Cal Poly students from various ethnic clubs and commissions have decided to take action in helping to bring more students of underrepresented groups to the university.

The Quadrilateral Ethnic Commission (QEC) is made up of student leaders from La Comisión Estudiantil, the African­

American Leadership Commission, the Native American Student Commission and the Asian and Pacific Islander Commission.

They are working as a group to hold phone-attacks in which students who have been accepted to Cal Poly will be called to dis­ suss any subject that is not clear to them about the admission process.

However, some groups like the African American Student

Union (AASU) have decided to create their own outreach program.

AASU will continue to be part of the QEC while working on their own marketing plan.

“We have decided to set some goals for ourselves,” said business senior Niko Jarrett, who is also a member of the African mission.

In recent decades, the

Couples across the nation have been planning their romantic Valentine’s evening for days, including the flowers, candy, a candlelight dinner, and – don’t forget that sexy red lingerie. Because, in our society, sex is a part of the package, right?

Some couples say no. Having decided to join the millions of other Americans who have taken vows of abstinence, these couples have a different night in mind.

They’re couples like marketing senior Becky Uribes and her boyfriend, George Young, a student at Cuesta College, who have pledged themselves faithful to each other for years without partaking in any sexual activity. Crazy as it may sound to a generation whose parents spawned the sexual revolution, Uribes and Young are living proof that you can maintain a successful relationship without the extra physical acts.

“We know our relationship is not based on sex,” Uribes said. “So other areas of the relationship are worked on.”

And they have definitely worked hard. Uribes and Young will be celebrating three years and ten months together on Valentine’s Day. Both said they are strong Christians who believe God wants them to wait to have sex.

Uribes said their Valentine’s evening will consist of attending a Campus Crusade for Christ meeting where they will watch a film on relationships. After that, Uribes said they might hang out with friends or grab a bite to eat. What they won’t do, the couple affirmed, is invite temptation.

According to Young, this means spending a majority of their time in public.

“But God created sensations that lead up to (sex), so now we communicate our feelings verbally.”

They said they think this verbal communication has bonded them more than other couples that do have sex.

“A lot of couples base their communication on sex,” Young said. “When (sex) is the first thing you know about a person, instead of meeting them and then getting to know them, what else do you have?”

“Sex at Cal Poly isn’t going to go out of style. But for some couples this Valentine’s, it’s out of the question.”

“We are human and we do struggle,” he said. “We are captives of our sexual desires, so we don’t put ourselves in a situation where things could occur.”

This is the reason they decided to stop kissing.

“It doesn’t mean we’re not attracted to each other – we are,” Uribes said.

“Two and a half years ago we used to kiss,” Young said. “But God created sensations that lead up to (sex), so now we communicate our feelings verbally.”

MUSIA IS DAILY

"But the wedding day ... just to say those vows," Jennifer said. "I truly thought he would trust him with the rest of my life."

"The finale was the kiss," Chris said. "It was our first. It was so tradition­al and really special."

"We all think it very important," Boscacci said. "But we don't want to tell people that their beliefs are correct. But I'm sure that even those with scarred pasts can trust the Lord's guidance."

ASI Board and administration need improved communication

At last Wednesday’s Board of Directors meeting, ASI raised concern that seems to have been fermenting for quite some time. What the organization collectively calls the administration has a long history of poor communication with the Board of Directors.

We weren’t there, so we can’t say who’s responsible for this breakdown. However, the administration and ASI aren’t communicating, that’s a problem for all of us.

This kind of dysfunctional relationship leads to mistrust between the administration and the student body. Each group is not fully informed of the other’s respective positions before the stu­dents ever have a chance to discuss them. The abrupt transfer of ASI’s accounting and payroll functions to the administration also destroyed the sense of ‘communication’ that the Foundation was only a case in point.

Regardless of who’s responsible for this problem, it’s time to start getting it fixed, not to throw accusations and widen the gap. ASI should take immediate action to incorporate the university in a formal structure for communication between the two groups. That’s not to say that the Board of Directors isn’t responsible either — for ideas and plans to be shared between the Administration and the University Union.

There is an urgency to this request. In a few short months, our student government will turn over, and a whole new group will be in charge. If this is going to get done, it needs the continuity of having me Board of Directors see it through to completion. That means starting now, so the job can be finished by June.

We should tell the individuals of the Board and the university to remember that inaction on this issue doesn’t just cause them frustration — it impacts thousands of students. Let’s get it taken care of.

Apathy and censorship affect event

The fourteenth annual university-sponsored Women’s Week has begun. Monday’s events were fair­ly well attended, but the same can’t be said for the weekend, which ranged from poorly attended to not attended at all.

One part of Women’s Week is “Summit for Sisterhood,” which addresses issues concerning African-American women. Saturday’s event, the first of the summit, was canceled after only one student showed up.

Academic Skills Center Director Trish Stewart, scheduled speaker for the seminar, attributed the lack of attendance to apathy.

Whatever the reason, we’re sure it didn’t help that the Women’s Week poster has been banned in the University Union.

According to Patricia Harris, coordinator of women’s affairs and student services, women complained to the University Union “that they found the art of the poster sexually harassing.” We don’t know how many women complained, but Mustang Daily’s Editorial Board does not believe the poster is offensive. Neither did the artist, Jenny Lynn.

The University Union is a key location for publicizing university-sponsored events, and if students don’t see them before the event, they should make sure it is well-publicized. This includes not only the bigger parts of the university will allow a poster to be displayed.

There are some exceptions speakers dealing with relevant or current issues. Concerning the controversy over the university’s policy on student discipline, women complained that some interested students have already missed out on events because of the publicity problem.

Also, it is a shame to think that many students will miss out on some great opportunities to learn because of their apathy.

OPINION
Dateless on Valentine’s Day - Part I

By Jennifer Young

Oh, yes. It’s here. It’s that day, the day you’ve been trying to wipe from your memory since this time last year – the day when couples walk hand-in-hand with that sick glazed look in their eyes, friends give one another sweat notes made out of red hearts, and everyone eats those sick little heart candies with words on them like “cute” and “be mine.” Yes, it’s Valentine’s Day, and there’s no running away from it.

Personally, I don’t mind today. Normally, I’m confident in my single status and rather enjoy the freedom it brings. I enjoy spending time alone and with friends and don’t measure my value on the number of dates I have on a weekend.

But, Valentine’s Day is a whole different ball game. And it’s not like it sneaks up on me or anything. How could it? Every Christmas, I receive a new Greenville calendar. I love those pictures, flip open to the new year, and BOOM — there it is. In February, I leap out at me with flaming hearts and wild expectantions. I don’t know how the calendar automatically unfolds to February, but mine always does. I’m telling you, I don’t plan it that way. That’s my plan.

Once this fateful day approaches and reality begins to set in, my dreams of fantastic adventures and wonderful, romantic surprises dwindle down to watching an old television rerun with a roommate or two. I convince myself I’m satisfied, when actually I’m still secretly waiting. Everyone wants to feel special, so why can’t I? My single status and rather enjoy the freedom it brings. I enjoy spending time alone and with friends and don’t measure my value on the number of dates I have on a weekend.

Cupid’s arrows missed the mark

Also, it is a shame to think that many students will miss out on some great opportunities to learn because of their apathy.

Every year I think it’s going to be better, but it never is. Honestly, I think I’m haunted. Valentine’s Day was just not meant to work out for me. My experience freshman year at Cal Poly pretty much says it all.

I was living in Man Hall and really liked this guy who lived on the second floor. We were always going out, but one week his Week poster prevents many students from being informed.

If you know how to plan a committee-wide event, they should make sure it is well-publicized. This includes not only the bigger parts of the university will allow a poster to be displayed.

to the dorms from the cafeteria (then colloquially named the "stall")! Each ominous footprint brought me a mo­ment closer to the truth of our relationship. I finally reached the front door and approached the mailbox. Taking a deep breath, I slipped my key into the lock and slowly turned it. Finally, I pulled the door open to reveal... a piece of paper tied to a blowpop attached. Whoooooowhoooooo! This was it! I anxiously pulled it out to read the note's contents which began, "Dear Debbie... It wasn’t from him and it wasn’t for me! It was some random candy-grain mistakenly placed in my box. Disappointed and, I returned the grain to the lady worker and walked back to my cell.

To add more craziness to this story, weeks later I spoke to the guy about Valentine’s Day. I found out the reason he acted strangely upon receiving my gift was because he had sent me a candy-grain, complete with an original poem and note, but I never received it. He was awaiting my reaction which I never gave, while I was awaiting his reaction which he never gave. It was a hit-and-run on the highway of love. Cuzn, I tell you.

Needless to say, that experience has left a bitter taste in my mouth. I can picture cupid laughing hysterically and that bothers me. Why can a normally secure person be reduced to a mass of awkward feelings and insecurity?

Lately I’ve been realizing that my definition of love and Valentine’s Day is off. I’ve been thinking of it as another person expressing their romantic affection for me. Now, I’m beginning to learn that it’s more of me doing something special for those close to me. It’s sacrifi­cial, not superficial, and it’s others-centered.

I say, let’s get rid of all of the romantic “type” as­sociated with today and make it a day to celebrate all close relationships. Everyone wants to feel special, so why can’t I do something for Valentine’s Day? There’s certainly more satisfaction in that than trying to manipu­late situations to fill my own love tank.

So, maybe you have an idea for this evening and can’t relate to my frustrations at all, or perhaps you, too, experience the dread that accompanies Valentine’s Day. Either way, make sure to do a little something for some­one close to you, girl or guy. It will make their day. Trust me.

State's lawsuit to recoup illegal immigration costs dismissed

By Amanda Covoirubias

SAN DIEGO — A federal judge dismissed a lawsuit Monday by the state of California that attempted to recoup billions of dollars from the U.S. government to cover the costs of serving illegal immigrants.

U.S. District Court Judge Judith Keep ruled that decisions on how the federal government guards its borders and spends its money on fighting illegal immigration should be handled by Congress and the president.

"How the country is affected by border problems are legitimate concerns," Keep said before issuing her ruling. "... My jurisdiction in this area is very limited."

Her opinion echoed one reached in Florida, where a similar lawsuit was dismissed last December. The states of Texas, Arizona, New Jersey and New York have also filed such lawsuits, claiming the United States' failure to secure its borders has allowed thousands of migrants costs California tax payers $2.4 billion a year, said Eugene Hill, who represented the state at Monday's hearing.

The state had originally filed three separate lawsuits focusing on each service, but they were consolidated into the single case heard Monday.

Immigrants rights activists had criticized the lawsuit, filed in San Diego on April 29, as no more than a political ploy by Wilson to enhance his bid for re-election last fall.

Since his re-election, Wilson has met with House Speaker Newt Gingrich and other Congressional leaders to develop policy that would have the federal government pick up more of the costs associated with illegal immigration.

The House passed legislation last week that included more than $400 million to reimburse states for the cost of imprisoning criminal illegal immigrants.

Business leaders, public differ in educational values

By Dora Akiko Tom

SAN FRANCISCO — The general public wants the nation's colleges and universities to teach vocational skills and not focus on higher education. But that is the hiring society says students should do.

In a study examining people's perceptions of higher education, researchers found that the views of the general public differ vastly from those of community and business leaders.

The study, entitled "The Fragile Coalition," was discussed Monday at the American Council on Education's 77th annual convention. President Clinton is scheduled to give the keynote address Tuesday.

Researchers studied a total of about 90 people in Detroit, San Antonio, Philadelphia and Memphis. Half were from the general public, with the rest comprised of community and business leaders, all with at least a bachelor's degree.

"It's kind of striking how little the public knows about higher education," said John Immerwaher, a professor of philosophy at Villanova University, who also conducted the study with James Harvey & Associates. "Most people's knowledge of it is they drive by it and see there's a campus."

Local leaders, however, often have sent their own children to college, are friends with professors and sit on college boards.

"Leaders favor liberal arts (degrees)," Immerwaher said. Most of the local leaders said they look for an employee who knows how to find and apply information rather than those who can simply quote the law or mathematical equations.

In terms of the cost of higher education, the general public feels that institutions are becoming so expensive that soon only the wealthy will be able to afford college.

Local leaders, particularly those in the private business sector, however, say they're not so much worried about the price of tuition but the overall cost of education.

"After this process of reorganizing and downsizing — leaders have very little sympathy for the problems in higher education," Immerwaher said.

The public also seemed to feel that colleges were doing an adequate job of educating students. Conversely, leaders said they felt that colleges were focusing on research, most of which wasn't groundbreaking and was self-serving for professors trying to get tenure.

James Harvey, president of James Harvey & Associates, said whatever the perceptions, colleges and universities should be wary of falling into a trap of turning out a high number of mediocre graduates.

"It's not just about turning out someone who can crank on a belt at the local auto factory," Harvey said.

"It's about turning out someone who can earn a living for the rest of their life," he said. "We should be making the argument in higher education that we are interested in preparing your youngster for their last job, not their first job."

SMYRNA, Ga. — House Speaker Newt Gingrich ended a brief flirtation with the 1996 presidential race Monday, saying he would forgo the 1996 race.

Gingrich never said he was interested, but he encouraged speculation by scheduling a somber time visit to New Hampshire, which holds the first presidential primary.

President Clinton noted wryly "there's still a few" contenders despite Gingrich's announcement. "I wish the absence of Republican opposition was my major worry but I don't think it is," he said. "Somebody will show up, sure as the world."

The GOP field now includes Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander. Several others are likely to join them in the race, including Sens. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Richard Lugar of Indiana.

Gingrich, Alexander and Spec­ ter all were campaigning in New Hampshire on Monday, a year and a week before that state's early primary.

In recent weeks, some House Republicans grumbled privately that Gingrich's refusal to rule out a 1996 run was an unnecessary distraction to their legisla­ tive work. Several had pressed him recently to make a definitive statement, according to GOP sources who commented in Washington on condition of anonymity.

In obli­ ging them Monday, Gingrich said he had spent time over the weekend asking sup­ porters whether they believed he should run for president in 1996. He said the discussions were prompted by Quayle's surprise announcement last week that he would not be a candidate.

"I talked with people and said, 'What do you think we should do?'" Gingrich told reporters after his speech.

He said some were "very will­ ing" to back a presidential bid. But the consensus was that he should concentrate on getting the Republicans' "Contract With America" through Congress.

Cobb County Commission Chairman Bill Byrne said he ad­ vised his friend to settle in as speaker and focus on the GOP legislative agenda.

"He has a responsibility to see it through," Byrne said.

In Washington, Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour said he always considered talk of a 1996 Gingrich campaign "rank conjec­ ture." Still, Barbour, who has counseled Gingrich to keep a lower public profile and focus on passing legislation, said: "I'm glad he cleared the air."

Gingrich said he considered Dole, Gramm and Alexander "formidable" candidates and said he looked forward to working with a Republican president come 1997.

"We've had Republican presi­ dents in the last 40 years. We haven't had a Republican speaker," he said during a visit to the Georgia Capitol after his speech. "And as I think being speaker with a Republican presi­ dent could be a very important part of building the kind of team that could really complete the revolution and that's why I decided I'd stay."

In New Hampshire on Mon­ day:

• Specter criticized those who say the party's nominee should oppose abortion and renewed his call for it to be eliminated from the party platform.

• Alexander called himself pro-life and said he believed states could restrict a woman's right to an abortion. He said the federal government should stay out of the matter.
Staff member flooded with offers of help
By Nateke Collins

After the flood waters rose in Industrial Technology Administrative Assistant Jackie Hatch's home, she found herself sur­rounded by people willing to help. Hatch said, "I returned home to find the street lined with cars.

Hatch's Atascadero home was damaged by rising flood waters on Jan. 10 and again on Jan. 24. Her house is located off Highway 41, across from the Atascadero Zoo.

Hatch, her mother, her son and four cats were surprised to awaken to a home filled with water. "I live on a 100-year-old flood plain," Hatch said. "It's the first time many of us... have ever experienced a flood, though.

Hatch said she remembered the moment she knew that things were not going to be as bad as she had once thought. "I returned to my house the day after the first flood and I could see someone in my driveway," Hatch said. "It was Pete Muniz, a friend who had heard about the floods and came to see if I needed help.

Hatch referred to Muniz as her "first ray of sunshine." She said at that moment, she knew she was not alone in the effort to clean up.

The bottom three feet of dry wall had to be removed from the walls of Hatch's house, in addi­tion to all the insulation and carpeting, she said. "Professors showed up with their wives and kids a couple days after the flood," Hatch said. "They removed all the carpet and helped me dig away the brush and mud that had barricaded the front door.

According to Hatch, the professors were organized by Karen Oakes, a part-time marketing lecturer at Cal Poly. "I had stopped by (Hatch's) house to see how she was," Oakes said. "She said she needed an army, so that's what I organized.

Oakes said it was common sense to help and she felt the more people she could get involved, the better. "It doesn't take much to get a shovel and shovel mud," Oakes said. "No one seemed to take insurance claim. She said she still doesn't know whether the claim will be filed as flood or fire damage.

"It would be nice to get the insurance settlement," Hatch said. "I'm just trying to get everything organized.

According to Holt, people from campus have made numerous phone calls offer­ing assistance to Hatch.

"I was in charge of taking donations and getting people to help," Holt said. "I was pleasantly surprised by the number of people who responded.

People throughout the com­munity also have been helping Hatch in a large way, in­cluding Boy Scout Troop 4104, The Red Cross, the Cal Poly Business Department and the Atascadero Fire Department.

"I guess that bad things happen for a reason," Hatch said. "It really brings people together and shows you that there really are people who care."

Surgeon general nominee Foster faces strong opposition in Senate
By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Strick­ling back Monday in the row over President Clinton's surgeon general nominee, Vice President Al Gore called Dr. Henry Foster Jr. the victim of an anti-abortion campaign to intimidate Con­gress. "We're not going to let the extremists win," he declared.

But critics of the Tennessee obstetrician showed no sign of easing up. House Speaker Newt Gingrich said in Georgia, "I think he's going to be very hard to confirm. I think it's going to be a very embarrassing set of hear­ings."

In Washington, White House press secretary Mike McCurry acknowledged, "We have our work cut out for us.

But McCurry also joined in the tougher rhetoric the White House has begun using. He said that extremists in the right-to-life movement "have now hooked Republicans and Congress by the nose and they're dragging them around."

Douglas Johnson, a spokes­man for the National Right to Life Committee, said the ad­ministration was just trying to change the subject. "The White House now seems to be trying to throw up a banner to stop the growing revela­tions regarding Dr. Foster's 30­year history as an abortionist and an abortion-drug innovator," he said.

President Clinton left the strong talk to his officials, saying only that the controversy was not distracting him from other work and that he expected Foster to be confirmed if considered "by a fair-minded Senate."

Senate hearings are expected next month with a confirmation vote to follow.

Dispatching Gore to Ten­nessee was the latest in an ag­gressive set of White House moves to save the troubled nomi­nation. While most nomi­nees are held from public view until their confirmation hearings, Foster has defended himself in a medical school speech, a newspaper article and a national television interview.

On Monday, sitting elbow-to­elbow with Foster in a cramped low-income apartment, Gore stepped up the White House campaign to emphasize the doc­tor's efforts to reduce teen-age pregnancy among inner-city youths. The apartment houses Foster's "I Have a Future" program that teaches self-esteem and urges youths to abstain from sex.

Fewer unwanted pregnancies would mean fewer abortions, Gore said.

"Anybody who wants to see fewer abortions in this country ought to applaud the nomination of Dr. Henry Foster," said Gore, a former Tennessee senator. "He has devoted his life... to making that possible."

The remarks were clearly aimed at anti-abortion groups rallying against the nomination — and the lawmakers who listen. Thursday, House leaders left to label any senator voting against Foster as an opponent of legalized abortions.

Survey shows Americans naïve about protection from sexually transmitted diseases

By Lauron Neergaard

WASHINGTON — Americans don’t know their risk for sexually transmitted diseases or their chance to catch the unfaithful in the act, but that’s discouraged. Larry Mayer, president of Lawrence Investigations in Chicago, said he choke’s clients for weapons.

One woman insisted on confronting her fiancé at a hotel near an airport, where he met a girl and flew in from out of town, Mayer said.

“She knocked on the door, pretending to be room service. He opened the door, and she handed him two dead roses,” Mayer said.

Another woman accompanied Mayer to find her husband in a compromising position with his mistress. She gave her husband a big kiss, wished him a Happy Valentine’s Day and handed him a small pack, which he revealed to be “one giant, dirty rat,” Mayer recalled.

Fernandez said he doesn’t feel like he’s running relationshions on Valentine’s Day.

“Nobody likes to be deceived,” he said. “I feel like I’m helping them out.”

The survey, to be released Tuesday, found 75 percent of Americans don’t believe they could catch a sexually transmitted disease, even though doctors diagnose 12 million new cases every year.

The survey asks: Know enough to assess your risk before you decide not to worry about sexually transmitted diseases. “It’s a serious problem,” said Robert Klain of EK Consulting, which conducted the survey for pharmaceutical maker Burroughs Wellcome Co.

The survey marks the release of a new booklet, developed by a coalition of medical organizations, with explicit instructions for detecting the often hidden symptoms of sexual diseases. The government says one in four Americans may get a sexually transmitted disease, which left untreated can cause infertility or even death.

The survey of 1,000 adults attempted to assess Americans’ sex lives, but turned up contradictions that Klain says illustrate people’s “very confused feelings about sexuality.” For example, 76 percent insisted they’re in monogamous relationships — but 51 percent said they know at least four people who have more than one sexual partner in the last year.

Men reported more sex partners: 51 percent claimed six or more, compared with 25 percent of women. And 28 percent of men reported at least 11 sex partners, compared to 10 percent of women.

A fourth of those surveyed didn’t know their partner’s sexual history. And those who think they know may be wrong.

The survey said only 18 percent of women under 30 believe their partner has had sex with five other people, while 42 percent of men aged 19 and 20 believe he has had sex with 30-39 claim they have.

The survey concluded that 62 percent of the men polled and 66 percent of the women are at moderate or high risk of catching a sexually transmitted disease.

Some clients want to tag along with the private investigator to catch their cheating mate in the act, but that’s discouraged. Larry Mayer, president of Lawrence Investigations in Chicago, said he choke’s clients for weapons.

When he offered to spend Valentine’s night with his wife rather than watch the Super Bowl, she insisted that he work, saying she’d stay home and watch television.

Jim hired a private detective, who caught Jim’s wife on videotape attending a play, having sex with one of the actors and spending most of Valentine’s night at the actor’s home. The couple later divorced.

“I think I knew, but…I needed proof,” said Jim, who asked that his last name not be used. “It just put my mind at ease.”

Rebecca, a 28-year-old Miami woman, became suspicious just before last Valentine’s Day when her husband started buying clothes and getting calls for calls to unfamiliar numbers. Then her husband said he would be out of town on business on Valentine’s Day.

He didn’t leave town at all; a detective agency caught him on videotape snuggling with a younger woman as they entered a hotel room.

“I was even thinking of inviting the whole family,” she said, watching them watch the video,” Rebecca said. She filed for divorce instead.

HOW TO KEEP PEOPLE'S HANDS OFF YOUR MONEY.

1. Carry only enough cash to last the day. Anyone who tries to borrow your last five spot isn't a friend, anyway.

2. Label your spare-change jar “beetle farm.” Then, put your beetle farm in a jar labeled “spare change.”

3. Mark up every space on checks. Don't leave room for someone to fill in their name and extra zeros.

4. Keep your wallet in your front pocket. It discourages pickpockets. So does wearing really tight pants.

5. Put your picture on your credit card. A Citibank Photocard is tough for anyone else to use, unless they look just like you.

ETHNIC: Spring events planned with help of faculty and administration weekend of Open House. Open House is scheduled for April 21 and 22. Black Family Weekend involves a barbecue, scholarship awards and a step show.

Students are moving forward with help from faculty and administration.

According to Carl Wallace, director of campus student relations and Judicial Affairs, the Concerned Black Community is helping ASUU in terms of identifying students.

The Black Peer Program is helping students with the phone-a-thon to contact students by phone and help them with their decision," Wallace said.

Wallace said there are things taking place to help bring more underrepresented students to Cal Poly.

"However, students being accepted generally have a lot of choices," Wallace said. "And many are not choosing to come here."

Wallace mentioned that Cal Poly is competing with other schools such as Stanford, UC Berkeley and USC for a pool of students.

"Cal Poly is not the only big fish in the sea," Wallace said.

According to Associate Director of Admissions Walter Harris, the admissions office is concerned about reaching out to all students.

"In that, we are also interested in specific groups who tend to be underrepresented on this campus," Harris said. "We have some specific needs because our Hispanic and African-American population is really not where it needs to be."

According to Bennie Krupp of Cal Poly's Institutional Studies Office, in the fall of 1994 there were 14,292 undergraduate students at Cal Poly. Of those students, 279 were African American, 1,454 Mexican American; 639 of other Hispanic origin; 193 Native American Students and 80 Pacific Islanders. There also were 1,402 Asian students, 438 Filipinos and 348 students of non-white origin.

There were 8,404 white students, while 1,905 students chose not to respond about their ethnicity.

"Students being accepted generally have a lot of choices. And many are not choosing to come here."

Carl Wallace
Judicial Affairs director

"This is where efforts like the phone-a-thon make a difference," Harris said. "If we can get the Hispanic, African American and Native American population that is accommodated to enroll at an equal level to the Anglo population, just doing that will increase our numbers.""Harris said the ASUU will mail a letter the first week of April to African-American students who have been accepted to Cal Poly. This letter will invite students to Open House as well as Black Family Weekend.

Harris said the number of applications from underrepresented students has increased, while the number of students who actually enrolled has decreased.

And other organizations like Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan is hoping to help fix that problem.

MECHA, a Chicano student organization, also is among those groups which have decided to develop their own outreach program.

MECHA will be holding Raza Youth Day at Cal Poly this weekend. The day-long event will feature speakers and workshops to help high school students better understand the different aspects of college life.

"The reason for the conference is so we can give students an understanding of what is ahead," said architecture senior Arturo Rodriguez. "These kids don't think of the future."

According to Rodriguez, students will be coming to Cal Poly from different cities throughout California, including Los Angeles, Fresno, Bakersfield and Berkeley.

Civil engineering junior Rafael Coss mentioned the cost of the event and said in terms of financial aid, the Admissions Office helped MECHA by allowing them to use the mailing service and allowing them to make phone calls.

"We are putting this conference together with heart," Coss said.

To Coss and Rodriguez, the main problem is getting students to enroll and attend Cal Poly.

"Whose responsibility is it to get those kids out," Coss asked. "It's the responsibility of admissions."

"They have brought the students here they have to do it again," Rodriguez said another reason for Raza Youth Day is to expose students to Cal Poly. He said some students have applied to Cal Poly but have not yet decided to attend.

"They'll get exposure to college life, but especially to Cal Poly," Rodriguez said. "And that makes a big difference."

Fritz said sets some time in the middle of her presentation for audience members to interact. She asked them to share times when they really enjoyed learning something new and offer suggestions for the ideal learning environment.

The responses, all given by women, reflected a desire for environments which are open, non-threatening and interpersonal. In addition, the women said they felt most motivated when the material is relevant to their lives and when an instructor is enthusiastic about a subject.

"I'm not advocating a revolution for change in higher education," she said. Instead, Fritz said, she just wanted to raise awareness of the ways in which women learn differently than men.

"The system we're using is not wrong, it's just not the best one for both genders."

Women's Week continues through Friday with many more presentations and workshops. For more information, contact the Office of Women's Programs and Services.
