The abrupt removal of Nikolai Golushko was another sign of continued disarray in Yeltsin's camp, as well as the ongoing turmoil in Russia's internal intelligence operations.

But Russia reacted swiftly on the front, sending U.S. Embassy counselor James L. Morris to leave the country within seven days. The action was a reminder that the Cold War legacy of mistrust still clouds efforts to forge a new U.S.-Russian partnership.

RISING

A typical weekend night in downtown San Luis Obispo is a never-ending line of eager people waiting to get into Bally's, McClintock's, SLO Brew and Brubek's. Thursday nights are traditional for many Cal Poly students, who put in their four-day work week and then head downtown to blow off steam.

Speaking to his favorite downtown watering hole, junior Kathleen Sowar often meets her friends at Brubek's early in the evening. She may go to SLO Brew if a good band is playing, and then heads over to Bally's for "last call." She ends her night with a burrito at Ti'Alberto's or Twin Bell.

When I go out, it's pretty much the same thing every weekend," Swar explained. "But considering the bar scene in San Luis is so small, it's cool to know I can meet up with people I know wherever I go."

Frequenting the hot spots each weekend has become a comfortable routine for some Cal Poly students. But those who are familiar with the nightlife of years past can't help feeling deprived of their downtown playground.

The unforgettable nights are definite at The Baja Bar, The Rose 'n' Crown, The Dark Room, D.K.'s West Indies Bar, Superman's, Jack's Sports Bar, The Cigar Factory, Lou Hermance, 7-1- Club and the Motel Inn—but the memories live on.

Agricultural science graduate Paul Brown said he misses the diversity of clubs and bars downtown.

"One of the things that was fun about it before—especially because I was a lot younger—was the variety downtown," he explained.

Cal Poly English graduate student A.J. Schuermann, a ten-year San Luis Obispo resident, said he remembers when there were at least 15 places to choose from on any given night.

"In 1986 and 1987—that's when everything was happening as far as the nightlife," Schuermann said. "You could walk downtown and hear music everywhere, and there were plenty of live bands."

According to Schuermann, local bands were at their prime in the late 1980s. These familiar rock and alternative groups played every weekend at the melange of downtown bars.

"You could walk into The Dark Room and watch "Search For Food" or go to the Baja Bar and see "Bedrock," he said.

Now Brown said the bars take turns "flip-flopping" in popularity.

"There used to be more bars to choose from, but now it seems like people pick which place is cool and then just go there," he explained. "If the weekend spot is Brubek's, you won't be able to get into the place. But then on Wednesdays through Sunday nights there's hardly anyone there."

Jerry Bender, a downtown bar owner and bartender at McCarthy's, has fond memories of the Metel Inn, where he worked for ten years.

"The bar-restaurant opened in 1929 and closed down three years ago," he explained. "It was the most wonderful place on earth because it was a real relic of ages and everybody got along well. Unless you were a regular, you didn't know it was there."

But Schuermann said most bars started dying one-by-one during the transition from the 1980s to the 1990s.

"Who ever thought that an Italian restaurant and an optical store would replace two of the best bars in San Luis Obispo?" Schuermann said.

In 1988, the city conducted a survey of residents' opinions on downtown development issues. Only nine percent of the 585 respondents said they wanted more land in San Luis Obispo used for bars and nightclubs downtown.

San Luis Obispo residents and students have different explanations for the gradual decline in local bars.

Bender believes stricter law enforcement in San Luis Obispo is a contributing factor to the change in the town's night life. He thinks as the laws become more stringent, people will be less willing to go out.

"Back in the days when you were caught drunk driving, they'd throw you in the back of the police car talking."

Lines at Tortilla Hats (above), SLO Brew, Brubek's and McCarthy's have grown on Saturday nights for nightlife in San Luis Obispo have dwindled. Tougher laws, lack of creativity and a stagnant economy are what some blame for the lack of choice. / Daily photo by Anthony Kubota
AGENDA: Trends, tougher laws and economics blamed for transforming SLO bar scene into ghost of its former self

From page 2 and take you home," he said. "The law is not forgiving any more. Now the police will sit there, wait for you, wave you over and take you to jail." Brown said there also used to be a wider variety of parties at people's houses and, instead of going downtown, they get closed down by the police a half hour and after they start, he explained. Brown believes that because downtown seems to be one of the only options, it adds to the overcrowding of the bars.

Bender thinks the changing atmosphere downtown also has to do with the attitude of the patrons. He said the bar scene is headed downhill due to a few people who are spoiling it for the rest of the community.

"There are those that come into McCarthy's and have a good time and socialize with their peers," he explained. "They get about three or four beers in them and turn into King Kong and Godzilla, and make life miserable for everyone else."

Brubrock's manager Virgil Walle said that downtown bars have enough security to deal with defiant customers. He also realizes it is necessary for community members and Cal Poly students to cooperate with each other.

"The staff understands the needs of the university and it treats students as they should be treated," he explained. "The university take you to jail!" Elias Nimeh, owner and manager of Tortilla Flats, said the number of clubs and bars closing in San Luis Obispo has to do with the shift in the economy during the past ten years.

"The 1980s was the golden era. It was good business and people spent more money," he said. "Now the economy has changed and people tend to look for deals and specials and they limit themselves to how much money they spend. To be in business, you have to be astute and innovative in the field." Tortilla Flats will celebrate its 20th anniversary this month. Nimeh said one of the main reasons the bar is successful is because it works directly with Cal Poly and Cuesta students.

"We work with Cuesta and Cal Poly organizations and encourage their fund raisers here," he explained. "We do a lot of things with students and we like to keep it as a student bar."

Brown thinks nightlife in San Luis Obispo is failing because bars downtown lack creativity. He said if a bar entertained people, it would "blow the socks off" everything else in San Luis Obispo.

"Not to say there aren't personalities working in the bars here, but there's more of a bar than just cheap beer," he said. "I wouldn't mind paying more if I was entertained. But if not, I might as well go get a 12-pack with my friends and go somewhere else."

In the late 1980s, the number of bars and pubs decreased in San Luis Obispo while the number of coffee shops increased.

According to Schuermann, this change came about as a reflection of the latest college generation. He believes this "coffee trend" is part of a cycle.

"In the 1950s people went to coffee shops, and in the 1980s everyone went to bars," he explained. "The coffee is a lot better than a few years ago, but in time, I think students will reject the coffee shops once again."

Schuermann also thinks the last Poly Royal had to do with the decline in San Luis Obispo bars.

"It all seemed to happen after Poly Royal," he said. "It seemed to be a turning point for this city — the town got scared and it shut things down."

Although Bender has previously dealt with some beligerent young adults at McCarthy's, he still considers Cal Poly students to be some of his best customers.

"They're the greatest people in the world," he said. "I worked with people all of my life and I get along with almost everybody."

Brown thinks if people complain about the bars scene in downtown San Luis Obispo, they should explore other options.

"People often complain about the bars downtown, but when was the last time they went out to Cayucos Tavern or Sweet Strings Saloon?" he said. "These places may take a little effort to get to, but they're fun. We need to open our minds. If we don't like something, we should try to do something else in the area that we will enjoy."

Don't bother with law school to become an amateur judge

By Clark Morye

Beware of the opinion-prone virus — heard it's been going around

A lot of time has passed since the Academic Senate voted in favor of the Ethnic Studies minor. But the passage of time has been of little help in clarifying a major area of confusion for me. While proclaiming he was in support of ethnic studies, one senator expressed a specific concern that ethnic studies faculty have "too much control over classroom material" with their "own opinions." He continued his comment with warnings about dwelling "too much on the racial evil of the past."

Since I've never been a member of such an august body — and I believe, as I have been told, the Academic Senate has decision-making power regarding curriculum — I look to the members for guidance.

Am I to assume the ethnic studies faculty is afflicted with some form of virus which makes them more opinion-prone than faculty in other disciplines? Or perhaps compared to other Cal Poly faculty they have committed. Don't shoot and ask questions later, you too can be an amateur judge.

Like Motel 6 — leave the light on

It's time to crank up — not turn off — those lights in the university's most distant parking lots. At a time in the quarter when students typically stay here late, the thought seems especially relevant.

It comes to us a recent assault brought about to light an apparent crisis in parking safety. Students walking dangerous places after dark. Rapes, assaults and theft were primarily reported under relatively dark parking lots. Lighting, though not an elitist, is an important element in providing safety and comfort. It may prevent you from being attacked, but at least you might see your attacker.

Some people say drivers should simply move their cars closer to campus. But many students don't have cars. If they weren't busy, they would have gotten in their cars and gone home. It's a reasonable right, we feel, to pick a parking spot and expect the university to keep the light on for you.

What's more, a policy implemented in the fall, allowing students to park closer to be ticketed until 10 p.m. No parking on the inside after 10 p.m., lights off after 11 p.m. It sounds like some automotive version of "Musical Chairs" — with a heightened degree of danger.

This one-hour window purports an odd scenario for someone in the University Union, the Reserve Room or the Rec Center.

We know there are only a few people who remain parked in these lots late at night. Some nights, there aren't any cars left at all. But that doesn't mean we should consider safety of the few negligible, or feel comfort if someone else risks being attacked simply because we aren't.

Major campus construction will soon funnel even more cars into distant lots, and do so for years to come. If they weren't busy, they would have gotten in their cars and gone home. It's a reasonable right, we feel, to pick a parking spot and expect the university to keep the light on for you.

And, of course, there are a lot more amateur judges around to cloud the opinions of the rest of us. These are the ones who prance proudly as a straw to stung by an alleged feline before the trial is complete. Professional judges hear from so many witnesses as possible before they make a decision. Why shouldn't amateur judges as well?

But amateur judges aren't the only ones who are guilty of issuing premature verdicts. The media are guilty too.

People are learning that all news is biased. It is physically impossible to give completely unbiased account of anything. Most of the time, even the words chosen to describe an event can be ambiguous and misleading.

The media are gatekeepers. The media have unprecedented power to influence what we see and how we feel about what we see. Editors and producers have control over what information the consumer will be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given. This is a huge responsibility and cannot be given.

To get the most complete story, a person should use numerous sources. For example, the producer of one news channel may choose to ignore evidence and therefore shift the story angles to make Jeff Gillooly look guilty. But another producer might do the exact opposite.

Compare the news coverage of World Wars I and II to the news coverage of the Vietnam War and Desert Storm. The public reacted either favorably or unfavorably depending on the tone of news released to them.

Veterans of the World Wars were given huge parades and trusted like heroes. But there wasn't much of a hero's welcome after the last two wars.

Has anyone noticed the media's image has somewhat of a huge impact on judgment. Newspapers must look trustworthy. Even Dan Rather was named the most trusted man in America a few years ago.

Being in the public relations concentration, I have learned that, in business and politics, image opens doors. One has to look the part as well as act it out. This is especially true in the media.

The television medium acts as the attorney and the public is the jury. Everyone knows that without a lawyer, all are not equal and case is lost.

Media induced judgment is even more prevalent in political campaigns. I can speak, too about that. Chose on my wife, dodge the draft and still get elected President of the strongest country in the world — but only if I can afford an image consultant to make me look good.

And they are expensive.

Court cases and television court dramas instantly in duce public judgment. The Olympic games were fol lowed even more closely because the Kerrigan-Harding case was fresh in people's minds.

Step back in time to the William Kennedy Smith rape trial. How different would society have handled it if that unknown blue dot in the witness booth had published her name and face from the beginning.

Do juries' decisions on the Michael Jackson trial or the Menendez brothers really matter? Innocent or guilty, the public has just about hung them. Their lives as they knew them are over. But in the Michael Jackson trial the person who was the most under what actually happened, and here's the clincher — no one will ever know. I hate to be a dead horse, but does anyone think Lorena Bobbitt will be asked out on a date any time soon? For that matter, will anyone shake hands with John Wayne Bobbitt without a twinge in the lower gut?

Now remember, I'm all for people's differences of opinion. Just keep it at that. Don't make me sad.

ABUSE: Though there’s dispute over whether abuse is increasing, it’s certain workers are strained by caseload

In 1985, the first year that law enforcement officials counted all cases of spousal abuse and documented the incidents, the district attorney’s office here received 14 cases of penal code 273.5 violations for filing consideration. By the end of 1992, the total number of cases jumped to 421, and Ramsay predicted the trend would continue to escalate.

"Nineteen ninety-three is going to be a banner year," she said sarcastically in September. "My statistics are simply off the charts. As of the end of August, I had a total of 278 cases sent up. If I keep going at this rate, I’ll be over 400 before the end of the year."

By the end of December, the total number of cases already surpassed Ramsay’s predictions, climbing to an estimate 556 cases.

That increase, some experts say, is due to the willingness of victims to file reports.

San Luis Obispo Police Detective Steve Tilley said he sees the same amount of spousal abuse in the county in every year. At the same time as the demand for services offered to battered women increases, some agencies experience the budget pinch and face the possibility of not meeting the needs of their clients.

With the official say the amount of spousal abuse in the county is escalating, others disagree and suggest that the high statistics reflect an increase in the number of victims reporting the crime. But the statistics do not reflect only an increase in domestic abuse as well as interviews with local experts, reveals that battered women are seeking help in 1992.

Karen Ramsay, domestic violence case coordinator for the Victim/Witness Assistance Center in San Luis Obispo said the numbers most often are not the results of a battered woman. This reflects national trends as well, in which one out of every five victims make up 95 percent of domestic violence victims.

"Domestic violence crosses all the lines — color, age, ethnicity, educational background, " she said.

She said domestic violence is one person’s attempt to control another person’s behavior through force, often by physical means.

Per cent statistics from the county’s District Attorney’s Office and the Victim/Witness Assistance Center reflect a spiraling increase of spousal abuse cases since 1986. That year, penal code 273.5 became law and made it a felony to physically injure a spouse, a live-in boyfriend or girlfriend, or the other parent of a child.

That year, penal code 273.5 became law and made it a felony to physically injure a spouse, a live-in boyfriend or girlfriend, or the other parent of a child.

In 1985, the first year that law enforcement officials counted all cases of spousal abuse and documented the incidents, the district attorney’s office here received 14 cases of penal code 273.5 violations for filing consideration. By the end of 1992, the total number of cases jumped to 421, and Ramsay predicted the trend would continue to escalate.

"Nineteen ninety-three is going to be a banner year," she said sarcastically in September. "My statistics are simply off the charts. As of the end of August, I had a total of 278 cases sent up. If I keep going at this rate, I’ll be over 400 before the end of the year."

By the end of December, the total number of cases already surpassed Ramsay’s predictions, climbing to an estimate 556 cases.

That increase, some experts say, is due to the willingness of victims to file reports.

San Luis Obispo Police Detective Steve Tilley said he sees the same amount of spousal abuse in the county in every year. At the same time as the demand for services offered to battered women increases, some agencies experience the budget pinch and face the possibility of not meeting the needs of their clients.

With the official say the amount of spousal abuse in the county is escalating, others disagree and suggest that the high statistics reflect an increase in the number of victims reporting the crime. But the statistics do not reflect only an increase in domestic abuse as well as interviews with local experts, reveals that battered women are seeking help in 1992.

Karen Ramsay, domestic violence case coordinator for the Victim/Witness Assistance Center in San Luis Obispo said the numbers most often are not the results of a battered woman. This reflects national trends as well, in which one out of every five victims make up 95 percent of domestic violence victims.

"Domestic violence crosses all the lines — color, age, ethnicity, educational background, " she said.

She said domestic violence is one person’s attempt to control another person’s behavior through force, often by physical means.

Per cent statistics from the county’s District Attorney’s Office and the Victim/Witness Assistance Center reflect a spiraling increase of spousal abuse cases since 1986. That year, penal code 273.5 became law and made it a felony to physically injure a spouse, a live-in boyfriend or girlfriend, or the other parent of a child.

In 1985, the first year that law enforcement officials counted all cases of spousal abuse and documented the incidents, the district attorney’s office here received 14 cases of penal code 273.5 violations for filing consideration. GUN CLUB: Poly gun owners band together

Field said the primary reason for developing the club was a particular scene which was continuously aired on CNN.

"This scene was about the pending legislation to ban assault rifles," Field said. "But that particular scene which was continued to be aired, this guy firing a fully automatic machine gun in rapid fire.

"I don't know for sure if that was a federal agent or what," Field said. "But that particular gun is heavily restricted. You can't get a gun like that in the United States. It is basically restricted only with the exception of SWAT teams and other federal agents."

In Field's opinion, what CNN was showing had nothing to do with the assault weapon legislation intends to ban. Field said he has talked to people who have called the network to complain about the inaccuracy in the report. The station continues to show it because their intent is to alter the public's opinion.

Not all the members in the club own a firearm.

Homes economics senior Charissa C. Navarro does not personally own a gun, but plans to buy one.

"At first I didn't know anything about guns," Navarro said. "Then I was introduced to them and I realized how by speaking to people about why they own them."

Navarro said her reason for advocating the ownership of firearms is for personal protection.

"I want a gun to protect myself," she said. "I don't believe in relying on the police to protect me because by the time they get there, it will be too late."

Industrials engineering senior Tony Protas was more ambivalent toward Navarro that a person should not rely solely on the police for protection.

"I own a gun because I enjoy target shooting," he said. "But I also want to be able to defend myself, my family and my home. I'm all for calling 911 if someone breaks into my house, but if it's 3 o'clock in the morning, you hear someone coming in your window and you call 911, they're not going to get there in time to protect you."

Physics junior Mark Horning said he believes the Second Amendment is the most important in the Constitution.

"Historically, people who are armed cannot be subdued," Horning said. "The amendment is very important against government excess and it is a way for the people to check on the government."

Members have set up a booth in the University to answer questions about guns and the pending gun control legislation. In addition, they are students and faculty members to sign a letter addressed to Congressmen Michael Huffington, R-Calif., in Washington, D.C., op- posing the proposed amendment to the crime bill.

Midstad, an architecture student, is the "Modular House," only ten to fifteen meters from the greenhouse. They used a green door to avoid shooting down the planes.

"I'm sure there will be some very strong words coming out of (Russian) Parliament — probably before this story is printed," he said.

"I think the Russian Parliament will make some demands for our return," McKibbin said. "I think our president will make some demands for our return and Russia will put us on the unwar- rated list.

"Better days are ahead of us," Borodin said. "We have our hopes."

"In Washington, President Clinton said 'every attempt was made' to avoid shooting down the planes. Clinton said helicopters had often violated the no-fly zone in the past, and ethnic Serbs also had been violates by planes since September. Both Kranzdorf and McKibbin mentioned a problem coming from the Balkans peninsula that most likely has been exacerbated by NATO's air campaign.

"Better days are ahead of us," said Borodin. "There is a chance for a change in the situation.

Cal Poly's Jake Gaeir presented his father with an early birthday present Saturday. The present for his dad, whose birthday was Monday, was another PAC 10 Championship at the 150-pound weight class.

No. 3-ranked Gaeir gifted wrapped the his father's present with a 6-3 decision at Cal State Poly's annual Mustang Invitational that ended after Gaeir scored a take down in the second overtime period.

Saturday night in front of 1,906 at Matt Gym, Gaeir quickly overcame a 1-0 deficit with a takedown and a near fall to place fourth. Cal Poly's Wrestling Head Coach said he knew Gaeir was going to win. But to the common observer the outcome was not so clear.

With Gaeir leading 5-2 and 26 seconds left in the match, Theiler rolled over from the standing down position and scrambled to break Gaeir's headlock. Theiler was in position to score a two-point reversal, but Gaeir never let go.

Seconds later the referee ruled the wrestlers were in a stalemate and restarted them with 13 seconds left to battle. Theiler broke out of Gaeir's hold quickly and drove at Gaeir's feet in vain as the buzzer and crowd noise roared.

"The last 13 seconds was spectacular to be in my own gym," Gaeir said about the strength he wrestled Gaeir because it's a style he said. "It's hard for me to wrestle Gaeir because it's a style of wrestling that I'm not used to."

"It's like a cat and mouse game."
