Poly officials wait for CSU Trustees to allocate funds

By Len Arends

Budget planners at Cal Poly are collectively breathing their breath as lawmakers in Sacramento battle over secondary legislation which would jeopardize the California State University system's relatively mild $17.7 million budget cut.

Cal Poly officials said they are sticking to earlier, pessimistic budget plans until the CSU Board of Trustees meets in mid-July.

At that time, trustees will port out to individual campuses whatever funding is ultimately allocated to the CSU in the 1993-94 California budget.

University officials are currently predicting a 2 percent cut from 2 a.m. to 5 a.m. herdings and handfuls of cars rolling through stop signs — Correira is not alone.

Sal Espa.as is a KCPB disc jockey. He also works the graveyard shift.

Espa.as said it’s easier for him to get up late at night rather than early in the morning. His show, “Spoken Word Instrumental,” can be heard in the silence of the chilly night. See GRAVYARD, page 7

The El Corral Bookstore is preparing to open a showcase shop in downtown San Luis Obispo next month and sell everything from Cal Poly sweatshirts to regional and international titles.

“Cal Poly Downtown” is slated to open July 22 and will be located at 555 Higuera St. The store will be a for-profit venture run by the nonprofit Cal Poly Foundation, which manages the El Corral Bookstore on campus.

The bookstore’s director, Court Warren, said El Corral is looking to break even. The store will include a box office, which will sell tickets to Cal Poly-related events, and a gift shop.

Espa.as said opening the gift shop downtown is part of an effort to foster a more positive image of the university in the community. “Cal Poly is a virtual island in the local community,” he said.

Warren said he sees Cal Poly Downtown “providing a positive public relations window for the community.”

Ramirez said correcting the budget bill — if one of the trailers doesn’t pass — would require the governor to use his line-item veto.

He said that would endanger the CSU’s relatively slight funding cut. Still, he said, “We have no (legal) protection (from cuts) if any part of the budget legislation fails. "I just hope all the trailers get passed.”
Summer escort service axed

Students seeking escorts around campus after dark may have to fend for themselves this summer.

The campus student escort service — previously offered by the Interfraternity Council — is not available during the summer quarter, said Walt Lambert, coordinator of greek affairs.

But during the summer, there are not enough fraternity members or residence hall students to provide the service, Lambert said.

Students with a legitimate safety concern who need an escort can contact Public Safety at 756-2281, said Interim Chief of Police Steve Schroder.

However, Public Safety is not a taxi service, Schroder said. If an officer is available he or she will provide safety-related escorts, he said.

Free visitors’ parking nixed

Visitors will no longer get a free ride when they park on campus for short visits to Cal Poly.

Starting today visitors must pay a $1.50 fee for each day of parking. Free parking passes, once available to visitors in the Administration Building, will no longer be offered, said Cindy Campbell, parking and computer services administrator.

The new fee has been instituted to conform with state law, Campbell said. According to the California Administrative Code, “users must pay to park” unless they are on official state business.

“We have not been in accord— zone with the code, which has been in effect for who knows how long,” Campbell said.

Additionally, 300 short-term parking meters will be installed in campus by fall quarter to help regulate visitor parking.

The meters will allow up to one hour of parking. Longer visits will require one of several types of permits.

These permits may be purchased at the Grand Avenue Information Booth, the State Cañiner’s window in the Administration building or from dispensers on campus lots. Daily permits cost $1.50, weekly fees are $3.60 and quarterly parking is $56.

Prior to the new policy permits were not required after 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Now, except on state holidays, permits are required year-round — from 7 a.m. until 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and until 5 p.m. on Fridays.

“We have to charge now after 6 p.m. because the night classes constitute “normal operating hours,” Campbell said, citing state code.

“For safety reasons, differentiation between general and staff parking lots will not be enforced after 5 p.m.,” she said. “We want some people get close parking at night. However, one minute before and you’ll receive a citation.” — Heather Lynch

Ground turned for Arts Center

The long-awaited ground-breaking ceremony for the San Luis Obispo County Performing Arts Center was held Saturday, marking the first tangible results of a plan that has been under development for more than three decades.

About 150 people attended the ceremony for the $26 million Center, which is expected to be completed in 1995. To be located behind the Cal Poly Theatre, the Center will seat 1,350 in its main performance hall.

Congressman Michael Huf-fington, Cal Poly President War-ren Baker, San Luis Obispo City Councilmember Bill Nelson and Binheimer addressed the audience in a brief dedication ceremony.

Four shovels then dug into the earth as the crowd applauded.

“This will be the only major performing arts center between San Francisco and Los Angeles,” Huffington said. “This will take a significant impact on the Central Coast.”

The Performing Arts Center is a result of the combined efforts of the city of San Luis Obispo, Cal Poly and the Foundation for the Performing Arts Center (FPCF). The triumvirate formed in 1986 to plan and fund the project.

“The I think it’s a tangible symbol of the ability of the community to work together with the univer-sity to make it happen,” said Warren Binheimer, president of the board of directors for FPCF.

Binheimer said the proposal for a large auditorium has been in the Cal Poly Master Plan since 1962.

The city has also expressed interest in helping Binheimer design and build the attractions in Disney’s theme parks.

Granados said the win was the culmination of a five-day trip to WDI headquarters.

“We went on tours, attended presentations and had interviews with Disney executives,” Granados said.

Granados was chosen by the Cal Poly chapter of the Society of Women Engineers to enter the “Imagi-Nations” contest. She serves as the chapter’s director of corporate relations.

Granados said she worked four months on her proposal “Aladdin” theme ride and described her design as a “virtual reality chair.”

“The ride is designed to im- merse the rider in an artificial world,” Granados said. “It’s like being in a computer world that interacts with the movement of the person.”

Granados said the attraction is controlled either through a computer screen or special gog-gles that tell the rider to feel like they are riding on a magic carpet.

Granados credited William Baker, Cal Poly mechanical engineering associate professor, and fellow student Val Reznik, a mechanical engineering associate professor, for their help in the project.

Winning the design competi-tion has brought her one step closer to reaching her career goal. “My ultimate dream is to work for Disney full-time,” she said.

She will take the next step this coming fall, when she begins her six-month co-op for WDI.

to 5 p.m during the six-week course. The class topics include upper-level math, English, agricultural science, art, theater, U.S. history, Latino studies and recreational sports.

"They learn about leadership, study skills and financial aid," said Lucila Camacho, an Upward Bound residential adviser. "The students take these things for granted until they are seniors. At that time, they are nervous about applying and they utilize the help."

Since Cal Poly's chapter was founded nine years ago, 95 percent of participating students have gone on to college and 70 percent of those have graduated or are still attending school, Mitchell-Nishimori said.

Half of the program's students have attended Cal Poly while the others have gone to other colleges, she said.

Cal Poly's program is funded by a grant from the U.S. Department of Education, Mitchell-Nishimori said. The program is free to students, and they pay the school back by going to college, she said.

Before coming to Cal Poly for the summer, Upward Bound participants are tutored at their respective schools by Cal Poly students.

"They learn about leadership, study skills and financial aid," said Andrea Velez, 16, a junior from Arroyo Grande High School. "We're getting (more difficult) classes than (in) high school. "I want to go to Cal Poly and study architecture," she added. "Upward Bound is helping me get through high school and get ready for college."

The program is structured to install teamwork and responsibility.

"Students need all parts of the pie, not just one piece or component of the program in order to take full advantage of what we offer," Camacho said. "Team building is a large part of that."

The program also teaches participants about some of the unique aspects of college life, such as how to get along with a roommate.

"I am really quiet," said Justina Valdez, 17, an Arroyo Grande High School senior who has participated in Upward Bound the last three years. "Upward Bound helped me to open up to others. They let us speak our minds and they want us to give our ideas to the group."

"Back at school, I'm around people not in Upward Bound," she said. "They have no set goals for themselves. People here do."

Another participant said he was one of those people until his family motivated him to join the program.

"I want to help out my family," said Raul Merino, 16, a junior at San Luis Obispo High School. "I will be the first in my family to go to college."

Interested students are required to submit a written application with a biographical essay and letters of recommendation to be considered for the program.

"We look for students who work hard and ones who show progress," Mitchell-Nishimori said. "Grades don't matter. We have both high risk and honor students. A student who brings an F grade to a D-minus is showing progress."

By Heather Lynch

I’ve never considered myself a women’s rights advocate. In fact, I usually don’t have much of an opinion on the topic. However, I have developed a number of female friends (my friends can verify that). I’m one of those wising-middle-of-the-road Americans that dribbles in conflicts and debates during elections. So why, you can’t live with them — you can’t advocate, but I have learned an important thing that, for the Opinion page:

I say I’m not a women’s rights advocate, but I have learned the truth of the cliché: “Men: You can’t live with them — you can’t live without them.” I do live with them and there’s no way on God’s green earth I could live without them. But since I’ve been at college, I’ve observed an appalling number of female friends suffer both physically and mentally due to the selfish and ignorant actions of those hairy creatures we call men. As I said, I’m not a man-hater. I just realized that I do have a very strong opinion: Some men deserve a good kick in the balls.

I never used to have this opinion. Before I came to college, I led a very sheltered life. I grew up in a small suburban town in the Bay Area. My friends and I named our happy family “The Cleavers of the ’90s.” My mom was a very smart and attractive guy in her day and a self-serving, ignorant, dishonest, unromantic, money-hungry, homophobe or masturbator. He’s a “really nice guy” by day and a self-serving, igno­runt, sex-starved bastard by night. This guy deserves a good kick in the balls, only the girls he has manipulated are too nice to do it.

Another girl I know met a very smart and attractive guy in one of her classes. He invited her to a party and they both got pret­ty drunk. Later that night things got a little hot and heavy and she ended up passing out in his bed. She woke up the next day with her clothes off and the guy lying naked next to her. It was obvious to her that sex had occurred.

Needless to say, for the next several weeks she was on pins and needles waiting for her “monthly surprise.” Worse than that, her life was a living nightmare until she went to the health center for STD testing and found out she was okay.

Things like that happen to college women all the time. It’s a very scary thing when a guy takes advantage of you and you sure as hell didn’t deserve it. It makes you wonder if sex is worth it — or if girls are worth it.

In college, the majority of guys are obsessed with sex. They don’t seem to care about sex too, but few guys would pass up any opportunity to get laid. Personally, I’m turned on by a guy who is not the ag­gressor and seems to have little interest in the physical aspect of the relationship. There’s more to a woman than her body.

College guys need to learn what to look for in women. I’ve overheard guys in bars or at part­ies snicker at a girl who is short and maybe a little overweight. Or maybe she has very small breasts or a big nose. Guys would always go for girls who were attractive to them, and not critical of them as they are of us. Guys constantly seek some athletic, tan, and big-boobed sex goddess who will turn any guy on. But for those girls who are made like that? And because that’s what we think guys are looking for, many of us feel pres­ured to look like this “godess.” It’s sad, and it’s just not going to happen.

I just want to say a couple more things. First, guys, we need you as much as you need us. For that reason, we hope that you’ll eat the crap and stop scaring us off. And lastly, I want to learn certain males with just one more message: grow up, realize there’s more to life than sex and perfect bodies, and maybe you’ll find your lives more fulfilling.

Warm summer nights are wonderful opportunities to attend Farmer's Market or watch the sun set in Morro Bay. But these gentle evenings are also a perfect opportunity to attend the Central Coast Shakespeare Festival by performing two Shakespeare plays this July—"Richard III" and "Much Ado About Nothing." It is presenting its third annual Central Coast Shakespeare Festival when it is "interesting and exciting" for people in this area. Central Coast Shakespeare Festival has something that attracts a lot of people," Trassel said. "We've gotten a lot of support from people on the Central Coast.

What was begun five years ago by three Central Coast women has grown into a reputable company of more than 30 people, including Cal Poly students. Members range in age from eight to 80.

This group of dedicated individuals practices four days a week for three hours a day to give polished, professional productions to Central Coast audiences.

Pumped through private donations, grants and fundraising, Artemis produces four shows a year, including at least two Shakespeare. The theater company fills a gap, said Patricia M. Troxel, a Cal Poly English professor and Artemis artistic director, said classical theater is "interesting and existing" for people in this area. "Much Ado About Nothing" is a love story set outdoors at the department of ornamental horticulture's Arboretum.

"The outdoor setting lends itself very well to the play," Stipicevich said. "Much Ado About Nothing" shows a lighter side of William Shakespeare.

Trassel agrees. "It is a light comedy that no one will have trouble following," she said. "It is a wonderful place to bring the family and a quiet audience are really having a great time.

Shakespeare's Richard III is modernized and set in war-torn Bosnia.

A new twist was added to "Richard III" to make it interesting and thought-provoking for contemporary audiences.

"Richard III" has its set in contemporary period. We've removed him from the English context and moved it to the civil war in Bosnia," Stipicevich said. "Our hope is that (the audience) will see a connection. The play asks the same questions that were asked 200 years ago."

"It's about ethnic and religious conflict," Trassel said.

Both Trassel and Stipicevich agree that the two plays are easily understandable and enjoyable.

"If you haven't seen Shakespeare before, you need to try it," Stipicevich said. "It's easier to understand when it's acted out. We don't use English accents, which can be difficult to understand."

"Richard III" and "Much Ado About Nothing" will be performed Wednesdays through Saturdays at 7:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m. "Richard III" is playing at the San Luis High School Theater. "Much Ado About Nothing" is playing at Cal Poly's outdoor Arboretum.

From page 2 of the County Youth Symphony, the Mozart Festival Association, Gold Coast Chorus, Community Concerts and the San Luis Obispo Vocal Arts Ensemble, participated in the ceremony. The groups offered brochures and answered attendees' questions about their organizations. Tim Walters, president of the County Youth Symphony, said the Center will be a tremendous benefit to his group.

"Generally, just having an arts center like this raises the awareness and appreciation for symphony and classical music," he said.

Ron Regier, director of Cal Poly Arts, said the new facility should attract some big name artists. He hopes to bring in violinist Itzhak Perlman and jazz performer Harry Connick, Jr. once the Center is built.

"The quality of artists will be far and above what we've had before," Regier said.
