Witnesses estimated Maat was traveling between 70 and 90 miles per hour. At no time was the vehicle being pursued by police.

Shortly after crossing into San Luis Obispo just past Highland Avenue at 5:39 p.m., Maat careened his van over the shallow divider, sending both vehicles careening into opposite traffic lanes.

An erratic driver plowed his van into oncoming traffic, witnesses and motorists said, and hit-and-run accidents on two southbound lanes. Two motorists and a 9-year-old Cambria child were hit in the accident. Seventy-eight percent of California adults are extremely concerned about crime and law enforcement, up for percentage points from a similar survey last year.

Three other issues — the economy, public schools and controlling the spread of AIDS — are also near the head of the list. Nearly three out of every four people say that each of those issues is extremely important.

There were few differences between Northern and Southern Californians on the top four issues. But illegal immigration, traffic congestion and pollution were of special concern in the south, and the water supply and the cost of living were bigger issues in the north.

The rate is starting to dip, but the public's concern rises with violent crime," said Mark DiCamillo, the poll's managing director. "I think that the public has been seeing more violent crime, more heinous crime, and that really raises the level of concern."

DiCamillo said crime was the state's top-ranking issue in the early '80s, also. That helped propel a conservative Republican attorney general, George Deukmejian, to an easy victory over the incumbent in 1978.

explosion that shook windows throughout the high-density student neighborhood off Boyson Avenue.

Many Cal Poly students returning from Thanksgiving holiday were witness to the crash. Some, scrambling to the scene, attempted to pull Nomura from the wreckage.

"Everybody was just sitting there watching, but we tried to get closer to pull him out," said Joel Hermosillo, a construction management junior. "But it was just too hot. You'd feel like your head was going to singe. By the time we got him out, everything from his chest up was just black."

After others used fire extinguishers to calm the blaze, Hermosillo and materials engineering junior Ian Widlow dragged the charred body from the van.

"I was afraid I was going to get burned by touching his body," Widlow said.

Business graduate students Steve Schrepferman and Brett Eldridge were sitting down to work on accounting homework when the explosion rocked their Boyson Street apartment.

"There was a crash, then a two-second delay and then it all lit up," Schrepferman said. "Our windows were seriously rocking over." Perla Smith was taken to Sierra Vista Regional Medical Hospital, where she later died. Michael Smith was treated for minor injuries at French Hospital, and was later released. Burton was treated at French Hospital for a lacerated knee.

Debris from the three demolished vans littered the roadway for yards, and Maat's body lay covered in a yellow sheet for hours as police photographed the accident. The roadway was shut until early Sunday morning as crime scene investigators worked the scene.

Members of Cal Poly ROTC have been training for the regional championships in the "Ranger Challenge," to be held Dec. 3-5 at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The Cal Poly team beat 13 others from California and Nevada to earn a place as one of ten schools remaining in a national field of 102 schools.

This is the first year Cal Poly has made it to the championship, which tests competitors in ten areas of physical and tactical prowess, including weapons assembly, grenade throwing, M-16 marksmanship, orienteering, team rope-bridge building and a 10-kilometer road march.

COMMENTARY

Food poisoning or puppy love?

By Christie Stelly

I have a confession to make: I am 19 years old and I have fallen in "like." I know I've stolen that term straight from some dictionary or junior high school slang. But it's appropriate because I feel as if I have reverted back to those squeak-shy dating years.

Those years when I would confess my interest to one of my friends, so she would tell her friend, who could find out from her friend if he'd let me back.

The memory almost makes me nauseous. I might have an excuse. I can say I am still in the last leg of my teen years — I only have a few months left to act like a fool for "love."

These feelings have made me look back on the progress of my views on romance. So much has changed since I've even envisioned the day Prince Charming would arrive at my door, ready to place a ring on my finger. The brothers Grimm and Disney kept me religiously attached to the dream that a passive girl need only sit耐心 and wait for my prince to come to accept that my prince had lost his script somewhere along the way, and that relationships take a lot more than a pinch of fairy dust.

Thus, I reached those confusing early teen years, full of boy-hunting at malls and holding hands on the way to Melrose Place. I don't do that any more. In a way, the whole dating game can be fun. There is a more grown-up scenario seems to fall a little short of what I dream of — but maybe I could meet someone in chemistry class, weigh the pros and cons to deduce that I indeed have a mature affection toward him, and we can mutually decide to embark on a perfectly adult relationship. Sound a little dull? Or am I just a hopeless romantic?

Yet still I get caught up in my emotions. You can call it nature, society or immaturity. I don't know what it is. But I do know that I have to confront the little girl inside me before my carriage turns back into a pumpkin.

"It wasn't too many years before I came to accept that my prince had lost his script... and that relationships take a lot more than a pinch of fairy dust."

twist on the 1964 case of New Yorker veteran homicide cops alike, a vicious suspected drug dealers, who tripped her, rounded by a crowd of youths, many building by a knife-wielding neighbor who told police she was angry at Williams for smoking crack in the ball.

At a street corner Williams was surrounded by a crowd of youths, many suspected drug dealers, who tripped her, stomped her and egged on her attacker with cries of "Kill her! Kill her!" witnesses said.

It was a case that shocked citizens and veteran homicide cops alike, a vicious suspected drug dealers, who tripped her, rounded by a crowd of youths, many building by a knife-wielding neighbor who told police she was angry at Williams for smoking crack in the ball.

Kitty Genovese, who was stabbed to death while neighbors did nothing.

"My client would never have been able to catch her," defense lawyer Deborah Levy said of her nearly 200-pound client. "That's such a cop-out," countered Deputy District Attorney Therese Drabec.

"Trial is expected some time next spring."

For the Williams' family, the murder was a slow-motion nightmare. When Deborah Williams died, she was using the alias of Dene Wells, the name carried in news reports.

"I looked for my sister's name. I said, 'Thank God, it's not Deborah,'" Teresa Williams said.

"Two weeks later, the family got the bad news in a midnight call from Deborah's boyfriend."

Tears are not far away as Teresa Williams recalls how her sister died alone in her county hospital, but she blinks them aside.

"I don't have time for that right now. I'm too busy trying to start something and do something positive," she said in a recent interview at the modest Oakland home where she is bringing up her 8-year-old daughter. She shares custody with her mother of two of her sister's children.

Arnold Perkins, assistant health direc­tor for Alameda County, says the center is "one of the things that the community sorely needs."

One change Teresa Williams would like to make is the way government assistance is doled out. Too many times, she says, welfare checks and food stamps went straight into the hands of her sister's suppliers. She is suggesting that agreements be worked out with the women under which the money would be deposited directly into bank accounts and bills paid automatically.

Most of all, she wants to find a way to reach the women who, like her sister, "stop dreaming of something better."

"Let's try to listen to those people. Let's ask them what they need. What my sister needed most of all was she needed a recovery center and when she really real­ized..."

WOMEN'S HOOPS: Plagued by injuries, Mustangs off to an even start with win over Mesa State, loss to West Texas A&M tang then put in another 10-2 run to take the lead permanently for the first half which ended 38-31 in Poly's favor. Mesa State charged out to take over 42-41 in the second half. Rodness then connected on a three-point shot to become deadlocked at 47-47. At this time, Rodness picked up her fourth personal foul and had to leave the game. Forced to go on without her leader, Rodness, forwards Kristie McClall and Ketthaiontique Hinkle stepped up to make key baskets on a 13-3 Poly run for a 60-50 lead. Poly nearly lost the lead as Stutes led an 8-0 run to cut the score to 60-58. However, Rodness came back into the game to hit another three-pointer that would keep the Mustangs ahead for the remainder of the game.

In the end, despite a good offensive and defensive showing, it was rebuilding and free throws that made the difference for the Mustangs.
After getting outworked on the boards in the first half, Poly had 20 second-half rebounds and seven players with at least five rebounds for the game.
The Mustangs could have scored a few more moments if they had converted more free throws early in the game. For the first 23 minutes of the game, they successfully completed 6 of 18 from the charity stripe. In the final 0:5, with Mesa State fouling them, Poly converted all six free throws to preserve the victory.
"Our defense was real good," Orrock said. "We got good use out of our zone." Stutes had 30 points and 12 rebounds in the losing effort. She had help from Cindy Buchanan (11 points), but a turnover on a steal by Poly early 20-8 lead. Poly would close within 27-21.
