Morro Bay gunman kills six, turns gun on self

MORRO BAY, Calif. (AP) — A gunman apparently seeking revenge for being evicted from his home and banned from a film actor's house and being threatened by the actor's friends, authorities said Sunday.

Lyndon Drake III, 43, shot himself and seven others on his property. He was taken to a hospital and then released.

The official had evicted Drake from a home for being evicted from his home and banned from a film actor's house and being threatened by the actor's friends.

Drake's family had evicted him from the home and banned him from their property.

Young drinkers, law don't mix

By Carissa Weeden Staff Writer

Alcohol is a major factor in many crimes such as physical assault and theft, not to mention drunken driving.

The problem is especially tragic when alcohol is mixed with underaged drinkers. Young drinkers, at the least, may not have the much experience with alcohol as older drinkers do.

San Luis Police patrol officer Eric Lincoln worked as a DUI enforcement and traffic officer for four years. He said the main problem with minors is that "mostly those who are underage and drinking are doing so just for fun."

Drake described a run-in he had with an underage drinker who was out hot-rodding through San Luis Obispo.

"The guy was 18 years old and had just graduated (from high school). He had a previous DUI and was on probation," Lincoln explained that anyone convicted of DUI is put on probation for three years.

The man was driving a 1970 Mustang which Lincoln described as "beefed up." When Lincoln spotted the vehicle, he started following it.

According to Steve Seybold, police said Petersen's re-election was a "good idea" as he saw himself move from fifth to third. Petersen, clad in shorts and a Cal Poly sweatshirt, began nervously pacing the floors of the County Government Center.

Then, early Wednesday morning, a bulletin said Petersen had nudged out Romero by fewer than a hundred votes, establishing a tenacious lead.

"I can't believe it," was his response as he watched the proceedings unfold on computer monitors.

Local businesses helped Romero amass more than $18,000 in campaign contributions.

By 5 p.m. Friday, Romero had pushed past Petersen to capture the seat. More than 27,000 ballots had been cast in the city.

Some way the record student turnout, which didn't include the unincorporated campus dorm residents, was no accident.

San Luis Obispo mayor-elect Peg Petersen said Petersen's re-election was a "good idea" as she saw herself move from fifth to third. Petersen, clad in shorts and a Cal Poly sweatshirt, began nervously pacing the floors of the County Government Center.

"I don't think I ran a very good campaign on campus," Romero said. "I had some advertising, but I wasn't able to properly contact the students until the last minute. I didn't know how to do that until very late. By then, I missed out."
President Bush is about to join the nation's most elite group of pensioners — and the cost to taxpayers.

With the inauguration of Bill Clinton as his successor Jan. 20, Bush will bring to five the number of former presidents — joining Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan in comfortable, taxpayer-provided retirement.

The cost, including secret Service protection, totals $17.2 million this year for the first four. Congress will have to provide more money next year to cover Bush's retirement.

"The budget did not contemplate him becoming a former president," said Bill Early, budget director for the General Services Administration.

Even without the security, the taxpayers' bill for a generous, six-figure pension, office space, staff and travel expenses approaches half a million dollars for each of the former presidents — and more in the case of Reagan: $770,900 this fiscal year.

Big donors bankroll election to record levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big money was bigger than ever in the 1992 election.

An estimated $100 million poured into the presidential election from corporations and fatcat donors — exactly the kind of donations that post-Watergate reforms sought to eliminate by closing campaign-finance loopholes.

Washington mood of the election, as all but a few incumbents survived the anti-Washington mood of the electorate.

As usual, their watchtowers got plenty of help from political action committees.

"More than in any other election, in 1992 you saw the failure of existing campaign-finance laws and rules," lamented Ellen Miller, executive director of the watchdog Center for Responsive Politics.

"I think we're worse off today than before Watergate, because there is more big money than ever," she said.

Finance laws don't stop PACs from buying local races

One man who observed the abuses of that era, former Senate Watergate committee chief counsel Samuel Dash, agreed. "I think once again we're in a situation unfortunately where money is buying power," he said.

But Dash said Bill Clinton's incoming administration is poised to make that change.

He noted the Democrat has already said he would have signed the sweeping campaign finance reform bill passed by Congress earlier this year but vetoed by President Bush.

That bill would have eliminated the so-called soft money loophole that unions and corporations, forbidden from donating directly to candidates, have used to plow large sums of money, often upwards of $100,000, to the political parties.

"It will be difficult for Clinton to back away from that," Dash said.

Christine Varney, general counsel to Clinton's campaign, predicted campaign finance reform would be a concern "early on. He's committed to real change," she said.

Clinton's own campaign benefited much from the Democratic Party's exploitation of soft money from rich donors who'll now have an interest in the policies his administration crafts.

The same types of fat-cat donations to presidential candidates during the Watergate era led Congress to change the rules.

They limited individual contributions to $1,000 per candidate per election, refined the prohibition against corporate donations, and ended presidential candidacies' reliance on private money by fully financing their campaigns and conventions with tax dollars.

But the "soft-money" loophole in those rules allowed the huge private contributions to continue, as general-purpose gifts to the political parties.

Soft money first became an issue four years ago, but an Associated Press review earlier this year revealed the practice quietly resumed in 1980, less than five years after the post-Watergate reforms.

And while more than $170 million in tax money was given to the presidential campaigns, the two major parties collected more than $70 million in soft money to pay for get-out-the-vote drives and other activities.

Republicans tapped corporate giants like RJR Nabisco, Joseph Siegman & Sons, Philip Morris, and Arco. Agricultural giant Archer-Daniels-Midland and its chairman Dwaine Andreas led the list with more than $1 million to the GOP.

Democrats got their own $100,000-plus donations from Hollywood giants like MCA and Sony, labor unions like United Steelworkers of America, and philanthropists like Swannee Hunt and Alda Rockefeller Menger.

Tellingly, more than a half dozen of the GOP's most faithful big-time donors suddenly defected with large donations to Democrats in early October when Clinton's victory appeared likely.

A series of AP reviews over the course of the campaign also revealed that corporate donors had other avenues to inject money into the election beyond the soft-money route, including:

—Paying about $11 million of the expenses for the two nominating conventions and an undetermined amount more to host post-receptions where corporate bigwigs and government leaders rubbed elbows.

—Donating to state parties which in turn spent $35 million trying to influence the presidential election.

—Picking up the $2 million-plus tab for the four debates, for which they got a tax break.
As you can see, I have chosen to write this commentary under the pseudonym of Publius. I have done this for two reasons. First of all, I am protecting my identity from any militant liberal who reads this paper (but that is another story) and thereby from any personal revenge on me that they might take. Second, I am protecting myself here at Cal Poly.

And second and more importantly, it is the pseudonym used by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay (for those of you with a public school education, these are famous people in American history) 200 years ago when they wrote the "Federalist Papers" to defend the newly written Constitution. Unfortunately, this was written before the Bill of Rights had been introduced, and therefore contains commentary on these important subjects.

One of these fundamental rights has been stripped from us here at Cal Poly, and that is, it is quite permissible to address.

Simply stated, guns are not allowed on campus. More specifically, I quote: "Legal weapons are prohibited on campus. No student may possess or carry firearms, Bill guns, slingshots, pellet guns, ammunition, fireworks, bows and arrows, cross bows, air tanks (as in scuba gear), harpoons or explosives in or around the residence halls. Knives with blades longer than three-and-a-half inches are prohibited on campus."

This is found in the residence hall handbook and is focused primarily at those of us who are forced, by circumstances beyond our control, to live in the dorms. Those of us who live off campus are at least allowed to have a gun in your home, but those of us who are stuck on campus are denied this fundamental, constitutional right.

The Second Amendment to the Constitution reads, "A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed."

Of course, from the amendment, this is not a pro-gun argument for gun control. The liberals say we don't need a militia anymore. But, as the well informed conservative that I am, beg to differ. Any able-bodied male above the age of 18 is a part of the state militia that can be called forward at any time. This is stated in the California constitution under article five, section seven. It states, "The Governor is commander-in-chief of a militia that shall be provided by statute. The Governor may call it forth to execute the law."

I don't know about you, but if Pete Wilson had to put out the fire in his house, I doubt he'd be able to respond because Cal Poly is violating my Constitutional right.

When I say that it is Cal Poly violating my right to bear arms, that is exactly what I mean. It is not the great state of California or the slimy CSU system, it is Cal Poly. I recently transferred to this school from Humboldt State University (yes, it is part of the CSU system). At Humboldt, we were allowed to have our guns in the dorms. Granted, we were forced to keep our guns in a gun locker provided by the school, but at least we had them. Cal Poly is supposed to be one of the most conservative campuses, whereas Humboldt is one of the most liberal. Why can't Cal Poly follow Humboldt's "liberal" example and at least allow us gun lockers?

Another popular argument from the left is that we should only be able to own guns if we aren't going to kill people. Well, common sense tells us that things do happen for which we need to have a gun other than killing people. Cal Poly can't be used for self defense, although if it is locked up in a gun cabinet, it becomes next to useless for this purpose. A gun could be used to go hunting. There is nothing like going out and bringing home meat you have killed (all you animal "rights" liberals are probably furious at me now, too). And finally, there is target practice. If I want to go square off of a few rounds down at shooting range just past Cuesta College, I should be able to do so.

Another great argument from the liberals is that the proliferation of guns just increases crime. Well, with all the guns up at Humboldt, there was not a single crime involving a gun for the entire two years I was there. Crime is prevented when small-shop owners can deter a criminal by having the right to have a gun under their control. And finally, if we outlawed guns, only the outlaw owners would have guns. We would be at their mercy, and crime would probably increase.

Now, I would like to make one final statement. The right to bear arms is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. Cal Poly has denied me this fundamental right to protect myself. So I will reconsider. Think about the gun huckster idea, call Humboldt and see how well it works. But whatever you do, STOP VIOLATING MY RIGHTS.

Rec Center: More 'eyesore' than edifice

By Bryan Bailey

Some of you might think, with the size and content of this commentary, that I am taking a weekend off from Kafka's "The Trial." Well, the thing is, this subject of minor willowy is more visually than literal. Specifically, the visual impact of the eyesore which is growing in our midst under the auspices of the new Recreation Center.

What's with this building anyway? You'd think with all the money we as students are putting into the project, it might at least look like a wall-sized mural of Nagel or something in an Eichler print.

Yet the only people I can see this monstrously appealing to are institutional bobbies.

Seriously, the gym itself resembles a huge grilled cheese in the middle of what is used to be a rather pleasant view of the San Luis Obispo hillside.

I was in the Health Center the other day and was asked by a staff worker there if I knew whether or not they were going to paint over the "primer" on the side facing the Health Center (it seems some people have a subtly upset or even nauseous when looking out toward the construction portion of this place).

The point of this little diatribe is not to bag on the post-holocaust scene which is the new Rec Center. The point is that we are paying for something which we would normally return for a full refund.

It's time to start thinking of buildings on this campus as housing people instead of serving as some construction company's Lego land structure.

Bryan Bailey is Opinion Editor of Mustang Daily and would like to remind readers that if he receives more letters he won't have to print these niggling little pieces.

A ten year old attends Cal Poly SLO.

Only one other 10-year-old has ever performed so well on a keyboard.

This year, Sun Microsystems' Sun Microsystems' Sun. And though some computer companies have fallen on hard times lately, we have plenty to celebrate.

Not only is Sun outperforming the biggest names in computing these days, but we've grown about five times as fast as the industry as a whole.

Of course, we'd better have high tech magic that enjoys a few years of glory comes true. But growth that outstrips the industry giants for ten years running—that's unheard of.

Consequently, Sun is now counted among those giants. We're the world's largest maker of UNIX computers, and the only major vendor that's 100 percent dedicated to open systems.

Our SPARC chip technology is the only platform that powers compatible products ranging from notebook computers to supercomputers.

And the software at the heart of our Solaris® operating environment is the hands of more than 5,000 users, making it the most popular distributed computing solution in history.

But that's all behind us. We're more excited by what's ahead. After all, Mozart may have been a prodigy. It's ten. But it's what he accomplished afterward that turned the world on its ear.
There are so many fake I.D.'s out there now, that the new system of credit card licensing has been in place for a few years, the problem will be solved.

For those caught with a phony license, a fine of up to $200 may be levied, Lincoln said. This violation is a misdemeanor crime not an infraction, meaning the violation will become part of the individual's police record.

The denomination of a fake I.D. does not stop with fines for the user. Seybold said bars and other establishments have a list, and if they are found, the establishment will lose its liquor license.

Seybold insisted, "If you're at a party and you're selling alcohol (to minors), the same fines apply to you."

The ultimate price for drinking isn't paid in dollars; it's paid in lives. A 23-year-old Cal Poly student nearly lost his life last December at a fraternity party when his blood alcohol level reached 0.30.

Officer Lincoln said he remembers two or three minors who had "drunken themselves into eternal sleep." In particular, he mentioned a 19-year-old Boulevardian man who recently drank himself to death.

In Lincoln's words, this "is the worst case scenario" for underage drinking.

Cal Poly comes back for 17-14 home victory

By John Cristofano
Staff Writer

Having already suffered two heartbreaking losses in the waning moments of games this season, the Cal Poly football team was faced with an all too familiar situation Saturday night at Mustang Stadium against Western Football Conference opponent Southern Utah.

The Mustangs (1-2 in conference and 4-4 overall), playing their final home game of the season, found their backs to the wall once more as the Thunderbirds had the ball on their own 34-yard line with just over two minutes left in regulation and the score tied, 14-14.

This time, though, Cal Poly responded to the pressure and sent the crowd of 4,067 home happy.

"We were not the same team we were in two-a-day (practices this past summer)," Setencich said. "But on that last drive, I didn't think we'd win any game." Thomas said he was confident he was having a good game.

"I knew I had the kick in me," he said. "I just had to concentrate and focus on the ball. I think it made it once if I left my foot," Thomas said. "It's about a (close game) went our way." But things didn't look like they would go Cal Poly's way early in the contest. With 13:13 left in the second quarter, Thunderbird fullback Benji Hoskins scored from one yard out to break the score tie. After kicker Matt Gordon's extra point was good, Southern Utah led 14-0.

The Mustangs showed they weren't about to fall over and play dead, though, as they scored on their next possession when running back Brian Pitz dove in on fourth and goal from the Thunderbird one yard line. Thomas extra point closed the gap to 14-7.

Pitz scored another two plays later, 12-yard drive during which the line guards, blockers Lael Perlstrom and outsideline hitters Eileen Bermundo and Jennifer Jeffrey.

Bermundo led the team in kills, 13, and scored 15 points against Utah. Furman and setter Carrie Bartkoski contributed to the big win with stellar play. Bermundo put down her 3000th kill of the season against Nevada-Reno Saturday.

Androvc and Shannon Mattesoff, middle blocker Natalie Johnson and setter Carrie Bartkoski contributed to the big win with stellar play.

Perstom put down her 3000th kill of the season against Nevada-Reno Saturday.

Androvc led the team with 14 kills, Mattesoff led with 13 digs and Stillman collected 4 blocks, while Perlstrom added 2 blocks and Stillman added 2 blocks.
