Haitian forces tangle with U.S., U.N.

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Army-backed thugs wrecked plans for American troops to land Monday on an international peace mission, drove away U.S. diplomats waiting to greet them and threatened to create another Somalia.

The band of 25 to 50 men, some of them armed, then beat up merchants in the nearby market and fired guns while roving through the capital, including near the seaside U.S. Embassy. No casualties were reported.

U.S. and U.N. officials said the disturbances would not halt the overall peace mission. But if it was yet another direct challenge by the military to the U.N., efforts to restore democracy to Haiti.

Monday’s landing was to be in earnest the peace mission to restore democracy and rebuild the economy. About 100 other U.N. personnel — including 26 U.S. troops — are already in the country to do advance work.

After the disturbances, the White House delayed the deployment of nearly 25 U.S. troops — are already in the country to do advance work.

But Public Safety officials said Monday the higher numbers don’t necessarily mean more crime is occurring.

The reported crimes went up, said Public Safety Director Joe Risser. "There’s a significant difference between what’s happening and what’s being reported."

He said if everyone reported crimes when they happened, the statistical profile of the campus would look a lot different than it does.

One of the most noticeable increases in the reports was in the category of forgery in the two previous years, police investigated three allegations of rape in 1992.

Cal Poly, police said these statistics may not tell the whole story. They said the numbers which appear in the report are those from rapes occurring on campus. If the crime happens to a Cal Poly student off campus, the complaint goes to the city’s police department.

Public Safety detective Mike Kennedy recounted an incident from a past year when a woman from Cal Poly reported being raped by another Cal Poly student. She had gone with him to a party in Santa Barbara.

"The victim was a Cal Poly student, but it didn’t show up on Cal Poly’s statistics," Kennedy said.

Also, rapes often go unreported. Risser said the victims fear the publicity and embarrassment of prosecuting their attackers.

"There tends to be a tremendous concern ... that their privacy will be grossly violated by the court process," he said.

Risser said the rise in reported rapes could have been due to either an actual increase in forcible rapes, police making more arrests or victims becoming more willing to come out and report crimes.

The waiting game

Students are spending fall quarter with little to spend

by Lina A. Abe

The line curves in a small "S" outside Cal Poly’s financial aid office. Students wait patiently — and sometimes not so patiently — for paperwork to be processed in order to get their financial aid on Monday. "I had to wait my roommate pay my rent for me," said social science senior Amy Flynn as she waited in line for financial aid on Monday. "I also had to borrow money from my parents and relatives just to get by."

Without financial aid, Flynn was not able to buy her $250 worth of school books at the beginning of the quarter. And because she bought them late, she said she is still behind in some of her classes.

In hopes of being better financially prepared next quarter, Flynn was waiting.

Credit-no credit grading sign-up period extended to 7 p.m. today

By Sue Lynn

Due to problems with CAPTUS, quarter operations, the deadline for choosing credit/no credit grading has been bumped to Tuesday at 7 p.m., according to Academic Records Associate Director Marlene Carter.

Because of a flaw in the software for the over-the-phone class scheduler, the system was inaccessible on Friday, the original deadline.

Drastic jump in Cal Poly’s crime statistics

Reported violent crimes up by 80%; officials say more reporting them

By Sue Lynn

Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly’s crime and safety report card — just in for 1993 — looks slightly worse than it did last year, but still ranks the campus about average among California universities and colleges.

The number of violent crimes reported rose from about 17 to 25 in the years, violent crimes include murder (nine), rape (3), robbery (2), and aggravated assault (none).

But Public Safety officials said Monday the higher numbers don’t necessarily mean more crime is occurring.

"The reported crimes went up," said Public Safety Director Joe Risser. "There’s a significant difference between what’s happening and what’s being reported."

New funding rules for UC may impact Poly, CSUs

By Cindy Wolfe

Daily Staff Writer

Following a recent United States Supreme Court rejection of a case involving mandatory student fees used to fund political causes, University of California student government officials are now being forced to find new sources of funding for political lobbying.

California State University officials are uncertain if the decision will affect Cal Poly or other CSU campuses.

On Oct. 4, the U.S. Supreme Court refused appeal of last April’s Smith v. Regents of the University of California.

UC-Berkeley students initiated the case, saying it was unconstitutional for them to be forced to pay a mandatory student government fee used to support political and ideological causes they might disagree with.

The California Supreme Court ruled that, according to the United States Constitution, the university may continue to fund political activities only from students who do not object to the use of their money.

The case was appealed to the United States Supreme Court by the University of California, the student government of UC-Berkeley and the Associated Students of the University of California.

Judge dismisses Denny juror for lack of common sense while a group of shouting Haitians filed off a bus. Described later by a trembling Huddleston as "a group of goons, a group of thugs," the men shoved diplomats and reporters gathered for the scheduled docking, them punched and kicked their cars as they fled.

"We don't want foreigners coming here and trying to tell us what to do!" one man screamed. Another shouted: "We're going to do to them what they did in Somalia!" About a half-dozen men made similar references to the military attack in Somalia.

Haiti's military is betting the international community does not have the will to force it from power. The military seized control two years ago by overthrowing President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected head of state.

Aristide is widely popular among ordinary Haitians for a U.N. peace plan that would put the traditionally repressive military back in the barracks. "We believed its commitment was real. But it's wrong," Caputo told reporters at the U.S. Embassy.

He said the port harassment was only a temporary setback to plans to bring in a 1,500-member U.N. force of police trainers, medics and other support personnel by month's end. About 700 Americans are supposed to participate.

While the Haitian officials thwarted the U.S. landing, the army commander, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, made an unscheduled ceremony trip to lay a wreath at a status of Haiti's independence leader, Jean-Jacques Dessalines.

Cedras was accompanied by his chief aide, Brig. Gen. Philippe Biamby, who has ties with a recently formed anti-Aristide group that enforced a business shutdown in the city Thursday and Friday while police looked on.

Haiti's army has done nothing to stop the wave of violence preceding the Aristide's scheduled return.

"This is basis for a mistrial or a new trial," said attorney Edi Piros outside of court.

"The deliberations have been marked by numerous notes to the judge that indicated bickering in the jury room. On Saturday, the judge held a secret hearing and announced the jury was experiencing "interpersonal problems."

After that hearing, the now-excused juror - identified only as No. 373 — said in open court she was working hard to understand the issues and that the work was "tedious and detailed."

The judge gave the panel the rest of the weekend off "to recharge your batteries" and told them to return Monday.

But Monday's court session began with the judge and attorneys dealing with a note from the forewoman, a black woman in her 30s, who wrote that 11 jurors had agreed the older black woman shouldn't continue deliberations.

NAIROBI, Kenya — Following a show of force over Mogadishu by U.S. Marines Monday, the U.N. special envoy to Somalia welcomed a cease-fire by the militias of clan leader Mohamed Farah Aidid.

The announcement by Jonathan Howe, a retired admiral, was relayed to reporters at a briefing welcomed a cease-fire by the Farah Aidid.

"We welcome all overtures of peace and stability in Mogadishu, as we have seen them in the rest of the country," Howe's statement said. His spokesman, Farouk Mawlawi, said he would not elaborate on the envoy's words.

Fighting between U.N. peacekeepers and Aidid's militia has been largely confined to the part of Mogadishu controlled by Aidid. Leaders of the other 14 main factions generally are cooperating with U.N. forces elsewhere in rebuilding the nation after a devastating civil war and famine. Aidid reportedly announced the suspension of attacks in a radio broadcast on Saturday.

FINANCIAL AID: How students are coping

"Let's say five women have those crimes would include petty thefts, motor vehicle violations, drug violations, weapons violations, and vandalism."

"If I knew the financial aid application forms, he said.

Craig, who said she receives financial aid for two years, and has noticed the difference in processing time this quarter.

"It seems like it takes longer for the same amount of material," she said.

Craig, who said she receives financial aid from her parents, is waiting for her loan check to cover costs until matters are resolved.

Stevenson said his social life has been affected by the fee increase. "I can't go out as much," he said.

For some, the delay in receiving checks has caused them to turn to emergency loans.

"I was the one being late turning in the paperwork," said Robert Mittelholtz, a mechanical engineering senior.

Financial Aid Director Diane Ryan said students have to be responsive so they can "help us out." This includes taking care of paperwork when it is due.

"I'm optimistic that this backlog will soon be over," Ryan said. The office has changed its lockers and balances on the applications so it doesn't give money to someone who doesn't need it, Ryan said. She said any student in need of help will not be turned down.

"I can understand with the recurring mistake. "I can't go out as much," he said.

For aeronaautical engineering senior Kevin Alkema, covering costs included getting a cash advance on his credit card. Alkema, who previously was financed by his parents, is dealing with financial aid for the first time.

Animal science senior Tamara Craig said she has dealt with financial aid for two years, and has noticed the difference in processing time this quarter.

"It looks like it takes longer for the same amount of material," she said.

Craig, who said she receives financial aid from her parents, is waiting for her loan check despite applying for aid at the earliest opportunity.

"I'm waiting to hear back from the office immediately, the office has lifted the barriers on emergency loans."
