and "Diane".

The nightmare, he said.

...as we travel away from this... We here at the paper are especially glad, since Election '92 made our lives brief, frenzied and downright miserable. I've spent the last two months running around beating my hair out, eating mostly junk food, cutting classes and bailing into the newspaper coherently like Jim Stockdale taming classes and babbling incoherently like Jim Stockdale ("SIR..."). It hasn't been pretty.

All I can tell you now: it's over, it's over, it's over.

New Miller flick: a skier's action fantasy comes true

By Todd Hogan

Fade in: A lone helicopter scene slowly lifts above a rugged, snow-drenched mountain ridge. The camera pans gently left, then right. Snow covers every peak and every slope in the vast mountain scene.

Narrator: "Imagine for a moment that you have just won the state lottery and the first $10,000 you spend is to rent this helicopter for one day of powder skiing..."

The helicopter lands easily atop a majestic, snow-covered peak. A handful of Gore Tex clad skiers exit.

Narrator: "...Now you have 100,000 square miles of untracked powder snow available just for you and your three friends..."

The eager group bosoms over the peak's edge and begins carving its turns down the slope of untracked powder.

Narrator: "...I'm Warren Miller and most of the skiers I know can't afford their own private helicopter..." so Miller, like he's done for the last half-century, brings the helicopter to mountain skiers.

Miller, the premier ski film maker infamous for radical, extreme skiing footage and exotic, worldwide locations, specializes in adventure fantasy. His annual movies showcase the best skiers on the most demanding terrain — all in locales average skiers would give anything to ski.

Just released "Steeper & Deeper," Miller's 43rd feature film, is no exception.

"We've brought together more than any skier's share of chills, thrills, bumps and/dumps to bring 'Steeper & Deeper' to the screen," Miller said in a press release. "Everything we do — everywhere we go — is 'Steeper & Deeper' than anything we've filmed before. That says a lot."

It sure does. Miller's first film, "Deep and Light," was filmed for $600. Today, Miller's annual skiing extravaganzas go over the $1 million mark. And it shows.

"Steeper & Deeper" was filmed at 27 separate locations spanning the globe. Skiing and snowboarding action was captured at winter standards like British Columbia, Colorado, Idaho and Utah.

More exotic locations and action includes first-time chute skiing at Oshing, Turkey; dawdling manzanita trees on Mt. Buller, Australia; and incredible extreme skiing on near-vertical walls at Saas Fee, Switzerland.

In between the breathtaking mountain scenery and flurry of snowboarding champion Ross Rebagliati takes off for a solo run.

Snowboarding champion Ross Rebagliati takes off for a solo run. Miller also takes a break completely from the snow and mountains, inserting a piece showing the beaches of Hawaii.

The "Chairlift Comedy," for example, shows beginning skiers trying (but mostly failing) to exit a chairlift gracefully. In another segment, skiers "slide for their lives" down The Devil's Dive, a steep, mogul-covered run.

"I've been lucky," Miller narrates. "I've had freedom on skis most of my life and now I enjoy the freedom all summer windsurfing at Hookipa, Maui."

Featured wave jumping and swell surfing is Ian Boyd, "who is as good at what he does as some of the best athletes in the NFL or the NBA," Miller says. "Except the court that Ian plays on is never the same size or shape two days in a row."

But the real highlights of "Steeper & Deeper" are unquestionably the chutes. See SKI, page 8

L.A. bands escape from the smog to play the Cantina

By Julia Greenberg

Staff Writer

Los Angeles is invading San Luis Obispo Friday night when three L.A. bands bring their unique sound to the Cantina. Bean, along with Possum Dixon and Loser, are making their escape with a new drummer and some "new, crunchy, power pop tunes."

Bean, formerly Hill of Beans, is already a familiar name with Cal Poly students. They played KCPR's Earth Day benefit, as well as their fund raiser at the end of the last school year. Students may remember hits such as "Batsin, Land Me A Dollar" and "The Magic Toe."

"We just started coming up here a lot and playing our stuff locally whenever we could," said Steve Moramarco, Bean's founder.

"We worked a lot with KCPR last year when we were an acoustic duo," he added. "Now we're hoping our new stuff will catch on."

Bean is now comprised of four musicians: Gwynne Kahn on banjo; Greg Mura, a very "versatile" guitarist; Geoff Kantosky on drums and Steve on guitar and vocals.

The band will soon be releasing a split single on Flipside records and will be featured on "A Hot, Wild Drive In The City," a compilation of all car-related songs, also on Flipside.

Acompanying Bean on the compilation and also at T.A.'s is Possum Dixon.

Loser play at T.A.'s Cantina on Friday night with Possum Dixon and Loser. They have also released a 7-inch box set that has generated such bits as "Watch That Girl Destroy Mo" and "Excutive Slacks."

Possum Dixon describes Loser, the third band on the tour, as "ear-snarping, riff-laden grunge—a group of guys that got drunk and fell off the pop bandwagon."

The guitar player, known as "Beck," is also a solo acoustic performer who accompanied Bean on their two previous trips to SLO.

"We think of our music as 'screamer folk,'" Beck said. "It's like producing grunge-folk and sandwiching it together with extreme heavy metal."

Loser is known in the L.A. music scene and has just returned from successful stints in New York City.

Beck's song "MTV Makes Me Want to Smoke Crack" will be released on the other side of the Bean single.

Bean, Possum Dixon and Loser play at T.A.'s Cantina at 8:30 p.m. The show is free for all students with ID.

Limbaugh's new book pokes fun at the liberal masses

Who has feminists at every opportunity, makes off-color con­

The name of feminists everywhere, Howard Stern?

But in this case, it's Rush H. Limbaugh, III, latest (and posright wing.

Currently enjoying huge suc­

The patriotic fervor of War may be only a memory now,

Dismayed by the popular

Standing ankle- to knee-high of arrows that grooves as it is pushed along the floor.

"Literally made them toy­ like, comic, ferocious and somewhat ridiculous," Feldman said,

"but the many of the toys are equipped with wheels. The wheel is a metaphor: 'is sculpture

as usual; this art seems to be pissed off.'"

"It's a different type of instal­ tion," said Cal Poly art & design professor Crissa Hewitt.

"Through our cultural preconceptions, we see sculpture as being usually on a pedestal."

The uniqueness of the display allows the viewer to look down with an Olympian detachment,

Feldman said. While at the same time, one can get down on the floor with childlike closeness.

The scale is intended to give perspective and to raise questions about the country's perpetual armament itch. "I want people to see the seduction of aggression, as well as its ridiculousness," Feldman said.

Director Suzanne

Field Immlal said people are encouraged to move the sculpture and interact with them. "People can examine why they're so oceans with the aggressive toy,"

Immlal said.

A professor of sculpture at California College of Arts and Crafts in Oakland, Feldman has been exhibiting sculpture since 1964.

Since then, the Earth has seen a number of wars—in the jungles of Vietnam and the deserts of the Middle East; and now, in Yugoslavia.

"I can recognize how people got so excited by the notion of win­ ing," Feldman said. "That aggressive impulsiveness is in all of us."

Feldman said "War Toys" is a result of her aggressions being rechanneled. "We need to find something else, other than war, to fight with that impulse," she said.

Technology is also the target of her satire. From the sophisticated 'smart-bombs' of the Gulf war, to the shelves of toy stores,

"War Toys" has been shown in Los Angeles and Lafayette, CA, and will remain at Cal Poly until December 4. It travels to Chicago in June.

"We need to evolve past war,"

Feldman said. "Whether we do or not is up for grabs."

State Assembly puts on new face for Dec.

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The California Assembly will have a new face when it reconvenes in December, with more women and Latinos than before. But the party of power will remain the same — solidly Democratic.

Twenty-eight of the Assembly's 80 members will be newcomers. Women increased their numbers by five for a total of 22. Hispanics will hold a record seven seats.

But a GOP effort to regain control of the lower house for the first time in more than two decades failed badly. Three Republican incumbents lost — Gerald Feland of San Pedro, Dean Andal of Stockton and Tricia Hunter of Palm Desert.

Dean Andal of Stockton and Gerald Felando of San Pedro, Republicans, announced their retirements Tuesday. Both had been elected to Congress, and Sen. Royce, R-Fullerton, who was re-elected, said he was frustrated by the growing power of special interest groups.

A third race between Republican Ted Weggeland and Latinos than before. But the new face when it reconvenes in December, with more women and Hispanics will hold a record three new vacancies in the upper house.

Women in the Senate increased their numbers by one for a total of six.

From page 1: voting to condense three overlapping engineering concentrations into one manufacturing engineering program.

The manufacturing concentration in industrial engineering, the manufacturing processes concentration in engineering technology and the welding technology concentration in engineering technology will be replaced by the new program.

No new courses will be required for students in these concentrations, according to the industrial engineering department's proposal.

From page 1: celebrating. But most of the Democratic volunteers had taken the morning off.

"It looks like they had a good party," one observer said as he walked past the headquarters on Santa Rosa Street.

"Obviously we're very happy about the election," said Robert Frost, treasurer of the San Luis Obispo County Democratic Committee. "But we've got a lot of work to do before the new year.

Frost said the biggest disappointment for his party was the congressional race in which Democrat Gloria Ochoa lost to Republican Michael Huffington.

"It was Mr. Huffington's million," Frost said. "And we're a very conservative district,"

No one could be reached for comment at the Republican headquarters on Marsh Street.

Frost said next on the agenda for his committee is to increase the number of Democrats in the county. "There's still a lot to do," he said.

Turnout

In the 1989 local election, 43 percent of San Luis Obispo voted while 28.5 percent of the county cast ballots. According to the county's general election summary report, over 18,000 people hit the voting booths in the city's 30 precincts.

Cal Poly political science professor Allen Settle, the unofficial winner of a council seat, said this was the largest student turnout in 20 years. He said the student push was a "definite factor."

Cal Poly English senior LeAnne Cobb, voting in local election for the first time, was impressed. "There was a long line of students (at the polls)," she said. "(But) people were excited about voting."

ASI President Kristin Burnett said she thought the Cal Poly vote played a significant role in the city election. The vote was "noted by candidates who knew us, (those) who didn't count us and (those) who forget that we existed," Burnett said. "It was very empowering."

The voting line in the U.U. for the residence halls was long all day, she said.

Only one other 10-year-old has ever performed so well on a keyboard.

The year 1992 marks a significant milestone for Sun Microsystems. Although some corporate computer names have fallen on hard times lately, we have plenty to celebrate.

Not only is Sun outperforming the biggest names in computing these days, but we're growing at a rate never before seen. Our growth is exponential. The size of our user base is in the hands of no more than 500,000 customers, making the most powerful distributed computing solution in history. Yet that's all behind us. We're more excited than ever by what's ahead. After all, the internet may have been a powerful idea, but it is what we accomplished afterward that turns the world on its ear.

This year Sun Microsystems' success, as evidenced by the recognition by other computing, and how you think about Sun.

The software at the heart of our Solaris* operating environment is in the hands of more than 500,000 customers, making the most popular distributed computing solution in history.

As a self-professed "Democratic junkie," Burnett said, "It was a high to see all these eligible voters exercising their rights."

PolySCOPE is a group formed to endorse a student candidate for San Luis City Council, helped register some of the 10,500 students eligible to vote in the Nov. 3 election, said Rex Smith, PolySCOPE's chairman.

Smith said he was impressed by the number of student voters.

"It was a nationwide phenomenon," he said. "It was a mood across campus."

Golf tourney, auction help Poly

Pro baseball players, golfers take to the links Saturday

A handful of professional baseball players are again coming to the financial rescue of Cal Poly's baseball program.

The Eighth Annual Health Net/Mike Krukow Celebrity Golf Classic will be held Saturday at the San Luis Bay Resort Golf Course in Avila Beach.

The tournament, named after former Cal Poly and Major League standout Mike Krukow, starts at 8:30 a.m. and the public is welcome to come and watch the celebrities and participants play.

A field of 150 golfers includes 26 current or former pro baseball players and 10 golf pros.

The public is also invited to attend an auction Friday night to bid on autographed baseball memorabilia and other items.

Cal Poly's baseball program is expected to receive $25,000 from the Classic, according to co-ordinator Jason Mundahl.

Health Net's sponsorship has enabled the Classic to benefit not only the Cal Poly baseball team, but also the ALS (Lou Gehrig's Disease) and Neuromuscular Research Foundations.

A number of autographed jerseys will be auctioned off, including those from Deion Sanders, Will Clark, Cecil Fielder, Nolan Ryan, Mark McGwire, Robin Ventura, Frank Thomas and Kirby Puckett.

Also on the auction block are autographed team plaques of the Los Angeles Dodgers, Atlanta Braves, Chicago White Sox and San Francisco Giants.

Other items available include a Copeland's Sports package pack, two portable cellular phones and bats autographed by Ozzie Smith, Tony Gwynn, Daryl Strawberry and Rod Carew.

The Classic is a non-profit golf tournament that has grown in popularity due in part to the large celebrity turnout.

This year's participants include Bob Brenly (Giants), Casey Candaele (Astros), Bryn Smith (Cardinals) and Ventura (White Sox).

Krukow played for Cal Poly during the 1976 and 1977 seasons as a catcher for the Chicago Cubs, Philadelphia Phillies and San Francisco Giants.

He retired in 1990 with a lifetime record of 124-117, and currently resides with his family in San Luis Obispo.

The celebrity dinner/auction will be held Friday at 7 p.m. under the tents at the San Luis Obispo Resort.

Mike Nelson was the lone member of Cal Poly's men's soccer team selected first-team all California Collegiate Athletic Association.

Nelson, a junior, was honored as a midfielder, though he actually plays defender.

Cal Poly also had only one player named, junior midfielder Chris Corona.

Cal Poly was named the West Athletic Conference's leading scorers — Mike Black, Todd Henry and Chris Fisher — all received honorable mention accolades, along with defender Dan Fish.

Owners prepare to decide Giants’ fate

CHICAGO (AP) — Giants owner Bob Lorrie took his campaign to St. Petersburg, Fla., to a meeting with representatives of 14 major league clubs.

I have no comment. The meeting was fine, Lorrie said Tuesday before boarding a plane back to San Francisco.

"We had a good meeting. I can't comment any further than that. Everything should be decided next Tuesday in Arizona."

Owners are to vote next Tuesday at Scottsdale, Ariz., on the fate of the Giants. Lorrie announced on Aug. 7 that he had agreed to a $315 million deal with a group of Florida investors led by Vincent J. Naimoli. A San Francisco group led by Redway Inc. chairman Peter Magowan has countered with a $100 million offer.

Either deal requires approval from 10 of 13 National League owners (Lorrie won't vote) and eight of 14 American League owners.

Florida Marlins president Carl Berber said the five-hour meeting was a preliminary discussion on how small-market teams such as Pittsburgh, Milwaukee and Seattle can compete with the large-market clubs.

"Lorrie and San Francisco weren't really discussed," Berber said. "We had a good discussion on the big-market-versus-small-market stuff. We addressed that issue. It was more of a conceptual talk."

Lorrie, who is shrewed by giants general manager Al Rosen and is endorsed by Senator Bob Dole, has pushed for a sale to the Florida group.

Bay Area officials believe a consensus is beginning to form that will save the Giants remain in San Francisco. Berber and the Marlins would prefer to have the Florida market to themselves, but are under pressure from Florida politicians to support a move.

"Bob is not our enemy, or ours, or ours," Berber said. "I think there are not 100% of San Francisco (deal) we don't agree with. But this was not a Tampa Bay-St. Pete deal. We explicitly approached a group of people with similar views and staying power in San Francisco to see how we might address it.

"This was not a secret, closed-door meeting where we were plotting or anything."
