Structure fire destroys house and kills local resident

By Matt Berger

A residential fire plowed through a San Luis Obispo home Sunday morning, killing one resident and destroying the structure.

The fire, at 239 Ramona, was reported to San Luis Obispo City Fire Department at approximately 9:28 a.m. Police would not confirm the name of the victim at press time, but according to neighbors, her name was Kathleen Smiley.

San Luis Obispo resident Kirk Endres was driving by when he noticed the fire.

"I was driving down the street and saw a big black cloud," Endres said. "I got out of my car and went to call the fire department."

"Not only did we have a fire problem, but also a rescue. We made the choice to deal with the fire first for fear of spreading," Endres said.

The fire department broke through the rear door of the house and entered the first room which was clear of smoke, Grenick said.

"The next room was completely messy," he added.

Two more engines were called on the scene to assist. The second crew, engine one from the station located at Pismo and Garden, arrived and took charge of rescuing the resident.

"We forced entry through the front door and there was heavy black smoke 1 to 2 feet from the floor," said firefighter Bob Rutledge, who was part of the second fire crew.

Panel discusses issues faced by many black students at Cal Poly after second-time DUI offender

When fire crews arrived at the scene, they assessed the emergency and were notified by neighbors that there might be someone inside the house.

"There was a heavy amount of smoke but no flames coming from the rear of the garage," said Capt. Erik Grenick of fire station two. "Not only did we have a fire problem, but also a rescue."

"We made the choice to deal with the fire first for fear of spreading."

CULTURE SHOCK: Racial injustices. Academics. African-American students, faculty and staff met Friday night to discuss the issues that many black students face at Cal Poly.

This is a night for us to come together to learn and also to get to know each other," said Ar-Darious McDonald, a journalism senior.

The group of about 20 people discussed issues ranging from the culture shock that many black students experience at Poly, to how students should participate in their academic community.

Kevin Rome, a specialist in Housing and Residential Life, said one of his jobs is to help provide a safe environment for students. However, this year has been a big challenge for him.

"This year we have had a higher number of reported racial incidents," Rome said.

Although it has been difficult to identify those who participate in the incidents, he said they have been able to enforce their "human dignity policy," which states that all students deserve respect.

Rome, who also completed his graduate work at Poly, said he came here to encourage more black students to attend Poly.

"I wanted to go to Poly to show other black students they can make it. They can go wherever they want," Rome said.

Roy Haynes, who has been an adviser for the minority engineering program for 10 years, encouraged students to always aim for graduate school in their academic career at Poly.

"You never know if you want to go to graduate school. You have to be prepared for graduate school if you choose that path," Haynes said. "You have to be resourceful and do research to get into graduate school. But most importantly, whatever you choose to do, you have to be prepared."

The victim was 'unresponsive and pulseless'.

"We found her at the back door, unresponsive and pulseless," he said.

"Firefighters removed the woman from the house and attempted to revive her with CPR. She was not revived on-scene, according to Rutledge."

Guns and whacked logic
by Dave Demers
Feb. 16, 1996
I have no problem acknowledging that some of my friends scare the hell out of people. It's just an exterior thing. They're the friendliest and safest people I know. At least mostly. I am now scared of one of my friends and I don't like it.

Jacob has never been an emotionally stable person (ahem, bipolar disorder, and he knows it). I'd often think I was much danger of going over the edge. Until this afternoon. We were just having lunch, talking about music and school and life in general. I said I was just今年 over standard You. What the hell is he doing with that thing?!! Then I say to Jake. He went on about protecting himself and how dangerous things are out there. I didn't buy a word of it. After a few minutes I began to compose myself and desist from running into the nearest convenience store.

The synonym for gun has to be coward. Operating a gun is far less complicated than using a remote control. A gun has only one button: kill.

I liken a gun owner to a recovering alcoholic. Hiding behind a gun isn't really much different from hiding behind a bottle. A drug hides behind a bottle because it's a way of averting reality. A gun owner hides behind a gun either as a way of coping with paranoia or as a way to deal with inadequacies. Both the owner and alcoholic are cowards.

I have no idea what to do about Jake. I asked some of my other friends about it and they seem concerned but also don't seem very anxious about doing anything about it. At least mostly. I am now scared of one of my friends.

Maybe this is a sign to move on to my life. I mainly hang out with the heavy metal group just to annoy my parents. They never really liked my music to begin with (and I'd give them a reason to hate it. Kind of whacked logic, I know, but I was only 16 — what do you expect?) I still maintain ties with that group because I know that if it comes to a shootout I'd remember where I came from. And some of those folks have done more for me than I can ever repay. It would be weird and painful for me to just pull the off slash-and-burn trick. I like to think I am loyal to my friends. I don't know; I'm sick of thinking about it and this journal is already heavy-handed as it is. Unfortunately, I don't have any other friends.

Editor,

I am writing in response to Mr. Wetzel's letter concerning the headline "Ignorant..." Obviously, Mr. Wetzel did not spend the time thinking before sending his letter. I am not defending the actions of Mr. Clemmons (although I do think the headline was somewhat last amusing) and I do not condone the editorialization of the news. However, I feel that Mr. Wetzel's reaction to this is somewhat hypocritical.

The singing out of hip-hop music as the correct use for foul language presents a very unfair comparison to the headline in Tuesday's Daily. I do not listen to hip-hop but I feel that if Mr. Wetzel has a problem with a genre of music then that should be placed in an opinion letter regarding music, not in one trying to express contempt for the Daily. That statement alone made his letter lose all credibility to me as well as many others.

I have only two words for Mr. Wetzel: if you wouldn't be so immature as to call them (the KKK) ignorant or uneducated, how can you justify jumping at the hip-hop music community? Or does it not count when you are the one who is pointing the finger?

My mom has been away from the East Coast for 25 years, and she still can't wear white during the winter. "Never after Labor Day and not before Memorial Day," she'll say. She continues to put her white clothing away until the summer months roll around: strange.

And what about the piece-of-food-stuck-in-your-teeth act? No one wants to come out and let you know, but at the same time who wants to be glaring at all times with decorative specks between the teeth?

There are unspoken rules we abide by — no spaghetti on the first couple dates, no wearing the same article of clothing two days in a row and no sitting too close to strangers in the movie theatre.

We, as people, tend to be caught up in image, physical impressions and physical appearance too much of the time. Our mom has been away from the East Coast for 25 years, and she still can't wear white during the winter. "Never after Labor Day and not before Memorial Day," she'll say. She continues to put her white clothing away until the summer months roll around: strange.

I, too, participate almost subconsciously in this unsetting phenomena. Weeks ago, my friends and I eat watching a band play at a local bar. A rather drunk guy sauntered up to us, spilling his cup of beer a total of three times during the conversation. At one point, I noticed that his zipper was down. I whispered to my roommate and asked him if we should tell him about his fly. We quietly went back and forth discussing who should say something and neither of us did. I reflect on that and feel somewhat bad. It may have been comical at the time, but at the drunk guy's expense. But how would I have told a complete stranger without giving him self-guard and embarrassing him? An ingrained feeling told me, "don't."

I think the more comfortable that we feel with ourselves, the less conscious we are about what others think. I've noticed that the older people get, the less inclined they are to completely match and worry about what they are wearing. People wear crazy things sometimes, because they've just grown to realize that the only opinions of you that truly matters your own.

The same applies for public speaking. Some people in my classes immediately turn bright red when the teacher calls upon them. Why isn't it natural to communicate in front of others with ease? We just don't like the focus to be on us for fear we may say something incorrectly or off-base. No one wants to look stupid. But, if anything, the other students in the classroom respect those who speak up in class voicing their thoughts and opinions.

If we all worried a little less about what others thought, than maybe there would be a little less social division. Imagine people sitting next to each other on a park bench, in the front of the classroom on the first day of school or eating alone at a fast food restaurant.

SINCE 1946:
TAKE HEART: Service checks driver's licenses, but not criminal records

Once members complete their profile, they have unlimited access to the video library.

After members select someone they're interested in meeting, a card is mailed informing the other member that someone wants to meet them. "This member would then view the other member's video and decide if they want to meet them," Lamison said. "It's based on mutual consent.

"It's not a blind-date situation," she continued. "They both know (they) want to meet each other.

The waiting period is relatively short, Lamison said; a week is an average waiting period. "You're not waiting around for three weeks for an answer," she said.

As part of TAKE HEART's grand opening, the service hosted a free single's mixer Saturday featuring a buffet, dancing and a no-host bar.

The next mixer is scheduled for March. "This is a comfortable alternative from going to bars, and it's a lot safer," Lamison said.

Although the service does screen its members, the screening process is limited. "We don't check members' driver's licenses and verify home addresses, but does not check for criminal records, Lamison said.

Students use spring break to build houses

By Val Avalos
Daily Staff Writer

"It was a really good learning experience. You help build houses, but that's not it. You also get a great cultural experience."

Chris Houser
Biochemistry senior

Spring break - a time to rest and relax. Time to take a trip with friends. Or time to build a house.

Some Cal Poly students are planning a trip to Tijuana, but not for a typical spring break vacation. These students, who are members of a club called Pax Christi, are volunteering their time to help build houses for families who otherwise would not be able to afford it.

Pax Christi is a worldwide organization that stands for social peace and justice, according to coordinator Jim Hofman.

The group has visited Tijuana three times a year for the past three years, where it works with another international group called Esperanza.

"I've gone down four times and every time it's been a great experience," Hofman said. "The feeling you get from helping out and the warm bond between you and the people you're helping is remarkable.

Volunteers don't need to have any building experience, Hofman said.

"We've had people 80 years old go before," he said. "There's always something for someone to do."

The trip costs volunteers about $100 each. This includes car-pool transportation, housing and most meals.

Those students who cannot afford the expenses are encouraged to apply for a scholarship or a loan through the Newman Catholic Center, with which Pax Christi is associated.

"There's no reason to miss this because you can't afford it," Hofman said. "It's an eye-opening experience."

"We always have a good time," Hofman continued. "It's just a fun experience, and also it feels good to see something tangible you've done in a week's time."

Biochemistry senior Chris Houser will make his second trip with the group during spring break.

"I had a lot of fun the first time," Houser said. "It was a really good learning experience. You help build houses, but that's not it," he continued. "You also get a great cultural experience."

"I could sleep all spring break," O'Neil continued. "It was a remarkable trip.

"We concentrate on bringing good to see something tangible you've done in a week's time."

The group is scheduled to leave March 17 and return March 23. A summer trip is scheduled for Aug 25, and dates for a winter trip have not yet been set. Anyone interested can contact Hofman at 541-0185.

"People can make money in public speaking. You play a certain game and get noticed and heard, and if you can do that, you can be a talking head," Scheer said.

Scheer strayed away from television journalism after a brief stay as a commentator on Good Morning America. Scheer suggested that he became disillusioned with the way television was informing people.

"Being a (television) journalist became lucrative and prestigious," he said. "Consumption and its rewards became so effective that you created a whole new breed of people that have no gut feeling. And we rely on these people to give us our information?"

Scheer displayed a vast knowledge on many subjects as he fielded questions from the audience for another hour after his speech. Topics of discussion included criticisms on "Nixon," labor unions, analysis of presidents and their political rivals and the end of the Cold War.

FIELD HOKEY CLUB TEAM
MEETING TUESDAY, 9:30
IN THE LIVING ROOM

Greek Newe

By Teresa Galdivi

Daily Staff Writer

In the last emotionally-strung meeting, the Cal Poly women's basketball team lost to the Matadors.

But on Saturday, Cal Poly steamrolled them, winning by more than 30 points.

Mustang guard Kellie Hof-man scored the game-high with 36 points.

"We really played well against Northridge," Hoffman said. "Everyone scored well."

Cal Poly began the game with a roaring start, outscoring the Matadors 39-21 in the first half and finishing strong with a 75-49 win.

Northridge (5-19) with the Matadors only scoring a low 35 percent.

Scoring was the deciding facor the game with Cal Poly only shooting 26 percent, a season low, compared to the Thunderbirds' less-than-great

43 percent.

The second loss of the three-game road trip came from Nevada (7-14), which out-shot the Mustangs 64-53.

Mustangs clinch league title

With one league game remaining and all three of its league opponents having two regular season losses, the Cal Poly men’s basketball team stands alone atop the American West Conference with a 5-0 record.

Daily Staff Report

Whenever thought the Cal Poly men’s basketball team couldn’t redeem itself after a 1-26 season last year must be kicking themselves right now. With a 97-84 win over Cal State Northridge, the Mustangs clinched the American West Conference regular season title Saturday night, improving their record to 14-10.

Although Cal Poly does have one more AWC game, it is the only school to hold a 5-0 record in the league. Collins Bryan scored 23 points in 23 minutes, while Ben Larson, suffering from a sprained ankle, shot 6 of 10 from the field and the three point line during his 35 minutes of play.

Guard Shanta Cointieg followed close behind Larson, playing 31 minutes and sinking 8 of 10 from the field. While Northridge shot 53.6 percent from the field in the first half, the Mustangs held on to the lead, 51-42, despite shooting 48.7 percent.

In the second half of play Cal Poly picked up the pace, shooting 50.7 percent, and Northridge fell with 45 percent.

The Mustangs only have three more games left in their season, they face Cleveland State Tuesday night in Cleveland and then return home to host Southern Utah.

Cal Poly’s final game is against the University of San Diego down in San Diego, February 27.

After that, the Mustangs will travel to the AWC Conference Championships at Cal State Northridge on March 1 and 2.

In the event that Cal Poly makes it to the conference championship game, a bus will be available for fans. The bus will leave pick up fans in front of Mott Gym on March 2. Bus tickets will cost $20 and must be purchased before February 28 at 4:00 p.m.

Tickets are available at the Cal Poly Ticket Office or by calling 756-5806.

Picabo Street takes Gold in World Downhill

SierraNevada, Spain (AP) - Picabo Street, a silver medalist in the downhill at the World Championships on Sunday, became the first American woman to win the event at the World Championships, leading a superb show­ ing by the U.S. team. Harry Leith finished third, while Megan Gerety was fifth.

Street took advantage of the unusually long, relatively flat high-altitude course where gliding and precise turns were needed – a run perfectly suited to the North Americans and not so much to the more technical Swede.

Street said the course presented some unique problems.

"It's kind of a double-edged sword where the ease of it actually makes it difficult," she said. "You can cruise down thinking that you are just riding your turns and everything is OK."

"I went out to turn the way down the course, I worked every little piece of terrain I could and that's what brought me a medal."
