AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOES WIN PROP 209 VICTORY

By Richard Correlli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court let stand California’s groundbreaking Proposition 209, a ban on race and gender preference in hiring and school admission. Affirmative action foes predicted the states now will follow California’s lead.

Acting without comment Monday, the nation’s highest court rejected a challenge to California’s measure by a coalition of civil rights groups.

The measure, an amendment to the state constitution, says the state and local governments cannot “discriminate against or grant preferential treatment on the basis of race, sex, color, ethnicity or national origin.”

Lower courts had said the anti-affirmative action measure violated no one’s constitutional rights and was a neutral way to promote equality. But its opponents contended the measure relegated racial minorities and women to the status of second-class citizens in California.

The Supreme Court’s action was a decision and set no national precedent. It merely left any time soon, but more choices may be on the way.

Nancy Williams, director of Campus Dining, said she is in the process of negotiating with nationally known brands including Wendy’s chain.

“At this point, our limiting factor is the amount of space we have available,” Williams said. “Most national brands require at least 600 square feet which we just don’t have.”

Campus Dining currently has one national branded licensee at The Avenue. Chick-fil-A has approximately two years left on its five-year contract.

Williams said as well as lack of space, the campus faces the problem of territorial rights of individual franchisees in the area.

“There are several brands located close to campus and these individuals pay $150,000 to $250,000 for their franchisees,” said Williams.

The political science senior said her immediate goal is to address the biggest complaint students have about her.

“In the minds of many students, she is the ‘phantom’ ASI President.”

“Steve McShane last year, you saw him everywhere and heard everything about him,” architecture junior Israel Pena said. “Cindy on the other hand, she’s stuck in a cave somewhere. I’ve heard a lot of people’s complaints of ‘where is she?’ I mean do we even have a president?”

Business marketing senior Michael Plante agrees.

“I think there should be more publicity of what she’s doing. I mean, because sometimes I have no clue what’s going on,” he said.

Entzi said she is aware of these complaints and has made plans to combat them.

“Know as president I need to get out there and make myself known and make ASI known. But I also want the other people involved in ASI, the executive staff, the Board of Directors and the other officers to get out and do the same,” Entzi said.

Meet the President: ASI President Cindy Entzi steps out of the shadows

Who is Cindy Entzi? While students ponder this, ASI President Cindy Entzi is working hard to put the question to rest.

Along with the right to use the parent company's products and advertising, which promote and support the franchise, they are guaranteed that there won't be another franchise with the same company within a specified distance," she said.

Williams is hopeful that Cal Poly will be able to attract more national brands to give students more choices.

"Many other campuses have gotten into the branded concept and now the companies are starting to look at express service, which takes up less space and also makes it more economical to be in a campus situation," she said.

Revenue from Campus Dining operations goes back to Cal Poly Foundation and is used to financially support the university. Net income from Campus Dining operations in 1996 exceeded $840,000.

One year ago Rory O'Leary, director of Campus Dining at Cal Poly Pomona, licensed a Carl's Jr.-Green Burrito dual franchise. He said the arrangement utilized nearly the same space as one licensee, but gave two distinctive choices.

"The student response has been positive and we've increased revenue, probably because we now have a recognizable name on campus," O'Leary said. "The power of branding is phenomenal. Several generations, including mine, have been brought up on branding. For the most part you can go from one state to another and without much deviation you can get the same product. This is the good thing about brand names."

Tom Spengler, chair of ASI Board of Directors, said he thinks students would support the idea of more choices on campus.

"It's my opinion that ASI would support more choices because so many students have quietly complained about the lack of choices," he said. "I was approached by the founder of Juice Club last year about trying to get into the University Union so I know there are businesses that want to be here because it's a good market for them. It's really up to Foundations, and it's my belief that if the students really put a lot of pressure on Foundation, they may be forced to make some changes."

One campus that has expanded student choices is the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa. Last year the university hired Aramark, a food service company which licenses national brand food services under their contracts independently of the university.

Ira Simon, Director of Aramark Campus Services, said the company operates the food services with Aramark employees. They also purchase the food and take the risks of doing business. Aramark's people are trained by the national brand companies and must meet their quality standards. He said the university's food court now includes a Blimpys, Burger King, Chick-fil-A, Macheu Wok, Taco Bell and Starbucks.

"Revenue is up three times the amount we brought in the first semester," Simon said. "Before, you could aim a shotgun through the food court at 3 p.m. and not hit anybody. Now we're serving 800 people for dinner between 4 and 8 o'clock and it's become more of a student hangout.

Alabama's successful dining court has not been without controversy. In order to pay for the renovation of the building, the licensing fees and the Aramark salaries, the university initiated its Dining Dollars program.

All of the approximately 16,000 students are required to participate in the program. Each student's tuition is increased by $400 per year and that amount is placed in a declining balance program. The student is issued a computerized debit card to use at any campus food service location. If he or she doesn't use the $400 by
ENTZI

According to Entzi, ASI Public Relations Director Kellie Korhonen will be heading up a committee to explore how to get ASI issues out through campus publications. A communications task force has also been started to look at how to make students more aware of issues and how ASI can, in turn, be more receptive to students. Entzi said the committee will meet this quarter.

Entzi said another one of her major goals is to streamline ASI.

"I really want to work on making ASI the best it could be. It's a lot of good things have been done in the past, and I want to continue doing those things. I also want to create new ideas and new ways of doing things," Entzi said.

This year we’re looking at a lot of our policies and procedures because they haven’t been looked at. Codes are outdated and guidelines are outdated. Were trying to clean out the cupboards to make sure we’re running smoothly," Entzi said.

"We’re looking at things like extra duplication (of printed materials) and printing costs," she continued. "Do we need to print 180 copies of something? Can we print 50? And instead of going somewhere out of town to print, which might cost more, can we find a local printer?" Entzi said.

"It’s things like that which, on their own, may not add up to much, but over all it can really add up to a lot of savings," Entzi said.

Entzi added that ASI will be streamlined by getting an objective third party to look at how things are run.

"We’re bringing an outside assessment firm to come in and look at ASI - to come in and look at what we do," she said.

"We’re also doing technology and staff assessment. We have really dedicated this year to making sure the assessment happens and that we report on it by the spring quarter," Entzi said.

Entzi said if something is initiated this year; she wants to get the results within the year as well.

"A lot of times projects will get started in the fall and winter quarters," Entzi said, and then by the spring quarter there is so much going on that they can sometimes fall by the wayside. Entzi said her challenge is to make sure that doesn’t happen.

"I know as president I need to get out there and make myself known and make ASI known. But I also want the other people involved in ASI, the executive stuff, the Board of Directors and the other officers to get out and do the same thing."

Corporate ignorance: Just doing it

By Mark Armstrong

With Chinese President Jiang Zemin jacking it up with his visit to Bill Clinton to Pete Wilson during the past month, it would be good time to look at our enemies. After all, what's America thriving off of, as I learned from Sunday night's "60 Minutes." We really don't seem to have enough enemies these days—enemies who spit on American flags and gawk at a dictator's crooked grin. The truth is we have enemies, but they sure don't seem to stand up to us.

This week, Zemin found protesters all around the country, making the most of their right to free speech about Tibet, the Tiananmen Square massacre, forced abortions and piles of other rights violations. China has been accused. President Clinton and company insisted this summit was essential despite the differences in human rights policies, mainly under the rubric of huge economic opportunities China offers.

So what's a little torture if it will make an American corporation richer?

It's an attitude we've been holding for quite a while. Thanks to labor unions, Nike can threaten to close factories in the United States, we have seen the best that American corporations have for us—the workers. But when we look beyond our borders, we can see where these companies are cutting corners.

It's time for the corporations to start treating some global ethics because it looks as if the real enemy is actually us.

Nike has taken a lot of flack lately for its practices, and deservedly so. They have attacked the company in a string of episodes. One called for all professional and amateur athletes on Team USA to throw down their swooshes and protest Nike's practice of using sweatshop labor in Indonesia. Michael Moore directed a new movie that shows Nike just like he did to Roger Smith and General Motors in "Roger & Me." Political groups such as Global Exchange and Feminist Majority have also spoken out against Nike's labor practices, saying that the pay in these factories is pitiful, the working conditions are poor and many of the workers are children.

Nike actually found much of the same thing itself back in September when it pretended to give a damn about workers in other countries. The company secured two with four Indonesian factories, one of them because they refused to meet the minimum required monthly salary of $72.30. The shoe giant also hired former U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young to help public relations for the company, and Young went to Indonesia to inspect some of these factories.

In a letter to the Arizona Republic from Nike, Young was quoted as saying that these factories "were clean, organized, adequately ventilated," and that they certainly did not appear to be what most Americans would call sweatshops.

I don't know about you, but anytime a P.R. director's best description of a plant is "adequately ventilated," there is a problem.

So let's look at the numbers. According to Global Exchange in a recent news article, the average daily wage for a Nike factory worker in Indonesia is $2. Nike's CEO Phil Knight is worth about $85.5 billion.

Tiger Woods, Andre Agassi, Michael Jordan, Jerry Rice and scores of other athletes have received millions of dollars to endorse the shoes that these children were paid $2 per day to make. Anything wrong here?

Nike and many other corporate codes are to exploit cheap labor throughout countries such as Indonesia and China and have always been based on the idea that they are actually helping these countries by employing such large numbers in the factories, and really, the workers are just happy to be employed.

With the countries doing very little to encourage going beyond the bare minimum, and our corporate bureaucrats looking only at the bottom line, Nike and others won't help these workers live better lives if they don't have to. But in America's working environment, Nike spends all of its money to build a "campa" for its employees complete with swimming pools and a Club Med atmosphere.

The worst thing we can do is accept the huge gap as a reflection of a free market. The athletes superstarrs who can't put on a pair of socks unless there's a swoosh have kept their mouths closed and claimed it's not their problem.

It's easy to claim ignorance when you're across the globe playing basketball, signing autographs and living an American life. But when you're getting millions that could go toward acceptable wages for workers who are stitching your signature on a shoe, you'd better feel guilty.

Girls are mean!

By Alan Dunton

To begin, I'd like to throw out this little disclaimer: I am not sure that all of the following is by no means just an implication of the idea that I do not pretend to have any professional understanding of the following ideas and am not sure that I want one. I am merely attempting to organize my thoughts in regards to a particular situation that I have become more aware of over the course of a few weeks, but have known about for some time now. Again, these ideas are nothing new to any of us, and I only wish I could have slightly more understanding on the matter than I currently do.

Girls can be awful by everyone else, especially other us and with doing a whole lot.

That's pretty much a way of conducting a relationship, so allow me to explain.

Guys in general are pretty easy going. Sure, we became pissed off every once in a while, but rarely to the extent that our female friends do. Also, we aren't as cut throat towards each other when a problem does arise.

For instance, let's say I'm mad at my friend Bob because he's been saying the football team I like sucks. I know that he's pretty lame argumented, but I don't really care, and I wouldn't think of anything two guys would get mad at each other about.

I can do one of two things to correct the situation. First, I can simply ignore him and let the thing blow over and be forgotten. (We all know the Niners are going the all way anyway, or I can say, "Bob, you don't know what the ball you're talking about so why don't you shut up?"

Either way, the problem is solved and neither party involved ends up disgruntled. Now, coming up with a realistic problem that could arise between two girls is not a problem, selecting a good one from thousands is.

All right, Jane is upset at Susan because Jane of one of Jane's friends saw Susan looking in the general direction of a particular guy that Jane had been talking to. In retaliation, Jane quickly organizes her army of female friends, like the Marines, to get both into a foreign land, and devises a "non-confrontational" plan to deal with the situation. Susan. She designs groups to perform reconnaissance, spread negative rumors about Jane and to infiltrate their social network in hopes of isolating her from her own friends. Does this seem like an exaggeration? That's debatable.

It's amazing to me how quickly girls can turn on each other, and how easily they can run the show of anything two from friends.

What does the overuse of emotions stem from, is it like a defense mechanism or something? I was flipping the channels yesterday and I stumbled across a body-building contest on ESPN. The announcer, a woman who happened to be a six-time Ms. Olympia winner. It made me wonder, does she solve her problems with extravagant yet subtle physical and verbal attacks, or does she just kick ass?

"Regarding The Oct. 30 article entitled 'Greek System Reviews Alcohol Policy,' we would like to make a few additions. The event mentioned in the article was not a Rush activity. It was a party for which measures were taken to avoid underage drinking.

Unfortunately, these measures failed. These fraternities and sororities are under university investigation for breaking university rules which apply to all ASI clubs and organizations. University rules require a third party alcohol vendor (ie: a bartender or someone with a liquor license) at all ASI club events and can be seen by the ASI office.

Study says smoking bans in bars do not hurt business

By Laurie Neerpoord
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sales tax revenues from seven California cities and counties suggest that banning smoking in bars is not bad for business, says a study in the American Journal of Public Health.

The tobacco industry strongly opposes smoking bans in restaurants and bars, saying they keep customers away.

Previous studies had concluded bans didn't hurt restaurant business. The new study, in Tuesday's issue of the American Public Health Association's journal, argues bars aren't hurt, either.

"The claim that bars will go broke just is not supported by the facts," said Stanton Glantz of the University of California, San Francisco.

The tobacco industry-funded National Smokers Alliance denounced the study as containing "a myriad of factual errors and misrepresentations."

Smoking bans did not hurt business in any area, Glantz concluded.

One analysis, for example, determined the fraction of retail sales that bars account for in each area. Only one city, Anderson, showed any decline after the smoking ban — the sales proportion dropped seven-tenths of a percent. But that was well within the city's normal business fluctuations before the ban, Glantz said.

California is poised to ban smoking in every bar on Jan. 1.

The smokers' side is using Glantz, a well-known anti-tobacco researcher, and the university over his previous findings that smoking bans don't hurt restaurants. The ASA argued that the earlier study contained serious errors and repeated that contention in its reaction to the new Glantz study.

The alliance said that one of the communities used by Glantz — Tiburon — has "too few bars from which to draw meaningful conclusions."

The alliance also attacked a defense of Glantz by the American Public Health Association.

the end of the academic year, a refund can be requested.

"Without the guaranteed sales of $400 per student, we wouldn't have the revenue to remodel, hire service consultants or hire food service design teams," Simon said.

Simon also said there were some complaints last spring when the program was initiated, but renovations to the food court were still not complete, so students felt they were spending $400 but still didn't have the choices they were promised. There have also been complaints from those who objected to paying because they didn't intend to use the food service on campus and didn't want the university to have the use of their money for the full year before they could apply for a refund.

Simon said the percentage of those dissatisfied is small and the biggest controversy has been with of-campus restaurants.

"Most of these are mom and pop operations located near the university," he said. "They feel wronged by the franchise concept because we require students to pay for food service whether they intend to use it or not. Some of these places have closed down, but within the same radius," Simon said.

Cal Poly Foundation Associate Director Robert Griffin said that to get more fast food operations on campus, Foundation officers will need to look at the viability of the operation and authorize the franchise or license agreement.

"If there's a strong preference for that kind of fast food, and if there was a franchise deal that allows Foundation to make a reasonable return on the arrangement, then I think it's got possibilities. But what typically happens is the franchise or license amount that has to be paid can sometimes make the deal not worth doing," he said.

"In the university of Alabama situation, the students are underwriting or subsidizing capital improvements. That wouldn't work at Cal Poly because of the structure of the CSU funding approach," Griffin said.

Griffin said some Alabama students were upset because the university would use that mechanism to capitalize a project.

"Many felt they wouldn't get the benefit while they were at the university. It's a creative approach but I'm not sure that it's any more equitable than the way we do it, by taking our net income and putting it into a reserve and then funding renovation projects and our new capital facilities out of that reserve," he said.

"In the campuses that I've visited, the overall consensus is that choice is paramount in the food customer's mind. We recognize the burden that we have to keep those customers happy," Griffin said.

Negotiations for possible franchise restaurants at Cal Poly are ongoing, but not expected to be settled anytime soon.

209 leaves California "for the time being, at least, as the only state unwilling to stand up and take strong measures against gender and race discrimination within its borders," Rosenbaum said.

Martha Davis of the NOW Legal Defense and Educational Fund predicted future litigation if other states adopt similar rollbacks of affirmative action. "The last thing we want is to hold up California as a model," she said. "I think it would be disastrous if Proposition 209 were exported to other states," she said.

Davis also said the possibility exists that the California measure will be challenged again as individual programs are dismantled.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the measure, adopted by a public initiative in 1996, last April.

Civil rights advocates then sought the highest court's help, contending that Proposition 209 would block even those government efforts to enforce racial or gender preferences that are "permissible or required" by the federal Constitution.

How much flexibility state and local governments have in such matters, their appeal said, "is one of the most fundamental and nationwide social and political significance."

"Proposition 209 leaves public universities free to grant admissions preferences to "children of alumni, donors or friends of university officials," the appeal said. "Municipalities are free to grant hiring preferences to veterans or those with close political ties to local officials."
Jazz were leaving the court at the Forum in Inglewood on Friday. O'Neal said of Ostertag the drama of the season's first confrontation. He added that young people shouldn't imitate what he did. "I acknowledge my responsibility to set a good example for young people and I admit that in this instance, I did not do so," O'Neal wrote. "I ask those young people not to emulate my conduct here because there is no excuse to engage in physical confrontation. "I always tell kids to follow their dreams but I should add: shouldn't imitate what he did."

The incident occurred as the Lakers were preparing to take the court. Ostertag was not hurt, and he went on to play that night, scoring only two points in the Jazz's 104-87 loss to the Lakers. O'Neal didn't play in the season opener because he was still recuperating from an abdominal muscle injury.

O'Neal included his own losses for Ostertag for decking; hint last week between practice sessions Monday to Wednesday. He added that young people and I admit that in this instance, I did not do so," O'Neal wrote. "I ask those young people not to emulate my conduct here because there is no excuse to engage in physical confrontation. Fifteen U.S. World Cup Champions selected for Olympic hockey team

As voted on by one of the 1998 Olympic team, said six players will be selected by Dec. 1 to complete the roster.

1. Ron Wilson, coach of the Washington Capitals, who coached that squad, will coach the Olympic team.
2. John Cuniff and Paul Holmgren, both former NHL coaches, and Jeff Jackson, former coach of the World Cup team in 1996, will be assistant coaches.

Former players included Derian Hatcher of Dallas, Tony Amonte of Chicago and Jeremy Roenick of Phoenix.

Colorado - Four former Olympians - defensemen Chris Chelios of Chicago, forward Keith Tkachuk of Phoenix and goalies Brian Leetch and Brian Leetch, both of the New York Rangers — were among 17 players chosen Monday for the U.S. hockey team at the Nagano Olympics.

Besides Leetch and Chelios, defensemen picked were Derian Hatcher of Dallas, Kevin Hatcher of the Pittsburgh Penguins, Mathieu Schneider of the Toronto Maple Leafs and Gary Suter of Chicago. John Vanbiesbrouck of the Florida Panthers joins Richter in goal.

If we don't win the gold medal, we'll be extremely disappointed," Wilson said. "We did that at the World Cup. From Day One, we said we were playing for first place. It's not negative pressure. It's pressure great players cherish.
