Funding of safety program hits snag
ASI reluctant to okay deficit budget

Conflict between safety and ethnic clubs erupted into a heated discussion over ASI spending policy at Wednesday night’s Board of Directors meeting.

Mike Venugis, coordinator of the Safety Awareness Club (SAC), spoke at the beginning of the meeting. He protested the ASI Finance Committee’s decision not to take action on his club’s request for approximately $5,000 in special funding.

The safety club was asked for the first time this year what a portion of the current budget year ends on June 30.

The expenditure, if made immediately, would force ASI to deficit spend for the fiscal year. Many long-standing campus organizations have expressed dissatisfaction at the idea of a new club getting funding they feel more entitled to, according to College of Engineering representative Phil Eugenio.

“Groups are waiting in line for this money, and along comes the Safety Awareness Club and just asks for it,” Eugenio said.

“Groups are waiting in line for this money, and along comes the SAC and just asks for it.”

Phil Eugenio, ASI Finance Committee

Much of the emotion expressed at the Board of Directors meeting carried over from an earlier meeting of the Finance Committee.

Venugis said Thursday that prior to Tuesday’s committee meeting he had not expected any snags to hold up his plans for ASI funding.

But when Eugenio brought up the concerns of some ethnic clubs, whose sentiments are apparently shared by many under-funded groups, the committee deadlocked and decided to table the issue until next fall.

Eugenio insisted that the ethnic clubs were not the only ones who would feel slighted. “It’s not just between the (safety and ethnic) groups,” he said. “The ethnic clubs are one of many groups that have been waiting.”

“I sensed... that the directors were very sincere about trying to get funding to his club.”

Kristin Burnett, ASI President

Eugenio said that Tuesday night, after the Finance Committee meeting, Venugis confronted him at home. He said Venugis was angry at the results of the meeting and at Eugenio’s comments. Eugenio said Venugis and SAC co-founder Mike Cutchfield walked through his front door and sat down on the couch.

“I said, ‘Get out of my house,’ and he said, ‘No.’” Eugenio said. “And I said, ‘No don’t come into my house yelling and screaming and disrespecting my house like that.’”

“When I finally had 911 on the phone, he got up and left.”

Eugenio called it “ironic” that the president of the Safety Awareness Club would do something like this.

Venugis said he did nothing disrespectful or illegal Tuesday evening. He said Eugenio’s roommate invited him in while Eugenio was in the shower.

He said Eugenio did pick up a phone, but he didn’t know who Eugenio was calling. At that point, he said, a roommate

Campus early Monday morning was brutalized and sexually assaulted by three drunken men in a dorm parking lot, Cal Poly State University, San Luis Obispo

The three men — described as being of college age — are being sought by Public Safety for the 3 a.m. attack in which the victim was sodomized with a foreign object.

The victim’s gender was withheld, by request, Kennedy said.

According to Kennedy, the victim was returning to campus when the three men approached, grabbed and sodomized the student on the hood of a car.

The attack, which occurred in the upper level of the R-1 parking lot behind the dorms, lasted about two minutes.

The suspect then reportedly fled the area by running down Klamath Road toward Fremont Hall.

The victim suffered minor internal injuries and sought medical attention at Sierra Vista Regional Medical Center Tuesday.

The assault was reported to Public Safety by the hospital, which is required by law to report incidents of sexual assault, Kennedy said.

The three men are described by Public Safety as white adults of college age, 6 feet 8 inches to 6 feet tall, and all having medium builds.

Anyone with information about the attack is urged to contact Public Safety.

Thurgood Marshall papers to stay open despite uproar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans will continue to have access to Justice Thurgood Marshall's papers to stay open despite uproar Tuesday sent a letter to Billington, accusing him of "bad judgment" in granting public access so soon after the late justice's death.

But Billington says he was merely carrying out Marshall's wishes. He refused to limit public access to the papers Wednesday after meeting with Rehnquist, members of Marshall's family and William T. Coleman Jr., the family's lawyer.

He expressed hope that the dispute involving government contracts

Brittan expressed hope that the dispute involving government contracts would not "poison the atmosphere" between Europe and the United States as the two sides try to develop a common negotiating strategy to end a stalemate that has stalled a seven-year effort to rewrite the rules governing world trade.

The prohibition on European companies bidding on about $20 million in annual government contracts represented a reduction from a $45 million total of contracts the administration had first targeted in February.

The administration said it would bar European companies from bidding for certain federal contracts starting on Friday, the day the official notice was to be published in the Federal Register.

Officials estimated that the sanctions would cover approximately $20 million in annual contracts, a relatively minor amount in terms of two-way trade between the United States and its largest trading partner.

However, the sanctions prompted an immediate angry response from the Europeans, who threatened to retaliate.

"We cannot serve as the court's watchdog," librarian James K. Billington said Wednesday in a seven-page statement after being criticized by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Marshall's family and others.

Marshall retired from the Supreme Court in 1991 and died Jan. 24, leaving his papers, consisting of 173,700 items.

Included are justices' secret memos to each other and unpublished draft opinions written as they sought the votes of colleagues and honed the court's rulings. The papers include writing by justices still on the court about cases decided as recently as 1991.

The papers sweep aside the traditional secrecy surrounding the court's internal deliberations, and Rehnquist on Tuesday sent a letter to Billington, accusing him of "mishandling" the papers.

"The United States cannot expect us to rewrite the rules governing world trade.

"We will not drag our feet."

Cal Poly Television scores CNN satellite news feed

Fledging campus station will receive footage this fall

By Sharon Wiebe

Cal Poly students will soon be able to boast of having one of only three student-run television stations that receives CNN footage.

The Cal Poly journalism department was recently given the ability to receive a CNN "news feed" service via satellite. According to Tim Williams, director of public relations for Cal Poly Television (CPTV), the "news feed" will consist of unedited video footage and accompanying text from CNN reporters around the world. Cal Poly students can then work with the material in any way they choose, just as any CNN affiliate.

"We (CPTV workers) can edit the footage and write and present our own news stories about it," Williams said. He said CNN will transmit material 11 times daily beginning next fall. The transmissions will be picked up on a 15-foot satellite dish that was donated to CPTV last week, he said.

The acquisition came about largely through the efforts of CPTV adviser Clay Carter, who worked out the deal with the vice president of CNN at a conference last March. He said the only cost to the journalism department was a $1,000 decoder which enables Cal Poly to receive the transmissions.

Williams said the service costs approximately $350,000 per year for nonacademic CNN affiliations.

Carter said the service also allows students to do live interviews with CNN reporters by telephone for an additional cost.

Right now, CPTV is a purely volunteer effort, but Carter said there are plans to offer it as a class beginning in winter quarter of 1994.

"The focus (of the CPTV class) will be international news and current affairs," he said.

Anyone from any major can take the class, he said, but all students would have to do some news gathering.

Graduating journalism senior, Adrienne Tovar, is a current CPTV volunteer who produces, writes and anchors her own weekly news program. She said it would have been a big help to her to have had the service this year.

"We've put in a lot of hard work," she said. "But if you were to see our broadcast, it just doesn't look like you would expect a news broadcast to look.

California must make education higher priority

By Barry Munitz

By basing financial aid on genuine need, this new policy also occurred. The result is nearly 7,500 fewer class sections offered in fall 1992 than fall 1990. Dramatic cutbacks in library purchases, library hours, lab equipment, lab hours and student counseling.

The cutbacks of the last two years have also forced a reduction in enrollment of more than 22,000 students, despite a significant increase in student demand for college education. Nearly three-quarters of the new jobs created in the coming five years will require college education, and with the state looking to enrich its economy and become more competitive globally, it simply cannot afford — economically or morally — to let this many people fail by the wayside. This is why we are calling on the Governor and the Legislature for restoration of the CSU’s share of general fund support. Over the past five years, the CSU’s share of the state budget has fallen from 4.6 percent to 3.5 percent. Restoring the state’s commitment by returning us to our historic level of funding is the only way we can ensure access for all the students who need the CSU.

As critical as it is, lost access is not our only concern. The cuts of the past several years have done more than keep students out. They have also denigrated the quality of what we offer. Students are taking classes in overcrowded, classes they need for graduation but can’t get, broken or obsolete equipment, too few library books and journals — the list goes on and on. To restore quality, add classes for those enrolled and speed the time to graduation, our board has endorsed a new fee policy which will base student fees on a percentage of the cost of instruction.

This plan will put fees at one-third of the total cost - or, in other words, the CSU will bring student fees into line with the average charged by comparable public universities. In addition to providing money to improve the academic program, the new fee policy will bring much-needed stability and predictability to a fee process that has gyrated wildly and uncontrollably over the past three years. A key component of the new fee policy is increased financial aid. The CSU’s new fee policy recognizes that many CSU students will not be able to afford higher fees. If access to remain broad, higher fees must be offset with need-based grants. Accordingly, during the 1990-91 academic year, the CSU will increase grants by $40 million. A portion of the fee revenue will fund a comprehensive financial aid and information outreach program to help students learn about financial aid eligibility and how to apply for student aid.

By basing financial aid on genuine need, this new policy should ensure that higher fees do not drive away lower-income students, or those from middle-income families with such magnitude that we could never recover.

California’s future workforce is in jeopardy, and time is running out to save it. The first steps are to restore our funding, establish a stable fee and aid policy, and provide greater flexibility and accountability in operating the campuses. We have begun the process. It is now time for students, legislators and corporate leaders from across the state to come together and work in unity to ensure that higher education moves from the bottom to among the state’s highest priorities.

Scholarship established for drowning victim

By Kevin Comerford Staff Writer

A memorial scholarship has been established for a Cal Poly student who died Saturday in a Caleounas County drowning accident.

Arthur LeRoy Wheeler, III, an industrial technology senior, died after trying to retrieve his boat which was blown from shore into Salt Springs Reservoir.

Wheeler was active in a recycling program the IT department promoted at local schools. He was known as the "trash can shark," because he would dress up in a shark costume and speak the importance of recycling to the children.

"He was a really great guy," said Ellen Chambers, an IT senior. "He was really special." Donations to the scholarship fund can be made payable to Cal Poly, in Wheeler's memory, and turned into the IT office.

By switching to more energy-efficient lighting, PG&E has turned each of the EnergyWise Showcase Homes at Villa Rosa San Luis Obispo into a showcase of bright ideas.

The affordability of these new homes has been enhanced by lighting upgrades, designed by PG&E, that reduce lighting costs by nearly 80%. These upgrades were installed at no extra cost to the homeowners.

Villa Rosa's 2-3 bedroom homes are beautiful models of energy-efficiency. The lighting upgrades provide all the qualities of incandescent lights at a fraction of the cost to operate.

What's more, each home features the latest in energy-saving gas appliances, insulation and plumbing fixtures. So you'll save money on your energy bills. And that can be a compelling sales point if you ever decide to move.

Come visit Villa Rosa and stroll through the latest PG&E EnergyWise Showcase Homes. You'll see shining examples of truly affordable, energy-efficient housing.

These EnergyWise Showcase Homes are a joint energy-efficiency venture between PG&E, Southern California Gas and Villa Rosa.

Davis approves fee hike

DAVIS, Calif. (AP) — Students at the University of California at Davis have voted to raise student fees by $34 extra per quarter for sports, the health center and other student services.

Of the 4,750 students voting Wednesday night, 87 percent voted yes on raising the fee, which is higher than previously proposed fee increases of $31 and 457 voted for $25 a quarter.

"We couldn't be happier," said Doug Dall, assistant athletic director.

But the referendum failed, UC Davis' athletic program facing losing eight to 10 sports. The Aggies are expected to join Cal Poly, the University of California at Santa Barbara and Stanford in dropping some sports.

"We can't afford to lose any conference revenues because we have eight to 10 sports that would be cut," Dall said.

The university health center will now have to pay $75 extra per student; athletics and student services will get $135.

Davies hot topic at press conference

By Kevin Comerford

SPORTS

The temperature in Montgomery, Ala., for the NCAA Division II College World Series is expected to reach the extremely hot — 90 degrees with 95 percent humidity.

While the talk now is of the weather, conversations will focus on the Cal Poly baseball team once the Mustangs run onto Patterson Field Sunday.

The third-seeded Mustangs (36-16) will face sixth-seeded Missouri-St. Louis (31-9) in a first-round game Sunday at 7 p.m. (CST), which will be broadcast on KKAL (1280 am).

A press conference was held Thursday afternoon to discuss the coaches of the eight teams in the week-long double elimination tournament.

Cal Poly coach Steve McFarland attended the conference and was a bit flattered at all the attention his team was receiving.

"We're not looking at it that way," McFarland said. "The general feeling at the press conference was that we are the team everyone is concerned with."

Concerned they should be. The Mustangs are making their third trip to the CWS in the last five years. They were ranked No. 1 in the nation at the start of the season, and if they didn't have in the mid-way through the year as they are now, they would have held on to the No. 1 ranking all season long.

The excitement level in Alabama is at an all-time high as Troy State, a local team, is vying for the national title.

"The press conference was jam-packed," McFarland said. "There were about three times as many media people there than in past years."

For Cal Poly to duplicate their 1989 national championship performance, the Mustangs must play consistent baseball and cover all facets of the game.

"We need to play sound fundamental baseball in order to win this tournament" McFarland said.

Cal Poly's offensive attack is led by outfielder Rob Neal, who is batting .386 with five home runs and 65 runs batted in — seven RBIs away from tying the school record.

"The Rivermen earned a birth in the championship series by capturing the Central Regional last week. They are led by Regional MVP Jeff Peer, who batted .783 with three home runs and 11 RBIs.

The Mustangs' most reliable pitcher, Dan Glasspie (11-2, 1.50) and lefty Brian Wooldridge (7-0, 2.39).

Don't expect the Cal Poly men's and women's truck teams to capture national titles at the NCAA Division II Championship in Montgomery.

But a few Mustang men are favored to win individual titles at the NCAA Division II Championship which begins today and concludes Sunday.

Cal Poly's Rob Neals, co-director of the team, said she has her doubts about national titles for either team.

"If don't know if we are a contender for the top spots, but any thing can happen," the first-year coach said in a telephone inter-
