Gunshots ring out during frat dance; police investigate

A police investigation into reports of gunfire at an on-campus homecoming dance got a boost from concerned students who came forward with new information.

According to Public Safety Police Chief Tom Mitchell, campus police received a call at approximately 1:05 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 21, reporting a fight and a gunshot noise between the business building and Engineering West.

Police looked into the matter, questioning students and fraternity members of Phi Beta Sigma who sponsored the dance, which took place in building 21. But they were unable to find any evidence of a gunshot. The information they had from students at that point was secondhand, Mitchell said.

On Tuesday, police spoke to firsthand witnesses for the first time, and said that the information provided to them, which included nicknames of some people at the scene, was valuable.

"After talking to them, the puzzle fits," Mitchell said. "The help was tremendous."

The nicknames are not being released because of the ongoing investigation.

The students who came forward witnessed what they called a "small riot" while working on projects upstairs in Engineering West. The witnesses did not want to be identified in Mustang Daily for safety reasons.

According to one witness who gave a detailed account of what happened, he and a few other students heard shouting and screaming around 12:45 a.m. and he said the noise continued for about 15 minutes.

"We heard music all night, but this didn't sound normal," he said.

He and his friend walked downstairs to an area by the Business building to see what was going on.

"We have superb people. They are dramatically underpaid," Barry Munitz, CSU chancellor, said. "They are dramatically underpaid.

By contrast, new University of California President Richard Atkinson earns $241,500.

"I think we need to put our priorities in order," said Terry Jones, a Cal State Hayward student. "It's a technicality, and they have to do it," she said.

We have superb people," Munitz told trustees Tuesday.

Cal Poly students have the chance to experience another culture by studying abroad as part of the California State University (CSU) International Programs (IP).

Students who have already studied abroad are singing the praises of their experiences.

"I loved it — it was great," said Mary Da Foe, a liberal studies senior who studied in Mexico. "It was fantastic and couldn't have been better," said mechanical engineering senior Jason Stephens of his trip to Germany.

"I got to know the German culture better and met lifelong friends," he said.

Both Da Foe and Stephens went to their respective countries for one academic year and received Cal Poly credit through IP.

IP is the official study abroad program of the CSU system, said Marilyn York, coordinator of International Programs and study abroad for Cal Poly.

Cal Poly sends more students abroad than any of the other 22 CSU campuses, York said. One quarter of the students going are from Cal Poly.

Through the program, students study abroad for one year in one of 16 countries, York said.

Da Foe studied in Mexico City, where her goal was to learn to speak Spanish.

"I had taken a lot of Spanish courses, but I still couldn't speak Spanish," Da Foe said.

When she arrived in Mexico City, Da Foe was quite overwhelmed.

"I wasn't clear on how it was supposed to work," she said.

After getting off the plane, Da Foe had to find her own ride to where she would be living.

"I took a taxi and ended up paying a lot higher fare," she said.

"I didn't know a thing about peso exchange," she said.

"But as far as communication, the Mexican people were always very understanding and very patient," she said.

Stephens, who studied in Heidelberg, felt that his two years of German classes did not prepare him.

But his conversation skills improved after only a short time in Germany.

"The best part was when I finally got to the point where I could carry on a free-flowing conversation," Stephens said.

"I could sit down with a German and drink a beer and not have to use my dictionary," he said.

IP offers students many opportunities, York said. Studying abroad gives students a different outlook on the United States, she added.

"They realize the United States is not the center of the world," she said.

The cultural benefits to students are enormous, York said. One of the purposes of IP is to allow students to learn more about another culture by being completely immersed in it.

"It was much more beneficial to learn about the Mexican culture by being in Mexico," Da Foe said.

Da Foe found that Mexican families operate very differently from American families.

In Mexican families everyone talks to each other, Da Foe said.

The woman she was living with expected Da Foe to talk about what was going on in her life.

"When I didn't participate, she thought I was cold," Da Foe said. "But it was just a difference in the way our cultures do things."

When Stephens first arrived in Germany, he said he felt the German people were not friendly to foreigners.

"It was hard to get to know people," he said. "My first impression was that the people were kind of closed."

But Stephens realized that the German people are careful in choosing their friends.

"The friends they choose remain lifelong friends," he said.

One memorable experience for Stephens was moving a herd of sheep from their winter to summer home.

"We herded sheep for 10 kilometers over woods and highways," Stephens said. "We even had to stop traffic."

Students studying abroad have found that there is a big difference in the way classes are taught.

"Da Foe found the average class size in Mexico to be about 15-20 students."

"The whole idea of classes was different there," she said. "Students have close relationships with their teachers and there is a constant discussion in class rather than a lecture."

Stephens found that classes in Germany were quite different from those he was used to at Cal Poly.

"Most classes didn't have final exams and you only had to turn in one or two or four to five-page papers," he said.

The witness said he heard a gunshot and saw students running across Duster Lawn.

"We ran back to our lab, looked the door and turned out the lights," he said.

Another witness said he heard a gunshot while walking from the parking lot to the math building.

"I can when I heard it," he said. "I didn't want to get involved.

He then immediately called campus police to report the gunfire, but to no avail.

Although the new witnesses have confirmed hearing the gunfire, none were able to confirm seeing it happen.

Director of Student Life and Activities Ken Barclay said that although the fraternity had filled off supplies late Saturday night and saw that another dance was going on.

"It was unbelievably loud," he said. "If you had that party in town, the police would be there.

Another concern was that the noise was disrupting the study environment for students in the labs.

"The classroom was not supposed to be for social dances," he said. "It was supposed to be used for dance club practices.

Although at least 20 dances have been held in the building in the last five years, Barclay said this is the first he's heard of it.

"I didn't know there was any social dancing going on," he said. "I found out because of this incident.

Asked if he thinks people in this organization tried to help out these organizations, he said, "But it's an inappropriate place for anything that happened.

No more dances will be held in building 21, according to Barclay.

The bottom line is that it was a mistake and that it's not going to happen again," he said.

"The fraternity was not responsible for anything that happened," he said. "I found out because of this story.

It was supposed to be for social dances," he said.

"The place for a dance is not a building," he said.

The application process alone can take up to a year.

A year later, a 90-minute interview takes place.

Four letters of recommendation, background checks and a nomination to an open position must all be completed and reviewed before volunteers are on their way to a foreign land.

"I tell a lot of students to apply early in their senior year if they want to go shortly after graduation, Valkusek said.

Robert Klemm and his wife, Shannon, are two recently graduated students who are currently in the application process.

Robert explained why now is the perfect time for them to volunteer.

"We can do it now, with no family, no kids and no career yet," he said.

Once selected for a position, the Peace Corps takes care of lodging, furnishing and supplies.

They are not always comparable with the way Americans are used to living, but they serve the purpose, Robert said.

"It may be someone else's home or just a little hut," he said.

"You could live by candle with no running water. Every spot is different and until you are chosen, you are not fully told what will happen."

Every volunteer chooses serves two years in a foreign land and are given one month to do what they please while they are there.

The two years can be cut short if medical or political problems arise, Robert said. There is also a chance a program can be dropped due to complications, he said.

There is no salary provided during the tour of duty, but the Peace Corps does contribute $200 each month to an account held in the United States. It is accessible to volunteers at the end of the tour.

Cal Poly is unique because it is the only campus in California that has a Peace Corps recruiting center on site. Valkusek said last year, about 36 students applied through the center.

"Faculty here are so open to recruiting presentations in their class," she said, and many professors were volunteers themselves, making it easier to attract volunteers.

AMTRAK CALIFORNIA TO AND FROM SCHOOL HAS ITS ADVANTAGES.

When it's time for a weekend trip home or a break from school, take Amtrak California!

The trains of California, and connecting shuttle buses, can take you just about anywhere in the state, without the hassle of driving. Whether it's no easier or more economical way to get there and back.

Aboard the train you can sit back and relax, catch up on homework, have a snack, or just listen to some good music. The trains are comfortable, and never worry about room to haul your stuff.

Check out the super low roundtrip fares from San Luis Obispo aboard either Amtrak California’s daily Santa Maria or San Juan Capistrano. And with Amtrak’s new Student Advantage card, it's more affordable than ever! Annual enrollment in Student Advantage is only $29 and you'll receive a 15% discount on our already low fares every time you ride Amtrak.

So, next time take the train to the ultimate trip home, or for a major break from school.

"Objective" only when racist editor

Why does ethnicity matter? When you chose to reveal the ethnicity of a man who attacked a UPS truck, how did this help the reader understand the story more? His ethnicity was not crucial to the story if you motivation was simply to report the fact. I ask, "What is your motivation?"

Why would you feel that the ethnicity of this man merits its own paragraph? Upon reading the article I was outraged by the lone paragraph, "... Randolph, an African-American, screamed wildly and thrusted around." I was furious with the implied image of a madman, a crazed animal who articulated the clearest validation of words to dehumanize a group of people and the inclusion of ethnicity while the story's content was largely unattractive and negative. As time went on the furor faded, and I began to entertain the thought that perhaps this was nothing more than a journalistic piece that offered the facts. He is an African-American.

But Oct. 31 I scanned through the Mustang Daily and found an article titled "Poly student's tragedy turns to triumph." Not to my surprise it is highlighting someone I know...an African-American woman. I read through the positive, inspiring article, the piece of history that was being revealed, "She is the first Cal Poly student to win in the award's eight-year history," and nowhere it was mentioned that she is an African-American student.

If your only agenda is to report "facts" and Mr. Randolph's being African-American was necessary fact to include in the article about Alice Brooks? Unnecessary because the wonder is that one African-American student will win in the award. The Cal Poly Plan affects student fees and enrollment, and the university's accountability to state and federal regulations.

Officials involved directed with the plan say that student job placement after graduation is often contingent upon the reputation of the university from which they received their degree. Cal Poly's current reputation allows 71 percent of the graduates to get a full-time job within the first year after graduation. The Cal Poly Plan directly affects the university's future reputation, whether most of the institution's current students will be looking for jobs.

When fee increases occur, students inevitably funnel their energy into fruitless bitching sessions among themselves.

Although the plan affects all students, lower division students will be affected most by the plan in many areas.

Financially: The plan proposes a 20 to 60 percent fee increase. Students could pay an additional $150 to $300 a quarter. This fee pay for anything that students suggest at forums or through surveys. The plan's steering committee has discussed everything from more course offerings to longer leisure hours.

To cover the fee increase, particularly during summer quarter, the plan aims to offer more financial aid opportunities. But so far in the committee's discussions, these scenarios have depended on the unstable state and federal budgets.

Enrollment growth: Inevitably, the number of students on campus will grow. If the results do not seem immediate, students dismiss opportunities to make something happen, rather than just letting it happen to them.

When fee increases occur, students inevitably funneled their energy into fruitless bitching sessions among themselves. But the political process will be unsympathetic because it offered countless ways for students to get information about the plan. Do not sit back silently and let campus elite make decisions without average student input. The plans offers some harsh realities—increased fees, enrollment and less accountability to current regulations.

Officials are giving students the ability to determine the future of Cal Poly. In this plan, students have the power. Here are some ways to get involved in a plan that will permanently change Cal Poly.

College forums to discuss the Cal Poly Plan are open to students, faculty and staff are scheduled as follows:

- Science and Math: Thursday, Nov. 9 at 11 a.m., science building, room B-5
- Business: Monday, Nov. 13 at 11 a.m., building 8, room 123
- Engineering: Tuesday, Nov. 14 at 11 a.m., building 8, room 123
- University Center for Teacher Education: Wednesday, Nov. 15 at 4 p.m., building 3, room 123
- Architecture: Thursday, Nov. 15 at 11 a.m., architecture gallery
- Liberal Arts: Monday, Nov. 20 at 4 p.m., Fisher Science, room 286

POWELL: "...this is the right decision for me."

By Alan From
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Scoffing at veto threats, Republicans began pushing a bill through the House on Wednesday that would avert a government shutdown and labored to craft another measure intended to forestall a first-ever federal default.

The government's ability to spend and borrow money expires next week, and the two measures would continue each activity into next month, though with restrictions.

But with the long-running fight over GOP plans to balance the budget by 2002 as a back­ powell said he had no plans to endorse a presidential candidate, setting him apart from other Republicans next year. A multidimensional from his wildly successful autobiography and 1996 speaking fees, Powell said he would put into educational and charity work, enterprise and advocate for public schools and other minorities.

"I believe I can help the party of Lincoln move once again closer to the spirit of Lincoln," he said.

In another sign of his awkward transition from soldier to author to prominent Republican, Powell would not promise to back the 1996 GOP nominee, saying he wanted to watch the campaign unfold.

In the short term, Powell's decision was seen as a boon to Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, whose position as the GOP front-runner would have been improved by a Powell candidacy. The decision came amid some evidence that conservatives wary of Powell were rallying to Dole's side.

Hours before Powell's announcement, Dole was endorsed by New Hampshire Gov. Steve Mesmill, adding strength to an already deep Dole campaign team in the first primary state. And a new Time-CNN poll of Republicans indicated Dole's support had increased, and Powell's slipped a bit, over the last month, as attention focused on Powell.

"I am pleased that General Powell has found a home in the Republican Party," Dole said. "I will actively seek his advice, and counsel as we work to bring our people together, broaden the appeal of our party and move our nation forward."

White House aides also breathed a sigh of relief. At this early stage of the polls showed Powell easily beating Clinton in a head­ to-head matchup, something none of the GOP candidates could do.

new conference at a suburban Washington hotel, with his wife, Alma, standing at his side. "It was not reached easily or without a great deal of personal anguish. For me and my family, saying so was even harder than saying yes," Alma Powell confirmed she was adamantly opposed to a candidacy and worried about her husband's safety. Those fears were heightened by last week's assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, but Powell said he was already learning against running by then.

Powell said the concerns of his family "had to be uppermost in my mind" but that the overriding factor in his decision was that he did not born with the desire to run for president.

He acknowledged he might be walking away from a chance to make history as the nation's first black president. Just the prospect, he said, was proof of America's progress in a time of considerable racial tensions.

Powell's declared rivals rushed to suggest they would benefit from his exit because Republicans dissatisfied with Dole would now have to look down an alternative.

Democrats saw gain for their side as well. "We've dodged the big bullet," said one Clinton aide.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — An American reporter held by Bosnian Serb rebels for nearly three weeks was freed Wednesday in the city of Srebrenica, where in serb leader Radovan Karadzic ordered all military garrisons to help support peace talks.

David Rohde, the Christian Science Monitor's special correspondent and an American reporter, was returned to Yugoslavia, freed by the Bosnian Serb army. Rohde, 32, was freed on Wednesday as part of an agreement to ease tensions between the Serb army and NATO forces.

Rohde, the senior correspondent for the Monitor, had been held since August 1995 in the Bosnian city of Srebrenica. He was kidnapped by Bosnian Serb rebels in a raid on the city of Srebrenica, which was under United Nations protection. Rohde was caught in the crossfire between Serb and NATO forces.

Rohde was returned to the United States on Wednesday, according to a statement from the Monitor. The Monitor said Rohde was transferred to a hospital in Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and that he was in good condition.

Rohde was arrested by Bosnian Serb forces on August 22, 1995, after being kidnapped while covering the war in Bosnia. He was held for nearly three weeks before being returned to Yugoslavia.

Rohde's release comes as part of a broader effort to improve relations between the United States and Bosnia-Herzegovina. The United States has been trying to negotiate a peace agreement between the Serb and Bosnian governments.

Rohde has covered the war in Bosnia for the Monitor since 1992. He has written extensively about the conflict and has been one of the few Western journalists to report from the front lines.

Rohde's release is likely to be welcomed by both the United States and Bosnia-Herzegovina. The United States has been a key player in the effort to negotiate a peace agreement in the region, and Rohde's return is likely to be seen as a positive development.

Most of us at Cal Poly didn't come to San Luis Obispo for the excellent skiing conditions. The Central Coast's mild summers, rainy winters and low elevation don't make much for good snow conditions, let alone ski slopes. That's why many are surprised when they find out that Cal Poly's Ski Club is one of the biggest ski clubs in the nation.

"We have over 700 members right now," said Scott Swenson, the Ski Club's current president. "We're still getting members, too. The numbers fluctuate from year to year."

Ski Club membership has exceeded 1,000 students in past years, Swenson said. That's more students than the number enrolled in Cal Poly's crop science, industrial technology, electronic engineering, liberal studies and biochemistry departments combined.

Poet Carol Muske to bring festival images, intensity
By Donna Hildes
Daily Staff Writer

A woman who feels deeply and expresses her intensity through strikingly vivid, sometimes shocking images — this is poet Carol Muske, keynote speaker for the Nov. 10 session of the Poetry Festival in San Luis Obispo.

Muske, who received her master's degree in English/creative writing from California State University at San Francisco, is a featured reader at the San Luis Obispo County Library and other locations throughout the county.

Muske's writing is commonly compared to Emily Dickinson and her poetry of the 1800s. She is not considered a cynical modern-day feminist but she does express definite attitudes in her poems and works of fiction about life as a woman in a male-dominated society.

Muske, unlike Muske, never married or raised a child, so she wrote of the world with remarkable wisdom for one who rejected traditional women's roles.

Muske lives in L.A. with her husband, actor David Dukes, and their 11-year-old daughter, giving her a different perspective of a woman's life.

Muske's poems give more "detail and texture," Clark said, while Dickinson makes use of larger things "like religion and death."

Muske's poetry is described as "original, surreal, bizarre and utterly engaging." Dickinson's "slant of light" and "talk from the grave" prompt similar adjectives, though her material must have come from imagination while Muske's comes from raw life experience.

Muske has won numerous awards, including the Dylan Thomas Poetry Award, the Alice Fay di Castagnola award from the Poetry Society of America, and three Pushcart prizes. She also received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and a John Simon Guggenheim Fellowship.

She has published several books of poetry, including "Camouflage," "Wynndire" and "Applause." Her most recent publication is "Red Trumad." Two of her novels are being considered for movie films and she is currently working on a collection of critical essays and reviews to be published in the Poets on Poetry Series.

Muske is a featured reader at the University of Southern California and her work has appeared in such publications as the New Yorker, The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, Brave American Poetry and many others.

And now Muske's work will reach the Central Coast and help them in the end. The money raised by the Poetry Festival goes to the Literary Council whose funds support 13 learning centers throughout the county serving over 1,100 adult learners annually.

Muske's featured reading will take place in the San Luis Obispo Library Community Room, 965 Palm St., on Friday, Nov. 10 at 1 p.m. Student admission is $5, general public is $7.50 and includes a copy of the featured reading. Bareiss, whose exhibit is entitled "Structural Illusions: A Challenge to Perception," has assembled a collection of illusory sculpture meant to challenge visual perceptions. All of the sculptures are columns or stacked blocks that may appear to be leaning or distorted, depending on the position of the viewer. Many are placed on rotating bases so that they appear to twist and lean in fluid motion.

The columns, which are structurally sound enough to be used as architectural details, have also been featured in Kim Stanley Robinson's science fiction works Red Mars and Green Mars.

College students utter the words, "I'll have a burger, fries and a Coke," weekly — perhaps daily — all over San Luis Obispo. Although The Avenue or the Lighthouse may be acceptable to some students, others prefer to venture out of the confines of Cal Poly.

One popular restaurant among many students is Hudson's Grill on Monterey Street. One in the chain of 12, the San Luis Obispo has been in the same location for approximately 10 years, has been very successful and is known for its hamburgers.

"To come here on average two to three times a month," said Cuesta sophomore Angela Rudy. However, in such a fierce marketplace, it takes only slight competition to make things difficult.

Two new restaurants have recently opened, putting a slight strain on Hudson's Grill. Applebee's Grill and Bar, located on Madonna Road, has been open for just over a month and has attracted many customers. A large variety of food, including a low-fat section, daily specials and happy hours are available. The restaurant is quite pleased with the result, said manager Michelle Afzali.

Although burger and fries are a popular choice, the BBQ ribs and salmon sandwich are a crowd favorite. Besides a full bar, another great addition to Firestone is their outdoor seating.

And the restaurant stays open until the crowd starts to die down, including the bar area. However, the bar and restaurant will always stay open until 11 p.m. no matter how many patrons there are, Orman said. All types of patrons have been dining there, he said.

"I love the food at Firestone and Applebee's, however, I feel Hudson's is going down the tube," said civil engineering junior Alian Shackleton. "The quality and service are going down.

All three restaurants have their own unique touch to make it a successful restaurant. So, if burgers, fries and a coke is your taste, one of these three choices will inevitably have something for your liking."

"We serve nothing but quality and our prices are very reasonable," Afzali said.

Cal Poly students seem to be enjoying the new restaurant. "It's a very lively atmosphere and the service is attentive," said political science senior Deana Harder. "It helps that more than one person is working on it; it makes you feel appreciated."

A second restaurant that just arrived is Firestone Grill, located on Higuera.

Owner David Billingsly named the restaurant after Firestone Tires that was previously located there. Firestone Grill has been open for just over a month. From 9-10 am. SKI: Members' annual trip heads to Colorado

This year, members are going to Telluride, Colo. from Dec. 9 through Dec. 16. The cost of the trip is $369 per member.

Swenson said this trip should be as much fun as last year's trip to Whistler, Canada. "Whistler was great," said Danno Jacobson, a Ski Club member and Cal Poly graduate student. "During the day we hit the slopes. At night we danced to the beat of the bands playing in Telluride's main street saloons."

Other events planned for the Telluride trip include a pub crawl for the 21 and-over crowd, a blowout party, a ski party, an ice skating party and Nastar racing, followed by a race party. Many Ski Club members also get four or five days of top-notch skiing and snowboarding, followed by a race party. "Our number one goal is providing a friendly and social atmosphere," Swenson said. "We welcome skiers, snowboarders, and those who just want to partake in these events."

Many members get restless in snowless San Luis Obispo in the spring, Swenson said. That's why the Ski Club is planning another trip for spring break. "I can't tell where we're going, though," Swenson said. "It's a secret."

No doubt that the Spring quarter trip will have the same kind of charm and fun that made the Ski Club the nationally-known organization that it is today — even if San Luis Obispo is hundreds of miles from the world's best skiers and snowboarders. Swenson said the Ski Club was looking for a way to indulge in the Ski Club's activities, "and we were given an opportunity to travel around the world, which is set up daily from 11 a.m. to noon in the University Union Plaza. A football player with spirit, heart

Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Sometimes Luke Zimmermann struggles to put on his helmet. Sometimes he drops the ball. But his teammates say the heart he gives them is worth any number of victories.

“I don’t think the team would be whole without him,” said reserve quarterback Ben Gileburn.

Luke, 16, has Down’s syndrome. The 5-foot-6, 130-pound tailback has taken his place on the field for only four plays and has never touched the ball, except in practice.

But his spirit and his rising locker room speeches are credited with helping the Beverly Hills High School varsity team to a season with eight wins and only one loss.

“The players will be thinking about X’s and O’s, but not thinking about heart,” Gileburn said. “He’ll say something and we’ll say, ‘He’s right!’ and the mood lifts. We need him there.”

Down’s syndrome children are severely retarded and usually never get beyond the age of mentally.

In Beverly Hills, most go to special classes where they learn the basics of such as how to order restaurant meals, ride the bus or use a pay telephone.

But Luke graduated from a regular eighth grade and was allowed to attend regular classes at Beverly Hills High. Although they are tailored to provide him extra attention. In a homeroom class two years ago, the avid football fan became friends with team captain Eric Lipschutz.

“Payi” said, “Coach, we really want you to consider letting the tailback play.”

Payinger recalled: “And we sat down and talked for a few minutes, and, you know, he was a great kid.”

Luke became the non-playing manager, although he worked out at practices. He first asked to speak to the team after another friend, Andrew Foriska, caught a victory-touchdown pass with about a minute to play in a game against South Torrance.

“Luke got up and he gives this Kante Roexen kind of speech, man, and the kids are all cheering afterward, and he’s high-flying everybody after he’s done and everything,” Payinger said with a laugh.

“Everyone was mad we didn’t sprout,” said mother, Susan Zimmermann.

But he is far more than a token player.

“When Luke walks down the halls during school he’s seen as a person,” Payinger said.

In a recent game, the announcement of his name and his No. 51 prompted the crowd to stand and cheer. “Luke! Luke!”

Some students wept. Luke is devoted to the team that he may cry at defenses.

“He takes every loss like it’s the end of the year — very distraught, very upset,” the coach said. “And when we win, he can walk around, look at his chest out and be proud. I think it’s a big inspiration for these guys. I really do.”

Medal of Honor given 50 years later

By Michelle Liski

Associated Press

BUSA, Calif. — George Livingston remembers being a kid of 11 when he heard that his uncle had died fighting to take a French town from the Germans in World War II.

“We were all over at my grandmother’s house,” he said. “I cried for days because it was really sad.”

Later, he discovered a second cause for regret. His uncle, Staff Sgt. Ruben Rivers, of the all-black 761st Tank Battalion, had been recommended for a Medal of Honor, but never received it.

In fact, none of the more than one million blacks who served in World War II was awarded the Medal of Honor, the nation’s highest military decoration for valor, although blacks have received the medal for other conflicts, including the Civil War.

Now, more than 50 years later, Livingston is among a small group of people hoping to see Rivers recognized.

“To see, it’s injustice,” Livingston said. “Those individuals gave their all in order to help this country become the land of the free and the home of the brave and that’s the kind of inhumane treatment you get.”

Rivers, who was killed in action in France in 1944, was posthumously推荐 for the Medal of Honor, a recommendation he had declined.

George Miller, an army historian, has been recommended a bill that would waive the 1952 law that bars blacks from receiving Medals of Honor.

The bill has more than 100 co-sponsors and is supported by Sen. Jim Inhofe, a Republican from Rivers home state of Oklahoma.

“Something needs to be done to right the historic wrong,” said Bir Zerka, an aide to Martin, a Democrat.

Meanwhile, a Shaw University study of the deaths of black Medal of Honor recipients in World War II has recommended that the nation honor the contributions of more than 100 other black soldiers, be considered for the honor.

Rivers died in November 1944, while his unit was trying to take a French town from the Germans in World War II. But there were black combat units in World War II, such as the 761st.

Gibran said there was “very strong evidence” that racism played a role in the fact that no black soldier was awarded a Medal of Honor for World War II.

“Racism was alive. It was very strong,” he said.

The Shaw report recommended that those black soldiers who were given the Distinguished Service Cross be upgraded to the Medal of Honor.

The study has made its way through various offices, and the military is in the process of setting up a Decorations Board to take up the recommendations.

In another effort, historian and black World War II veteran Leroy Ramsey of Albany, N.Y., is championing the cases of two black servicemen — Sgt. Henry Johnson, who fought in World War II, and Sgt. Private Miller of Waco, Texas, who fought in World War I.

One medal has been awarded since Ramsey began his campaign — to Army Cpl. Freddie Shaw University study on the issue for the Army.

TEL AVIV, Israel — Suspects in last Wednesday's assassination of Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin thought to be a friend of Amir, a 25-year-old religious seminary student who has confessed to killing Rabin, is under custody.

The new suspect, Avishai Raviv, head of the militant right-wing group Eyad, appeared before a magistrate Wednesday and was ordered held for seven days. Police are investigating whether he knew in advance about Yigal Amir's plans to kill Rabin.

Amir, who has confessed to the shooting, and his older brother, Hagai, are already under arrest.

"This is a political investigation! This is a dictatorship!" Peres — who as foreign minister was widely seen as the main visionary of peace — might try to kill Rabin.

"We must not hesitate to use all the means at our disposal against people indulging in incitement, the instigators and those who pull the trigger," he said.

There were indications that Amir — who as foreign minister was widely seen as the main visionary of peace — might try to kill Rabin.

"This is a political investigation! This is a dictatorship!" Raviv shouted as guards brought him into Tel Aviv's Magistrate Court. He was arraigned Monday night.

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates' board voted Wednesday to end its 15-month search for a new owner by selling the team to California businessman Kevin McClatchy, but only after he raises more equity and formalizes a deal for a new stadium.

McClatchy, who at 32 would be the majors' youngest owner, was approved by baseball's ownership committee Tuesday, and he expected to sign a final purchase agreement Wednesday.

But, adhering strictly to baseball's 2-to-1 debt-to-equity ratio, the Pirates' board asked McClatchy to raise within 30 days an additional $9 million to $10 million in equity. He already has $41 million in cash, plus five of the current owners shares' representing $12.5 million in equity.

One owner who is not joining the group, who asked not to be identified, said he was comfortable with McClatchy's $85 million buyout.

"It's OK with baseball, it's OK with us," he said.

However, the board still wasn't ready to sign off on the deal, the Pirates' board asked McClatchy to sign an agreement guaranteeing that financing for a new baseball-only stadium will be in place within three years, not the four years McClatchy previously negotiated.

McClatchy, rather than firming up the sales agreement, McClatchy's attorney issued a memo to Tuesday baseball reserves the right to disapprove final terms of the transaction. The sale must be approved by 10 of the 14 NL owners and eight of the 14 AL owners, with a vote expected at the owners' January meeting.

But even if McClatchy must raise more money, the stadium issue already is close to being resolved.

Mayer Tom Murphy told the Pirates' board he would compromise by moving up the completion date for the stadium from three years, thereby allowing construction to begin by 1999. Previously, McClatchy's stadium lease called for four years for financing and a fifth year for construction to begin.

An even quicker timetable previously was suggested by major league baseball: two years for financing, and another two for construction, but baseball appears comfortable with the revised terms.

"We're excited we've reached a reasonable solution for moving ahead on the stadium," Murphy said. "But the whole region, not just the city, needs to be involved."

But while Gov. Tom Ridge supports a new stadium and will soon appoint a task force to develop funding for new sports complexes, it is unlikely that Allegheny County will ante up any money.

The Democrats' 60-year hold on the three-member Allegheny county commission ended in Tuesday's general election as Republicans gained a 2-to-1 edge. Newly elected Republican commissioner Bob Cranmer quickly made clear he opposes the new ballpark.

"There will be no discussion on the issue," Cranmer said.

However, the commissioners' opposition may not necessarily derail the new ballpark that Murphy calls Forbes Field II. Stadium financing projects nationwide have gradually moved away from taxpayer-supported funding to more creative, varied methods: stadium seat licensing, lottery games, airport ticket taxes or "sin taxes" on liquor and cigarettes.

Miami Dolphins quarterback Dan Marino, who was initially identified as an investor but was not on McClatchy's final list, said he still may join. Marino grew up in Pittsburgh and started at Pitt.

"I know they're still trying to put the deal together," Marino said. "I've got to wait and see what Kevin and his group, what is all finalized...and then see what my involvement would be."

"We've had good practices, I think everyone's fired up and ready to go," he added. "I don't feel intimidated and personally, I think if we play up to our capabilities, we'll beat them."

Gartner looked forward to this game when they scheduled it in the spring of last year. "We hoped it would come down to this, and now it's happening," Gartner said. "Since Santa Clara is one of the best teams in the country, I think if we beat them, we should be invited to the playoffs. In some ways it's a playoff game."

"We stay with the all-out attack, hopefully it will go our way. We play organized defense, we don't give up a lot of chances," explained Murray. "The game will be very fast-paced. It was a good game last year, and I expect a similar game this year."

Cal Poly will create a lot of chances, we'll have to rely a lot upon our goalkeeper, Joe Canno," Murray said. "It's going to come down to which team gets their hands on the ball and can do something with it."

The Mustangs have the personnel to reach the playoffs in Gartner's opinion.

The game will be a contradiction in styles. This season the Mustangs have scored 37 goals to the Broncos 28. Clay Harty will look to break Rhichon Henderson's Division I single-season scoring record. Harty is currently tied with Henderson, with 15 goals to date.

Murray feels the game will be a great game for the fans to see. "We play organized defense, we don't give up a lot of chances," explained Murray. "The game will be very fast-paced. It was a good game last year, and I expect a similar game this year."

IN THE HOUSE

Stop the whining and suck it up those tears. Cal Poly didn’t get what it deserved.

When the women’s soccer team heard of its rejection to the NCAA playoffs, eyes opened wide and mouths dropped to the floor in astonishment.

Cal Poly accumulated a 15-3-1 record only to be shot down by the NCAA Selection Committee last Monday.

Members of the committee said that Cal Poly’s schedule was the major factor in their decision.

The same response was given to Cal Poly last year. The Mustangs comprised a 14-3-1 record, but a weak schedule filled with a few Division II and III teams. Understandable.

This year, Coach Alex Crenner said he headed up the schedule.

Ah, I don’t think so.

The combined win total of Cal Poly’s opponents is 128-177-18.

Not too impressive of a schedule.

Cal Poly pulled off a couple big wins against the University of San Diego and UC Irvine, but disappointing losses to San Diego State and the University of Oregon shadowed the Mustangs.

Five teams were picked from the western region; Stanford (17-0-2), UCLA (14-3-2), Santa Clara (14-3-2) and Washington (11-7).

Cal Poly was in the consideration pool along with Cal State Fullerton (14-5), University of Oregon (13-5-3) and San Diego State (13-5-3).

Cal Poly lost to San Francisco, 1-0, and San Diego State, 2-0.

If the selection committee was going to pick another school, it would have picked Cal Poly — even though it had a better record than most teams.

It’s simply too easy to come to that conclusion. Like the committee said, looking at head-to-head competitions, Cal Poly loses ground.

Until Cal Poly strengthens its record, everybody can forget about the playoffs.

Cal Poly must stop wasting its money to play Gonzaga University (12-18-0) in Spokane, Wash. and start playing consistently respectable women’s soccer programs.

How about Stanford or Portland? Even if Cal Poly drops a close one to those teams it would probably help them, rather than hurt.

A loss or even a close game to a sufficient program would make Cal Poly squeak by 2-1 in bad weather conditions — hurts the Mustangs.

The women’s team had an outstanding season once again. But that is the way the soccer ball bounces in Division I.

It is not politics, just some simple math.

The men’s soccer team faces off with Santa Clara University this Saturday.

The game will most likely determine its future and Head Coach Wolfgang Gartner now it’s...

By Greg Manifold

Daly Daily Staff

The Cal Poly men’s soccer team will be without the services of midfielder Scott Holmes when they play Santa Clara this Saturday.

Holmes received his fifth yellow card of the season during Sunday’s 2-1 victory over the University of California, Irvine (UCI).

There is also a distinct possibility that Cal Poly will also be without the services of midfielder Scott Hutchon, who may be academically ineligible.

Hutchon recently returned to the team after a knee injury sidelined him for much of the season.

Cal Poly Coach Wolfgang Gartner thought the possible loss of two players will give the team a different look.

“If we lose both players, we would lose the muscle of the midfield. We have other players that will fill those positions, they just play a different style,” Gartner said.

Holmes received the yellow card early in the first half when he was running back on defense. He came within the 10 yards allotted around a free kick and the referee then instantly yellow carded him for encroachment.

Under NCAA rules, a player who receives five yellow cards during a season is ineligible for one game.

“At this last stage, the referee knows the rule about cumulative yellow cards,” Gartner said.

“Referees don’t hand out yellow cards like cookies, unless you see someone that really needs a card,” Gartner added.

Fischmann also received a red card after the UCI gave up questioning the yellow card with the referee.

The ramifications of the red card are still unknown to the Mustangs, as they await a ruling.

Making only seven for 25 shots, the Mustangs looked surprisingly good on the court, shooting 46 percent, making 15 for 28 shots and committing only seven turnovers.

By halftime, Cal Poly found itself close behind the Mustangs at 36-21.

The second half was a completely different story, and game, for the Mustangs.

Making only seven for 25 shots, Cal Poly added 16 points to its scoreboard, while the Mustangs dropped 31 more points on the scoreboard, taking the game.

Cal Poly next hosts the Race Express Exhibition Nov. 19, and the action begins at 4 p.m. in Matt Gym. The Mustangs start their regular season play Dec. 9 against Fresno State.

Cal Poly lost to San Francisco, 1-0, and San Diego State, 2-0.

If the selection committee was going to pick another school, it would have picked Cal Poly — even though it had a better record than most teams.

It’s simply too easy to come to that conclusion. Like the committee said, looking at head-to-head competitions, Cal Poly loses ground.

Until Cal Poly strengthens its record, everybody can forget about the playoffs.

Cal Poly must stop wasting its money to play Gonzaga University (12-18-0) in Spokane, Wash. and start playing consistently respectable women’s soccer programs.

How about Stanford or Portland? Even if Cal Poly drops a close one to those teams it would probably help them, rather than hurt.

A loss or even a close game to a sufficient program would make Cal Poly squeak by 2-1 in bad weather conditions — hurts the Mustangs.

The women’s team had an outstanding season once again. But that is the way the soccer ball bounces in Division I.

It is not politics, just some simple math.

Making only seven for 25 shots, the Mustangs looked surprisingly good on the court, shooting 46 percent, making 15 for 28 shots and committing only seven turnovers.

By halftime, Cal Poly found itself close behind the Mustangs at 36-21.

The second half was a completely different story, and game, for the Mustangs.

Making only seven for 25 shots, Cal Poly added 16 points to its scoreboard, while the Mustangs dropped 31 more points on the scoreboard, taking the game.

Cal Poly next hosts the Race Express Exhibition Nov. 19, and the action begins at 4 p.m. in Matt Gym. The Mustangs start their regular season play Dec. 9 against Fresno State.

The combined win total of Cal Poly’s opponents is 128-177-18.

Not too impressive of a schedule.

Cal Poly pulled off a couple big wins against the University of San Diego and UC Irvine, but disappointing losses to San Diego State and the University of Oregon shadowed the Mustangs.

Five teams were picked from the western region; Stanford (17-0-2), UCLA (14-3-2), Santa Clara (14-3-2) and Washington (11-7).

Cal Poly was in the consideration pool along with Cal State Fullerton (14-5), University of Oregon (13-5-3) and San Diego State (13-5-3).
