Computer counts ballots; ASI open forum threatened

By Steve Enders
Daily Staff Writer

Despite fears that voting methods were not clear to students, the ASI Board of Directors denied on Wednesday night a motion to hand count election ballots.

Gilbert Washten, College of Business representative, recommended to the board at its meeting Wednesday that the ballots be hand counted. When he and some of his friends voted, he said, poll monitors didn’t direct them to fill in bubbles next to candidates’ names.

Washten said other students who voted on May 1 may have circled or underlined candidates’ names instead of filling in the bubble on the scantron-type sheet.

"(Those ballots) would have had no effect on the outcome of the election because the margin of victory was so large."

Sam Reid
Elections chair

"People who would like a little wine after seeing a production in the Performing Arts Center or a cold beer with their food at Vista Grande Restaurant will soon have their wishes come true."

President Warren Baker approved a change in Cal Poly’s alcohol policy to allow the sales of wine and possibly beer at the Performing Arts Center during performances, and the Vista Grande Restaurant during business hours.

Dan Howard-Greene, executive assistant to the president who headed an ad-hoc committee to study the proposal, said the policy change is limited. The sales will be restricted to certain events and the Performing Arts Center, he said. If service is extended to Vista Grande, patrons would have to order food to buy a drink.

Even though the change in the policy has been approved, some people have concerns.

Martin Bragg, director of Health and Psychological services at Cal Poly, said the limited sales should not impact student health, as long as sales are limited.

"I have a concern that once you let the genie out of the bottle, it will only expand," Bragg said.

By Matt Lucier
Daily Staff Writer

With all of the ballots now cast, ASI President-Elect Steve McShane and Chair-Elect Mike Rocca have different views on what won their respective campaigns for the top ASI spots in last week’s elections.

"Even before I decided to run, there was name recognition," Rocca said. "The campus already knew my name from my work with the Cal Poly Plan."

Rocca, who won the chair position over write-in opponent Enrique Mondragon, said he felt the previous recognition was more crucial to his election than a strong visual campaign.

McShane, however, won a landslide write-in victory over opponent Danielle Banderob with a strong visual campaign.

"By involving a lot of people, we were able to make a huge impact on a campus that was not expecting so much," McShane said.

The major races for president and chair helped to bring more than 2,800 students to the voting booths Wednesday and Thursday, more than twice as many as last year’s elections.

McShane and Rocca saw this as a very positive development.

"I’m encouraged by the voter turnout," Rocca said. "That kind of participation will make ASI more successful next year."

McShane agreed, saying, "The turnout was great. It is apparent that students do care and they want to be a part of the process, whether it be with the Cal Poly Plan or some other event."

McShane and Rocca will now concentrate on building their respective staffs for next year. Rocca will focus on appointing a

Alcohol sales OKd for Performing Arts Center

By The Bragg
Daily Staff Writer

People who would like a little wine after seeing a production in the Performing Arts Center or a cold beer with their food at Vista Grande Restaurant will soon have their wishes come true.

President Warren Baker approved a change in Cal Poly’s alcohol policy to allow the sales of wine and possibly beer at the Performing Arts Center during performances, and the Vista Grande Restaurant during business hours.

Dan Howard-Greene, executive assistant to the president who headed an ad-hoc committee to study the proposal, said the
Wilson, UC Regents file latest affirmative action legal barb

Assorted Press

LOS ANGELES — Lawyers for Gov. Pete Wilson and University of California regents are appealing a court ruling that allowed an American Civil Liberties Union suit challenging rollback of affirmative action.

The ACLU suit alleges that the regents violated the state open meetings law when they decided to roll back affirmative action at UC last summer.

Wilson and the regents argued last month that the suit should be dismissed because a 30-day statute of limitations had expired. But San Francisco Superior Court Judge William Cahill rejected that reasoning last week, calling it "antithetical" to the intent of the open meetings law.

Although such appeals are usually rejected, regents attorney Jeffrey A. Blair said Cahill's ruling was being appealed because of the "important circumstances" of the case, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

"If we are right and the judge erred, then the lawsuit should not even get started," Blair said.

"Since the plaintiff has as a goal taking positions from the regents and the governor, the suit would be a tremendous waste of resources and time."

ACLU attorney Dan Tokaji said the appeal is a ploy to avoid a Monday deadline for the governor's response to the lawsuit.

"They are anxious to avoid filing an answer to our complaint because they will either have to lie or admit that they are breaking the law," Tokaji said. "That's the only explanation for their backed-hand legal maneuverings."

The ACLU suit, filed on behalf of the UC Santa Barbara Daily Nexus and one of its student journalists, alleges that the governor's private telephone conversations with several regents before their meeting last July were in effect a "serial meeting" of the board.

The Open Meetings Act requires that, with only a few exceptions, the regents meet in public.

The lawsuit seeks an injunction prohibiting the board from implementing its policy banning race and gender preferences in contracting, hiring and admissions. It also seeks a declaration nullifying the policy and asks that Wilson be required to release his telephone records, which he has refused to do, citing executive privilege.

WINNERS: Rocca upbeat, 'We should balance each other out very well.'

From page 1

vice chair sometime this week.

"I have some good applicants," Rocca said. "I've thought about it a bit, but I don't want to go on record just yet. I am comfortable that I'll find a very good vice chair."

McShane will make applications available this week for the vice presidency and for positions on the executive council. Applications should be available Wednesday in room 217A in the University Union.

"I encourage students of all backgrounds and interests to apply for these positions," McShane said.

After appointing their staffs, McShane and Rocca will begin to concentrate on the tasks that lie ahead.

"This spring, I will work to develop a good ASI orientation for the WOW program," McShane said. "Then, over the summer, I will meet with available members of the executive staff to get an early start on meeting students' needs."

McShane will then concentrate on informing the student body of ASI events. He plans to restart the now-defunct Mustang Messenger, an ASI newsletter that he had helped launch. In addition, he plans to begin an ASI magazine for on-campus clubs.

It listens to your wallet.

When you buy a Macintosh computer, you're buying one of the most advanced multimedia capabilities you can get in a computer. With built-in stereo sound, video graphica and animation, Macintosh is an easy way to bring your work to life. Of course, you're also buying the computer that gives you a fast, easy way to access the Internet. Better yet, with the compatibility of a Mac you can run UNIX and Windows, as well as Mac OS. Making it easy to talk to other people, even if they're not using a Macintosh. And if all that isn't enough, now we've even made Macintosh easy to buy. Because for a limited time, we're offering special campus savings for the WOW program, "I encourage students of all backgrounds and interests to apply for these positions," McShane said.

After appointing their staffs, McShane and Rocca will begin to concentrate on the tasks that lie ahead.

"This spring, I will work to develop a good ASI orientation for the WOW program, McShane said. "Then, over the summer, I will meet with available members of the executive staff to get an early start on meeting students' needs."

McShane will then concentrate on informing the student body of ASI events. He plans to restart the now-defunct Mustang Messenger, an ASI newsletter that he helped launch. In addition, he plans to begin an ASI magazine for on-campus clubs.

...
ASI: Board of Directors recommends some restrictions at open forums

From page 1

"Make the effort to vote, would do them a disservice." Reid didn't disagree with Walton's concerns, but he felt that they were "stumbled upon the ongoing Gail ignored by ASI and that she position as executive director, time chemistry lecturer, be representative, recommended an amendment that would strike

ALCOHOL: Commission on Performing Arts requested the policy change

From page 4

"We haven't had a dry campus..." Griffin added. Griffin said he is working with the local Alcoholic Beverage Control to obtain the state licenses needed to sell the beverages. Howard-Greene said the administration is checking whether Cal Poly has the proper insurance to allow the sales. Poly's license will be limited and will preclude the college to sell any hard-alcoholic beverages.

The service will be in place by this summer or before the Performing Arts Center opens in the fall.
No next time

date Demers

May 2, 1996

A week ago, I saw my grandfather for the last time. I knew it was going to be the last time. This time, when I started college and moved away from home, I would always try to get home for winter break. My par­ents thought I was returning to see them. Let them flat­ten themselves. I was coming back to see my grandpar­ents. Grandpa was being characteristically silly and asked "Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­ents were buying me new guitar strings or paying for pi­ano lessons or drying my tears when I was crying out be­cause I overheard my mother tell my father I didn't have any talent in music and since my grades were so poor, I'd probably be lucky to get a job as a cashier.

You just wave. Talking was almost un­thinkable.

At a time like this the natural instinct is to get one last look, any one last thing, hear one more chuckle. And when you do it, you only feel worse.

Walking down the driveway. Memories started flooding in. Too many at once. I was gazing for air. I saw a million images in my mind. Clear as if they just hap­pened. Some were six years old with pigtails and a skinned knee. Screaming. Grandma's there with a damp cloth and cotton wool telling me silly stories. I'm 14 years old. My first public performance. A school talent show. My parents were off drinking or who cares what else but in the front row as proud as can be is my grandpar­ents. Grandma was being characteristically silly and asked for my autograph and when my album was coming out. It was always asking when my album is coming out. It makes me feel a little like a failure in some way. I'm 10 years old and only have a few songs I'm proud of. Not nearly enough for an album. Grandpa would never call me a failure. In his book, I was a success.

Dove Demers is an art and design senior.

Satan worshipers?

by Daun Pillsbury

"Maybe if you listen you'll hear what I said. Yes, I think the words I'm singing are your kids are dead." Metal Church, "In Mourning"

Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­ents were buying me new guitar strings or paying for pi­ano lessons or drying my tears when I was crying out be­cause I overheard my mother tell my father I didn't have any talent in music and since my grades were so poor, I'd probably be lucky to get a job as a cashier.

You just wave. Talking was almost un­thinkable.

At a time like this the natural instinct is to get one last look, any one last thing, hear one more chuckle. And when you do it, you only feel worse.

Walking down the driveway. Memories started flooding in. Too many at once. I was gazing for air. I saw a million images in my mind. Clear as if they just hap­pened. Some were six years old with pigtails and a skinned knee. Screaming. Grandma's there with a damp cloth and cotton wool telling me silly stories. I'm 14 years old. My first public performance. A school talent show. My parents were off drinking or who cares what else but in the front row as proud as can be is my grandpar­ents. Grandma was being characteristically silly and asked for my autograph and when my album was coming out. It was always asking when my album is coming out. It makes me feel a little like a failure in some way. I'm 10 years old and only have a few songs I'm proud of. Not nearly enough for an album. Grandpa would never call me a failure. In his book, I was a success.

Dove Demers is an art and design senior.

Satan worshipers?

by Daun Pillsbury

"Maybe if you listen you'll hear what I said. Yes, I think the words I'm singing are your kids are dead." Metal Church, "In Mourning"

Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­ents were buying me new guitar strings or paying for pi­ano lessons or drying my tears when I was crying out be­cause I overheard my mother tell my father I didn't have any talent in music and since my grades were so poor, I'd probably be lucky to get a job as a cashier.

You just wave. Talking was almost un­thinkable.

At a time like this the natural instinct is to get one last look, any one last thing, hear one more chuckle. And when you do it, you only feel worse.

Walking down the driveway. Memories started flooding in. Too many at once. I was gazing for air. I saw a million images in my mind. Clear as if they just hap­pened. Some were six years old with pigtails and a skinned knee. Screaming. Grandma's there with a damp cloth and cotton wool telling me silly stories. I'm 14 years old. My first public performance. A school talent show. My parents were off drinking or who cares what else but in the front row as proud as can be is my grandpar­ents. Grandma was being characteristically silly and asked for my autograph and when my album was coming out. It was always asking when my album is coming out. It makes me feel a little like a failure in some way. I'm 10 years old and only have a few songs I'm proud of. Not nearly enough for an album. Grandpa would never call me a failure. In his book, I was a success.

Dove Demers is an art and design senior.

Satan worshipers?

by Daun Pillsbury

"Maybe if you listen you'll hear what I said. Yes, I think the words I'm singing are your kids are dead." Metal Church, "In Mourning"

Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­ents were buying me new guitar strings or paying for pi­ano lessons or drying my tears when I was crying out be­cause I overheard my mother tell my father I didn't have any talent in music and since my grades were so poor, I'd probably be lucky to get a job as a cashier.

You just wave. Talking was almost un­thinkable.

At a time like this the natural instinct is to get one last look, any one last thing, hear one more chuckle. And when you do it, you only feel worse.

Walking down the driveway. Memories started flooding in. Too many at once. I was gazing for air. I saw a million images in my mind. Clear as if they just hap­pened. Some were six years old with pigtails and a skinned knee. Screaming. Grandma's there with a damp cloth and cotton wool telling me silly stories. I'm 14 years old. My first public performance. A school talent show. My parents were off drinking or who cares what else but in the front row as proud as can be is my grandpar­ents. Grandma was being characteristically silly and asked for my autograph and when my album was coming out. It was always asking when my album is coming out. It makes me feel a little like a failure in some way. I'm 10 years old and only have a few songs I'm proud of. Not nearly enough for an album. Grandpa would never call me a failure. In his book, I was a success.

Dove Demers is an art and design senior.

Satan worshipers?

by Daun Pillsbury

"Maybe if you listen you'll hear what I said. Yes, I think the words I'm singing are your kids are dead." Metal Church, "In Mourning"

Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­ents were buying me new guitar strings or paying for pi­ano lessons or drying my tears when I was crying out be­cause I overheard my mother tell my father I didn't have any talent in music and since my grades were so poor, I'd probably be lucky to get a job as a cashier.

You just wave. Talking was almost un­thinkable.

At a time like this the natural instinct is to get one last look, any one last thing, hear one more chuckle. And when you do it, you only feel worse.

Walking down the driveway. Memories started flooding in. Too many at once. I was gazing for air. I saw a million images in my mind. Clear as if they just hap­pened. Some were six years old with pigtails and a skinned knee. Screaming. Grandma's there with a damp cloth and cotton wool telling me silly stories. I'm 14 years old. My first public performance. A school talent show. My parents were off drinking or who cares what else but in the front row as proud as can be is my grandpar­ents. Grandma was being characteristically silly and asked for my autograph and when my album was coming out. It was always asking when my album is coming out. It makes me feel a little like a failure in some way. I'm 10 years old and only have a few songs I'm proud of. Not nearly enough for an album. Grandpa would never call me a failure. In his book, I was a success.

Dove Demers is an art and design senior.

Satan worshipers?

by Daun Pillsbury

"Maybe if you listen you'll hear what I said. Yes, I think the words I'm singing are your kids are dead." Metal Church, "In Mourning"

Three high school boys have been charged with the mur­der of a 15-year-old girl. They media says the boys did it to glorify Satan. So parents should watch to see if their kids are wearing black, listening to hard rock or playing Dungeons and Dragons. What? But if you were a nurse or a se­cretary or some other job, "for young girls," my grandpar­s
What a Weekend

The 14th Annual Wildflower Triathlons Festival put thousands of athletes to the test while entertaining Cal Poly students.
Lake San Antonio filled with more than 1,000 competitors at the 14th Annual Wildflower Triathlons as athletes from all over the world endured the three-course event.

By Melissa Geisler

Professional and amateur triathletes pushed their bodies to the limit and beyond during the 14th Annual Wildflower Triathlon Festival May 3-5.

With the choice of competing in three different triathlon events: long course, mountain bike and Olympic distance, athletes left behind blood, sweat and tears over the weekend's competition at Lake San Antonio, Calif. trying to win the $3,500 purse.

The Wildflower Long Course Event is a qualifying event for the 1996 Ironman Triathlon World Championships held annually in Kona, Hawaii. About 1,500 slots are available for the Ironman race. Twelve of these professional spots will be filled by competitors at Wildflower. This is the largest allocation of professional slots available in any triathlon to date.

In addition to the professional levels, the long course also has an elite open division and relay team level available. Elite athletes race with the professionals, but compete in their own category; and will be eligible for one of the 28 age-group slots the Wildflower has to fill for the Ironman.

The long course is surprisingly short in comparison to the Ironman. It covers a mere 70.3 miles, while the Ironman stretches over a 140.6 mile course.

Athletes in the long course, at Wildflower first jump into the chilly 65 degree waters of Lake San Antonio for a 1.2 mile swim. They follow a course marked with buoys every 200 yards and swim in a clockwise direction on a triangular course.

From the shores of the lake, the athletes exit the water then run through a transition area to get on their bicycles. The transition area is where many athletes lose some time and where others are able to make up time they may have lost while swimming.

Men's long course winner Peter Reid, 26, who finished in 4:06:18, said a quick transition is vital to a strong finish and can make or break a triathlete.

"That was the key for me," Reid said. "I came out of transition with just a few seconds up and that was enough to get out of sight of the other competitors.

"You have to be quick out of the transition," added Reid, who gained a strong lead over second place finisher Cameron Widoff with his quick transition.

Widoff, who won Wildflower last year, conceded that Reid's speedy transition put him ahead.

"(Reid) got out of transition and was about six minutes up and I never really pushed myself. I just stayed steady," Widoff said. "I stayed within myself and I did everything I could, but I couldn't have done anything different, he had a great day."

After changing clothes or taking off their wetsuits, athletes jump as quickly as possible onto their bicycles and leave the congested transition area to begin a ride that lasts for 56 grueling miles.

Almost immediately after leaving the transition area, the bicycle run hits a three mile uphill grade which is capable of wearing down even the strongest athlete's legs.

Reid said the bicycle run is tough, but added he was amped to do well because of the lead he gained after the transition.

"You just kinda get motivated after that and then you just go for it," Reid said. "I think I was riding stronger than anyone else on the hills."

Because of the steep hills, the bicycle run usually claims a few victims. Several athletes ended the race with road rash or scraped up bloody legs and arms from falls.

Women's third place finisher Holly Nybo was one of the hills' victims. Nybo crashed on one of the first hills and lost her chances of winning the race when winner Paula Newby-Fraser passed her after stopping and making sure she was all right.

Newby-Fraser, a seven-time winner of the Ironman, took the helm and never looked back. She gained a six minute lead over Nybo and second place finisher Lauren Alexander and claimed her fourth Wildflower title.

"I got a few splits," Newby-Fraser said. "But then I figured out that I was about six minutes up and I never really pushed myself, I just stayed steady."

Running at a steady pace is what was needed to survive the 13.1 mile running course after the cycling.

The running course takes contestants through the Lake San Antonio area on about forty percent paved roads. The rest of the course is considered a cross-country type course with running on dirt.

Between the bicycle and run courses is another transition area. But this transition area isn't any where near as time consuming as the swimming-bicycle-transition. Neither Newby-Fraser or Reid lost any time.

With their wins, both Newby-Fraser and Reid earned their spots in the Ironman which will take place later this year on Oct. 26.

Not all athletes compete in Wildflower for a spot in Ironman.

Athletes in the mountain bike and Olympic distance triathlons compete for many different reasons.

Cal Poly women's soccer players Wendy Jones and Stacie Davis both said they were competing to keep in shape since soccer season was over.

Davis also said she liked the competitiveness of the mountain-biking race, which has swimming a 25 mile course, mountain biking 9.7 miles and running two miles.

Both said they had previous experience in racing in triathlons, but didn't train too much for the Wildflower event.

"You swim a couple days a week, run a couple days a week and then ride your bike to school," Jones said of her relaxed training.

Professional athletes train just a little bit more, but Reid said no one should think they can't compete in a triathlon.

"Have a lot of patience. About five years ago I had never swum or run in a triathlon," Reid said.

See Story Page W4
Wildflower for its fourth time. Opus and Truth About Itchy McGuirk played at Wildflower: the odor of stale beer and overflowed portable bathrooms; the dusty ground, blanketed by empty beer cans; a mob of tents and the drunken screams of rowdy college students.

The 14th annual Wildflower triathlon festival was only one part of the experience for over 1,500 students and volunteers who camped out Saturday at Lake San Antonio, 20 miles north-west of Paso Robles. The volunteers and their guests camped one mile from the triathlon's start and finish line in a student-designated campground.

The event coordinators prepared a weekend of entertainment for the volunteers while they weren't busy handing out water, Gatorade and food or cheering on triathletes racing through waves surrounding the lake.

The free entertainment opened about as smoothly as the beer cans that littered the campground grounds and the lakefront stage where the three bands performed.

Four energetic band members who call themselves Opus played solo Friday night for the campers. The band's performance started just before the sun went down and didn't end until the near-full moon lit the sky.

Opus played two sets with a break in between so all of the student volunteers could attend a meeting, but most people used the break to fill up on more beer.

"The second set was better," drummer Trigg Garner said. "More people were coming out ready to party. Once the beer had hit them, they were ready to have fun."

After the break Opus started playing, but this time to a less inhibited crowd. So uninhibited that they began to treat Opus's light ska and punk sound like pit music. Lead singer Michael Trossell and his band members quickly diffused the rowdy dancing and valued the crowd enough so everyone could enjoy the music and the cool night air.

"It's just a part of something that's supposed to be healthy," Trossell said as he popped open his can of Budweiser. "Even though everybody's just sitting around drinking."

The music ended by 9:30 p.m. but the campers had just begun to party.

Even before the sun showed it's face, campers woke up Saturday morning to ZZ Top blaring from the stage monitors. Volunteers crawled out of their tents holding their aching heads and not ready to assist with the race. While most of the students were curled up in their work spots, those that didn't have to work lounged in the early-morning sun.

Meanwhile, sweat covered the 70.3-mile course as professional triathletes competed for money, personal satisfaction and the thrill of competition.

At the transition point athletes switched from bathing suits or wetsuits, to running shoes to bike shoes. Those not competing in the triathlon enjoyed a festival of food, music and booths stocked with healthy paraphernalia.

Ah, the tranquillity of campfire: nature's piney smell, beautiful tree-covered landscape and the rustling underbrush from an occasional scurrying jack rabbit.

And then there was Wildflower: the odor of stale beer and overflowed portable bathrooms; the dusty ground, blanketed by empty beer cans; a mob of tents and the drunken screams of rowdy college students.

At the transition point athletes switched from bathing suits or wetsuits, to running shoes to bike shoes. Those not competing in the triathlon enjoyed a festival of food, music and booths stocked with healthy paraphernalia.

Juice Club distributed bananas. Power Bar handed out samples, and sports companies displayed their products.

Triathlon visitors that weren't exploring the booths sat on the shade-covered lawn to cool themselves from the sun. Others tried more tasty methods to cool down by visiting the shaved-ice booth.

By 3 p.m., most of the competitors had finished the courses. They panted just the finish line and into the bustling crowd. They walked with tired limbs into the crowd of visitors who fed, food, music and rest. A massage booth was set up employed with magic fingers from local massage therapists in the area. For $40, aching racers were able to relax with a full body massage.

A steady background of music filled the stage from the festival from a variety of bands and performers which included Homefire — who played it's bluegrass music at Wildflower for the fifth straight year — and Rachabobe, who played a mix of reggae, Latin and African beats.

The race ended and the festival wound down, and volunteers trickled back to their campsites after hours of handing out water and cheering on racers. Although they were still recovering from Friday night's chaos, students made a stop at their ice chest before they headed to the beach to crash and take a swim.

The entertainment began at 5:30 p.m. when Truth About Seafood played to the small crowd of students who were still able to stand up. But as the wind picked up over Lake San Antonio, it sent the band's diverse music to every corner of the campground; just far enough to reach the the smoking barbecues of those who didn't make it to the show.

The energy from the small crowd set the mood for the first band of the night. Band member Brad Daane pleased listeners with his bass guitar, his melodic voice and his numerous references to illegal substances. Saturday night's show was Truth About Seafood's second appearance at Wildflower.

"It's a great trip for us," Daane said. "We get to camp and play."

The music continued throughout the night with headlining band Itchy McGuirk playing for its fourth straight year and wearing the audience with high-energy rhythm and blues.

The band had been separated since Dec. 23, but recently got back together just in time to play Wildflower.

The event originally had Truth About Seafood headlining, but when word of Itchy McGuirk's comeback reached the volunteer entertainment committee, the band was given the spot.

There is a lot more to Wildflower than a triathlon. In fact, most people go for the music, fun in the sun and the beer. By Matt Berger

The event originally had Truth About Seafood headlining, but when word of Itchy McGuirk's comeback reached the volunteer entertainment committee, the band was given the spot.
With the sound of ZZ Top blaring in their ears at 5:30 a.m., students found themselves wondering if volunteering at Wildflower was such a good idea.

All 917 volunteers who attended Wildflower this weekend were awakened right at that time when many volunteers were at the front gate dealing with registration and checking for glass and hard liquor. Brad Miller, a business senior, said his favorite part was greeting the volunteers and racers.

"I couldn’t answer any questions...I didn’t know much," Miller said. "They (the group leaders) should have prepared us more for financial specifics of the race.”

Each person had to pay money to compete in the triathlon. The price is $40. Miller said when people spend that kind of money, the registration volunteers should be able to answer questions regarding competitors’ tickets. Recreation management senior Shannon Walsh and political science junior Robert Schaefer were the two volunteer managers and have been in charge of volunteer tasks since January. They spent 40 hours over the past two weeks getting things set up and returning tons of messages from volunteers.

Walsh and Entzi were in charge of tasks including finalizing all volunteer lists and assigning volunteers their jobs.

Of the 1,400 volunteers that applied, Walsh and Entzi choose 917. The original number of volunteers was only going to be 800, but they decided to increase the number because they felt that extra volunteers would be needed. "We definitely needed the (extra)," Entzi said. "In fact we overused them.”

Volunteers were from campus clubs including the Ski Club, Lacrosse Club and many fraternities and sororities. Walsh said they were chosen based on last year’s performance and how many years they had been doing it. Walsh and Entzi also said things had gone very smoothly and were happy with the volunteers’ efforts, especially on Friday when many volunteers were at the front gate dealing with registration and checking for glass and hard liquor. "It went great," Entzi said. "Not too many problems. The people were really cooperative and the subcommittees were a big help.”

The subcommittees were under the volunteer managers and assisted them by telling the volunteer groups what needed to be done.

Volunteers worked hard to make Wildflower a successful event.

Volunteers worked hard to make Wildflower a successful event.

Walsh and Entzi also said that volunteers not showing up was another dilemma. "There was the average flake factor," Walsh said. "They tend to not show up the next day after partying.”

Mechanical Engineering junior Robert Schaefer, a volunteer, was at the front gate Sunday morning checking to see if volunteers were sneaking out. He said so many volunteers were leaving early after their night of partying, they did not have enough people to do all the necessary volunteer jobs. Overall, Walsh and Entzi said they enjoyed themselves and were sad to see it all end.

"It’s a lot. You spend all this time and it’s like, now what?" Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi each applied for one of 12 team leader group positions and were chosen to be volunteer managers. Both said they would do it again.

"It was not our choice (to be volunteer managers) but if we had to do it again, we’d choose (to be managers),” Walsh said.

917 Volunteers by the Lake

If one of those volunteers fell into the lake... Oh heaven’s sake!

By Cosima Celmyster

Volunteers worked hard to make Wildflower a successful event.

Walsh and Entzi also said that volunteers not showing up was another dilemma. "There was the average flake factor," Walsh said. "They tend to not show up the next day after partying.”

Mechanical Engineering junior Robert Schaefer, a volunteer, was at the front gate Sunday morning checking to see if volunteers were sneaking out. He said so many volunteers were leaving early after their night of partying, they did not have enough people to do all the necessary volunteer jobs. Overall, Walsh and Entzi said they enjoyed themselves and were sad to see it all end.

"It’s a lot. You spend all this time and it’s like, now what?" Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi each applied for one of 12 team leader group positions and were chosen to be volunteer managers. Both said they would do it again.

"It was not our choice (to be volunteer managers) but if we had to do it again, we’d choose (to be managers),” Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi also said that volunteers not showing up was another dilemma. "There was the average flake factor," Walsh said. "They tend to not show up the next day after partying.”

Mechanical Engineering junior Robert Schaefer, a volunteer, was at the front gate Sunday morning checking to see if volunteers were sneaking out. He said so many volunteers were leaving early after their night of partying, they did not have enough people to do all the necessary volunteer jobs. Overall, Walsh and Entzi said they enjoyed themselves and were sad to see it all end.

"It’s a lot. You spend all this time and it’s like, now what?" Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi each applied for one of 12 team leader group positions and were chosen to be volunteer managers. Both said they would do it again.

"It was not our choice (to be volunteer managers) but if we had to do it again, we’d choose (to be managers),” Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi also said that volunteers not showing up was another dilemma. "There was the average flake factor," Walsh said. "They tend to not show up the next day after partying.”

Mechanical Engineering junior Robert Schaefer, a volunteer, was at the front gate Sunday morning checking to see if volunteers were sneaking out. He said so many volunteers were leaving early after their night of partying, they did not have enough people to do all the necessary volunteer jobs. Overall, Walsh and Entzi said they enjoyed themselves and were sad to see it all end.

"It’s a lot. You spend all this time and it’s like, now what?" Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi each applied for one of 12 team leader group positions and were chosen to be volunteer managers. Both said they would do it again.

"It was not our choice (to be volunteer managers) but if we had to do it again, we’d choose (to be managers),” Walsh said.

"We were taking jam and peanut butter away because they were in glass bottles,” Entzi said.

Walsh and Entzi also said that volunteers not showing up was another dilemma. "There was the average flake factor," Walsh said. "They tend to not show up the next day after partying.”

Mechanical Engineering junior Robert Schaefer, a volunteer, was at the front gate Sunday morning checking to see if volunteers were sneaking out. He said so many volunteers were leaving early after their night of partying, they did not have enough people to do all the necessary volunteer jobs. Overall, Walsh and Entzi said they enjoyed themselves and were sad to see it all end.

"It’s a lot. You spend all this time and it’s like, now what?" Walsh said.

Walsh and Entzi each applied for one of 12 team leader group positions and were chosen to be volunteer managers. Both said they would do it again.

"It was not our choice (to be volunteer managers) but if we had to do it again, we’d choose (to be managers),” Walsh said.
By Eileen Alt Powell

Israelis, Palestinians in final, toughest peace talks

MUSTANG DAILY

MONDAY, MAY 6, 1996 5

between Israel and the Palestinian settlement on the West Bank.

Those issues, which date back to the founding of the Jewish state, have been put off through five years of historic talks — talks that have so far produced two peace accords and a Nobel Peace Prize shared among PLO leader Yasser Arafat, Israeli prime minister Shimon Peres and the slain predecessor Yitzhak Rabin.

Palestinian delegate Saeb Erekat said the talks that started Sunday are "the beginning of a new era in our peace process...the real negotiations between the Israelis and the Palestinians."

"Let's say that for the past five years we've been having appetizers," he said. This final phase of talks is expected to last at least three years.

Isreali chief negotiator Uri Savir and top Palestinian delegate Mahmoud Abbas opened the session by warning violent extremists on both sides that they cannot stop the process. Top Israeli security officials cautioned on Sunday of impending suicide attacks by militants who oppose the peace process.

"You belong to the past," Abbas said during his speech. "You will lose for we are determined to win."

Mahmoud Abbas
Top Palestinian delegate

Not far from the port, the two main bridges into the city that run parallel across the Monrovia River were being held by rival enemy camps, making it difficult for anyone to move in and out of downtown.

 Rebel leader Charles Taylor had vowed that the battle for the Barclay military barracks held by his enemies would be won by the weekend. But Ulimo-J supporters put 18 rebel soldiers on a four-day mission last night to chase out the fighters who gave themselves up Saturday.

The clashes shattered hopes that Johnson's evacuation from the country Friday — carried out by American troops — would prompt more toward ending the violence.

Instead, the fighting became even more brutal.

Half of the 10,000 Liberians who have sought shelter at the U.S. Embassy residential compound stood watching in horror Sunday as five of Taylor's fighters were executed down the hill below.

The five fighters had their hands tied behind their back as about 140,000 young, armed rebels moved in and out of the compound.

The clashes shattered hopes that Johnson's evacuation from the country Friday — carried out by American troops — would prompt more toward ending the violence.

Instead, the fighting became even more brutal.

Half of the 10,000 Liberians who have sought shelter at the U.S. Embassy residential compound stood watching in horror Sunday as five of Taylor's fighters were executed down the hill below.

The five fighters had their hands tied behind their back as about 140,000 young, armed rebels moved in and out of the compound.

The clashes shattered hopes that Johnson's evacuation from the country Friday — carried out by American troops — would prompt more toward ending the violence.
BASEBALL: Clinches third place in the WAC

From page 8

The Mustangs will not have shown up at all.
In the top of the fourth, Mustang pitcher Matt Atterberry gave up two walks to open the inning. The heart of the San Diego lineup added three singles after the two walks to bring across three runs.
Cal Poly countered in the bottom of the inning bringing four runners in. Macalutas singled and Neal was hit by a pitch, before Marston singled to load the bases.
Third baseman Steve Rohrmeier hit a sacrifice fly to right field to score Macalutas. The run gave Macalutas 151 runs and broke a Cal Poly record held by Jason Maas.
Still in the bottom of the fourth inning were all the Mustangs needed Saturday as they held on for a 4-3 victory.
Atterberry picked a complete game victory despite getting hit in the hand during the fourth inning. The victory boosted his record to 6-4.
"I really hurt myself by walking the leadoff hitters," Atterberry said of his shaky fourth inning. "It came back to haunt me like it usually does."
"We played good defense," Atterberry added. "I got a lot of help all around."
Macalutas now holds three major Cal Poly records with 153 runs, 240 hits, and 48 doubles in his four years at Cal Poly.
"The most important was that it was a run that allowed us to win," Macalutas said. "Everything else is pretty insignificant as far as I'm concerned."
"I'm sure somewhere down the line it will be special, but right now it's whatever I can do for the team," he said.
For the Aztecs, All-American first baseman Travis Lee was held in check by the Mustang pitching staff. Despite hitting a homerun in the first game, he only went 3-for-11 for the series.
With the three wins this weekend, the Mustangs still have an outside chance at the playoffs, but they need to win all of their remaining games. They travel to Pepperdine Tuesday and then are scheduled to play Stanford next Monday to close out the regular season. Coach Price is trying to extend the Stanford series to two games, and move it to this Saturday and Sunday.

LACROSSE: Lost to Sac State in tourney finals

From page 8

Stowe said they picked up the pace again in the fourth quarter and dominated the rest of the game.
However, the two goals Cal Poly added just weren't enough for the win.
"They (Sac) are a good team and let them get too far ahead," Stowe said. "Everyone played their hearts out, but the dice just didn't roll our way."
An 11-8 win over UCSD allowed Cal Poly the opportunity to play in the finals.
According to Stowe, the club slowed down the pace of the game in the second quarter, which gave UCSD a chance to try and mount a come back.
However, with Shannon Peacock contributing four goals as an attack man, Cal Poly made it hard for UCSD to get back in the game.
"We got lazy when we felt we had the game in the bag," Stowe said. "But then we picked up our intensity again and won the game.
The tournament gave out most valuable player awards to one player from each position, with Cal Poly taking home two of them. Stowe received the mid-fielders award and Schwiers won the defensivemen.
Although Stowe said he was disappointed with the outcome of the tournament, he said he feels the team had a good season.
MONDAY, MAY 6, 1996

IN THE BLEACHERS
BY MARK O'HARE

No one was seriously hurt. The store, filled with about 50 to 100 shoppers each, was evacuated around 5 p.m.

Witneses told police the boys were about 15 or 18 years old.

http://www.spacechange.com

MISTER BOFFO

FUNDIES

by Joe Martin

IN THE BLEACHERS
By Steve Moore

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin

MISTER BOFFO

by Joe Martin
SPORTS

Mustangs sweep Aztecs to clinch third in WAC

By Greg Manifold
Daily Astorian Sports Editor

The Cal Poly football team wrapped up spring practice Saturday with the annual Green and Gold game at Mustang Stadium.

The defense defeated the offense 20-9 in the inter-squad game. Freshman running back Craig Young led the offensive squad with 60 yards, and junior quarterback Nate Ecklund passed for 56 yards. Junior transfer quarterback Ali Abreu was four of nine passing for 28 yards.

Running back Antonio Warren carried for 1 yard and ran for the only touchdown in the game. Kicker Alan Bielke kicked a 45-yard field goal to add the rest of the points for the offensive side. / Daily photo by Joe Johnston

Green & Gold ends spring training

By Jeff Dench
July 29, 1996

The Cal Poly men's lacrosse club returned from the Final Four Tournament with a second-place finish two weekends ago.

In front of nearly 300 spectators, Cal Poly lost to Sacramento State, 6-10, in the finals at the University of California at San Diego.

Adam Stowe, business senior and captain, said the team simply lost its intensity for a brief moment in the second quarter allowing Sac State to pull ahead.

“We played a pretty solid game,” Stowe said. “We came out and stuck it to them in the first quarter.”

Stowe said his team jumped out with the first goal and went into the second quarter up 3-1. But according to Rob Schwiers, business sophomore and president of the club, Sac State pulled ahead when Cal Poly received a couple of back-to-back penalties.

“We never really gave up as a team, though,” Schwiers said. “We just tried to come back a little too late.”

As Sac State was up 7-4 going into the second half, Cal Poly watched as they added two more goals in the third quarter, giving them a 9-4 advantage going into the fourth quarter.

See LACROSSE page 6

Lacrosse club season's over

WAC WESTERN ATHLETIC CONFERENCE
Baseball Western Division
Final Standings

WAC GB
1.) Cal State Northridge 21-9 -
2.) Fresno State 20-10 1
3.) Cal Poly 18-12 3
4.) San Diego State 16-14 5
5.) Hawai'i 12-18 9
6.) Sacramento State 3-27 18

NATIONAL BRIEFS
49ers out of shape for minicamp

SANTA CLARA (AP) — Maybe the smell of empty pizza boxes in the San Francisco 49ers locker room Sunday were only incidental. But following a three-day minicamp, coach George Seifert was distressed about the poor physical shape of his defending NFC West division champions.

“It’s not catastrophic, and we’ve got time to rectify it, but the thing that stands out most is we’re just not in the shape we need to be in — it’s an area of concern right now,” Seifert said. He noted that there were veterans, not just youngsters, among the out-of-shape athletes on the roster.

“We’ve had good practices,” added Seifert. “But we’re a long ways away from being ready for our first game. This is the poorest shape we’ve been in for several years.”

Seifert expects most of the culprits to be healthy by next month’s two-week minicamp.

QUOTE OF THE DAY
“Our pitching has been outstanding, our clutch hitting has been outstanding, and we played well defensively.”

Ritch Price
Cal Poly baseball head coach on the second half of the season

MUSTANG DAILY

SPORTS BRIEFS

• There are no games scheduled today.

PO lY BRIEFS

three-day minicamp, coach George Giles of Cal Poly was preparing his 18-12 team for a physical shape of his defending NFC West champions.

“It’s not catastrophic, and we’ve got time to rectify it, but the thing that stands out most is we’re just not in the shape we need to be in — it’s an area of concern right now,” Seifert said. He noted that there were veterans, not just youngsters, among the out-of-shape athletes on the roster.

“We’ve had good practices,” added Seifert. “But we’re a long ways away from being ready for our first game. This is the poorest shape we’ve been in for several years.”

Seifert expects most of the culprits to be healthy by next month’s two-week minicamp.

QUOTE OF THE DAY
“Our pitching has been outstanding, our clutch hitting has been outstanding, and we played well defensively.”

Ritch Price
Cal Poly baseball head coach on the second half of the season

• Jackie Maristela Junior 5’6” G
• Rae Anne Yip Junior 5’9” G
• Stephanie Osorio Freshman 5’6” G
• Kathleen Knight Sophomore 6’3” C

SCORES

BASEBALL

Cal Poly...........................................4
San Diego State...........................................3
U.C. Berkeley...........................................4

SOFTBALL

Cal Poly...........................................0
U.C. Berkeley...........................................3
U.C. Berkeley...........................................4

NATIONAL BRIEFS

1. ) Sacramento State 3-27 18
2. ) Fresno State 20-10 1
3. ) Hawaii - 12-18 9

BASEBALL

Cal Poly finished an 18-12 record in the WAC, third place in the Western Division of the WAC behind Cal State Northridge and Fresno State. The Mustangs are 30-21 overall, with two games remaining.

“The first 20 games of our season our junior college trans­ferees were still making the adjust­ment to being outstanding Division I players,” said Cal Poly head coach Ritch Price. “In the last 25 games we have the best record in the conference, and we’ve really set it up.”

“Our pitching has been outstanding, our clutch hitting has been outstanding, and we played well defensively,” Price added.

On Sunday the Mustangs were engulfed in a pitching and defensive duel before Cal Poly opened the game up in the sixth inning. Left fielder Jon Macalutas was hit by a pitch and right fielder Rob Neal followed it up with a single, and third baseman Steve Rohmeiser doubled home Macalutas and Neal. The double knocked out Aztec pitcher Brian Scott.

Marty Camacho pitch hit for Mustang first baseman Jeff Marston, and Camacho took San Diego State relief pitcher Brunette’s first pitch deep to left field for a two-run homerun. It was Camacho’s sixth homrun of the year and gave Cal Poly a 4-0 lead.

In the bottom of the seventh inning, with two out, Jon Macalutas hit a solo homerun to left field in his final at bat at home. It gave the Mustangs a 5-0 lead.

Cal Poly took a 5-2 lead heading into the sixth inning, but the Aztecs added three more runs in the top of the sixth with five singles.

In the bottom of the same inning the Mustangs scored two runs, and then got five more runs in the seventh to put the Aztecs away 12-8 in the first game of the series. Mike Zizzi pitched six and one-third innings for Cal Poly and allowed seven earned runs. Kevin Mohr came on for the Mustangs in relief to get his second win.

On Saturday, if you missed the fourth inning you might as well have not bothered. See BASEBALL page 7

BASEBALL

SAN DIEGO STATE

Green & Gold ends spring training

By Jeff Dench
July 29, 1996

The Cal Poly football team wrapped up spring practice Saturday with the annual Green and Gold game at Mustang Stadium.

The defense defeated the offense 20-9 in the inter-squad game. Freshman running back Craig Young led the offensive squad with 60 yards, and junior quarterback Nate Ecklund passed for 56 yards. Junior transfer quarterback Ali Abreu was four of nine passing for 28 yards.

Running back Antonio Warren carried for 1 yard and ran for the only touchdown in the game. Kicker Alan Bielke kicked a 45-yard field goal to add the rest of the points for the offensive side. / Daily photo by Joe Johnston

Green & Gold ends spring training

By Jeff Dench
July 29, 1996

The Cal Poly football team wrapped up spring practice Saturday with the annual Green and Gold game at Mustang Stadium.

The defense defeated the offense 20-9 in the inter-squad game. Freshman running back Craig Young led the offensive squad with 60 yards, and junior quar­terback Nate Ecklund passed for 56 yards. Junior transfer quarter­back Ali Abreu was four of nine passing for 28 yards.

Running back Antonio Warren carried for 1 yard and ran for the only touchdown in the game. Kicker Alan Bielke kicked a 45-yard field goal to add the rest of the points for the offensive side. / Daily photo by Joe Johnston