A whole new look...

The women’s basketball team has a new coach and a new attitude heading into its season opener tonight against Weber State

Daily Staff Report

The Cal Poly women’s basketball has seven seniors on their roster, but only one has been at Cal Poly for more than one year.

That’s forward Rona Bevien who has been at Cal Poly through three coaches in four years. The newest coach is Faith Mimnaugh who replaced former coach Karen Booker earlier this year.

Bevien, Mimnaugh and the rest of the Mustangs face their first test of the season when they face Weber State at 5 p.m. at Mott Gym on Saturday.

The non-league game is one of 10 preseason games before the first Big West Conference game against New Mexico State on January 7.

Mimnaugh was an assistant coach at Cal Poly last season when the Mustangs went 4-22, 3-12 in the Big West.

"Last year we had great team speed, and that speed got us into trouble sometimes," said Mimnaugh at the Big West Media Day.

"The players need to be able to think the game and not turn the ball over so we can use our speed to our advantage," Mimnaugh said.

"The players are working hard on to learn a lot of different things. The system is much different than last year’s and the players are taking it in stride."

"The system is much different than last year’s and the players are taking it in stride."

"Our strength lies in having so many returning players," Mimnaugh said. "They have really gotten to know each other and are building a lot of chemistry offensively and defensively. We want to get to the point where we move as a unit as opposed to having five individuals on the court."

Mott Mania: Chapter three

The Cal Poly men's basketball team hopes that not everyone has basketball fever this weekend. Although the festivities may be centered on the football team's game against Dayton, the men's basketball team is expecting to steal some of the limelight and get its 1997-98 season underway.

Ideally, head coach Jeff Schneider would like to see fans leaving Mustang Stadium after the football game and walking up the hill to Mott Gym for Cal Poly's season opener against San Bel Conference's Arkansas State Indians.

Of course, before prospective and current Mott Maniacs can even sit in the bleachers they may want to check out what type of team and season to expect from Schneider and his boys.

As a NCAA Division-I team, Cal Poly enters its se­cond season in the Big West Conference and no longer is the cautious newcomer it once was just four years ago.

Youth is probably the one thing that will hurt Cal Poly this year — the team is extremely young compared to its league opponents.

"Other schools in the league mostly have seniors," Schneider said. "Last year we had our top 10 players returned."

Nevertheless, Schneider believes that his youthful additions to the team will help more than hinder.

"The team will get better and better as time goes by," he said. "With such a young team as we have, you have a lot more room for growth. Each week they will improve and that's one advantage we have with such a young team."

Junior forward Steve Fleming doesn't believe that Cal Poly is as young as everyone thinks it is.

"We're more deep and more experienced than most people give us credit for," Fleming said.

With an 11-4 home and 1-9 away record last season, Cal Poly hopes to reverse its mad miseries and improve upon its 33.3 percent last season.

Since the end of last season, every time Schneider has stepped onto Mott Gym's court there have been two large ghosts following him around.

With these ghosts come memories, memories of fans chanting "Take him Tay" and buzzer-winning shots. Memories of strong team leadership Memories of Shanta Cotright and Levesque.

With these shadows also comes several questions for anyone who has been following Cal Poly basketball: Who will take the place of Cotright and Levesque both on and off the court?

Mustangs should expect to find leadership and support from the likes of Larson and forward Steve Fleming. Both juniors have both been with Schneider for their entire career at Cal Poly and have strong on-court presence.

While Larson's numbers may not compare to Cotright's figures — last year Larson shot 39.5 percent from the field and 33.3 percent from beyond the arch while Cotright shot 50.2 percent and 41.7 percent respectively — he will still be a reliable point guard. Larson's personal achievements also make him a likely candidate for team captain. He is only the third fresh-

Welsh brings new attitude

By Kimberly Surrey

Down a narrow hallway through an odd door in the middle there sits his nose only two inches away from the screen. But it isn’t a computer he’s staring at. Cal Poly head football coach Larry Welsh is studying his “window to the world” as he calls it. He is watching game footage on a small television in his small office which covers the only room to the outside.

His desk is cluttered with notebooks and statistic sheets—everywhere. Everything seems to be tossed into one place. But on top of it all are two pieces of paper prominently placed.

Look at this, Welsh said, with a smile building up in his eyes. "Two young kids from back east want to know about Cool Poly and its football team."

He is proud of the university and of his team’s success. But Welsh is also a modest man.

"I didn’t set the team goals, the guys did," Welsh said. "I am just guiding the guys towards their goals and it takes a lot of hard work.

"I didn’t ask them if they like it, it is not a concern," Welsh said. "I always believe I don’t need to worry about my team."

Welsh said it is the challenging teachers he hado, Harvard and his parents. But even his struggles seem to have worked out well on the field. He is the fifth most productive punt returner in California Poly history.

Sagaser said the best part about playing Cal Poly football is the experiences and relationships he has made with the players. "I have to be smart and quick or I’ll get killed," he said. "I’ve only had a couple concussions, which isn’t bad compared to a lot of guys.

Inside linebacker coach Paymon Saadat said Sagaser is a model Cal Poly football player. "He’s a very good player and leadership on the field moves the team," he said. "We’ve overcome a lot in a short time."

Sagaser contributes the Mustang’s winning streak to an offensive and defensive scheme that caters to its personnel. "We have two great running backs, for example, so we run the ball a lot, as compared to last year when we lost a lot. So you have to use these two guys," he said. "We’re also helping out the secondary and playing more zone defense.

Some athletes lead by mentoring, some lead by emotion. Senior linebacker Brett Sagaser leads by example.

Brett demonstrates a lot of leadership in a quiet way, Welsh said. "At the same time he is aggressive. He’s kind of an over-achiever in that he doesn’t have the size most linebackers have, but he has the speed to make up for that. He has accepted the challenge and has a lot of talent and ability to cover and play pass defense."

Standing 6 feet 1 inch and 205 pounds, Sagaser’s stats aren’t exactly the best, of most of his story. This season Sagaser has made 64 tackles. He has made 36 assisted tackles, demonstrating his ability to work well with the defensive line, and has seen playing time in all nine games. He has blocked two passes and recovered one fumble this year.

Sagaser was recruited from Lemoore High School in 1993 and has no regrets about his decision to attend Cal Poly. "I didn’t want to go anywhere else," Sagaser said. "I had a friend going to Cal Poly, and I liked the area. I was also really impressed with the curriculum. I can’t imagine going to school anywhere else."

Sagaser said he feels his experience and knowledge as his best attribute. "I’m not a big guy, so I have to be smart and quick or I’ll get killed," he said. "I’ve only had a couple concussions, which isn’t bad compared to a lot of guys.

"We’ve overcome a lot in a short time," he said. "To keep up with him you have to have a lot of speed and physical ability to keep up."

Sagaser graduates in 1996 from Northern Arizona University where he played quarterback and began his coaching career as a graduate assistant with the Lumberjacks during the spring of 1996, coaching the offensive backs. From there he took the head coaching job at Grant High School in Gonzales, Calif. Welsh traveled east to Southern California where he was the Defensive Coordinator and Linebacker coach at Cal State Fullerton.

Finally Welsh moved his family to Atascadero in 1997.

After spending 14 years in Atascadero, Welsh decided coaching at Cal Poly made the most sense for him in his career. He wanted to move up to fulfill his childhood dreams. But to do that, he had to leave the Central Coast."

"Location was key," Welsh said. "Other coaching opportunities came up over the years, but I wasn’t going to move my family."

Welsh takes on the role of the players’ parent. Respect is important to him, but working on players’ coach-relationships is not a part of his job.

"I don’t ask them if they like it, it is not a concern," Welsh said. "I always believe I don’t need to worry about my team."

Welsh said it is the challenging teachers he had as a kid, Harvard and his parents. But even his struggles seem to have worked out well on the field. He is the fifth most productive punt returner in California Poly history.

"We’ve overcome a lot in a short time," he said. "To keep up with him you have to have a lot of speed and physical ability to keep up."

Sagaser, 23, spend some of his time growing up a cattle ranch in Atascadero, Calif. "I lived in the city and the country," he said.

Sagaser’s experiences working summers and weekends on the ranch inspired him to pursue a career in agriculture, which is another reason to coming to Cal Poly. "I plan to own my own ranch," he said. "And maybe, as an entrepre­

Sagaser feels the team’s adjustment to new football coach Larry Welsh was fine. He added that former coach Anderson Patterson and coach Welsh approach things differently.

"We’ve overcome a lot in a short amount of time," he said. "Patterson was more of a player’s coach, and coach Welsh is all business."

Sagaser contributes the Mustang’s winning streak to an offensive and defensive scheme that caters to its personnel.

"Sagaser is a team leader, not just a throwaway title. He’s a manager, and an entrepreneur of sorts," he said.

Off the field, Sagaser considers himself a pretty mellow, happy-go­

"I’ve killed a couple of deer and a bear that weighed close to 300 pounds," he said. He also enjoys four-wheel and quail hunting.

Sagaser believes the future of Cal Poly is only going to get better.

"This season we started off on the right foot so there’s been more interest and publicity about the team. Hopefully we can get more money, scholarships and better players to compete against the higher-ranked teams," he said.
Washington keeps competition guessing

By Michelle Baykin

Keith Washington grew up on competition, with his father, Warren, being the main opponent. Whether it was a board game or a little one-on-one in basketball, they played to win.

"One time, when I was in high school, we were playing racquetball, and he was talking so much that I slammed the ball as hard as I could, and it ended up hitting him in the eye," the junior fullback said. It wasn't intentional, and the Washingtons have always been a family that put the most importance of education. His mother, Julie, is a principal at a Lynnwood elementary school, and his father was once president of Compton College and is now the West Coast district administrator for University of Phoenix.

"He let me win sometimes when I was little, just so I wouldn't get discouraged. But he didn't ever just give the whole game away, he made me work for it."

"Back then, I wanted to be like Pele," Washington said, but after a few years he found that was too physical of a sport. He started playing tackle football in the fourth grade. He continued football through high school, where he also played basketball, and won numerous awards and scholarships from All-CIF and Second Team Blue Chip All-American.

Washington faced some difficulties toward the end of his Brethren Christian High School football career, when he began to realize that Cal Poly was the best choice for other reasons. The university is far enough away... go home, to Anaheim Hills, for the weekend in just a three-and-a-half hour drive. He likes this area, which he said is laid-back and fits its S.L.O. nickname.

"He is the most intelligent person I know. Everyone I know who knows him likes him. He taught me how to be a man, and my mom taught me to believe in myself. She always said, if you can believe, you can achieve, as long as you put in a 100% effort."

His parents attend all of his home games and most of the away games. His girlfriend, Natalie Confer, is also a big fan. They have been together for four years, since they first met in high school, and she now attends Cal Poly as a psychology major.

"She is always there for me, she makes me happy when I'm sad, and she just makes me feel good. Not a lot of people can do that," he said.

It was his parents' and Confer's support that helped Washington when he first came to Cal Poly. He was very homesick his freshman year, and felt discouraged because he had to resort after injuring his knee. They still came up to the games, even though he didn't play.

"It's the supporting cast- my girlfriend, my family, my roommates, my friends and God- that have gotten me through.

"Without them, life would be tough."

University of Virginia, but he chose Cal Poly to attend in 1994 because it offered him the most money and his parents admired the academic reputation.

"I found out however, Washington came to realize that Cal Poly was the best choice for other reasons.

The Mustangs, 8-1, are coming into Saturday's game with a victory last week. The Flyers defeated Evansville 49-47 to give them a 20-game winning streak 11-0 in 1996, and 9-0 this season. Over the nine years, Dayton has won 92 of its last 101 games. The non-scholarship program has not lost a game since Nov. 18, 1995, which has earned them a ranking of No. 1 in the National Football Gazette Non-Scholarship I-AA poll.

The undefeated No. 20 Dayton Flyers, 9-0, will try their best Saturday to spoil the No. 23 Mustangs' homecoming, their chances to advance to the playoffs and a win for either club will be the deciding factor in their acceptance to the NCAA Division I-AA poll. Both Dayton and Cal Poly are fighting for their playoff lives, and a win for either club will be the deciding factor in their acceptance to the NCAA Division I-AA poll.

Can the Mustang football team continue to crush its competition and stampede down the road that leads to the playoffs for the Division I-AA national championship?

Washington is from Long Beach, Calif., inspired by the playing styles of Jerome "The Bus" Bettis, from the Forte-Niners, and William Floyd, from the Steelers, and William Floyd, from the Forty-Niners. "I like those guys because they are physical players like I try to be. They don't run by the other guys, they run through them."

Washington said he has another source of inspiration for his game. "I pray before the games, that God will keep the players safe, and that we all do well." He said that with God by his side he will always do well in whatever he does.

The Mustangs are riding high, coming off a big win last weekend against Cal State Fullerton, which ruined the Titan's chances of a Mountain Pacific Sports Federation (MPSF) championship and a NCAA playoff berth.

"I'm really proud of the players, the only sad thing is I can't seeTony (Chowana-Bandhu) play his last game," Fens said. Chowana-Bandhu received a red card in the Cal State Fullerton game for fighting, which disqualifies him for this game.

The Mustangs, themselves, have had a grueling season with 10 away games and only six home games including a five game road trip early in September. The team is 6-10 overall on the season, and tied for second in MPSF with a 3-2 record.

Chowana-Bandhu was named the Player of the Week for the MPSF for his play against Fullerton. He scored the Mustangs second goal against Fullerton, and got credit for the assist on the game-winning goal.

"We have two great backs in Chad Lindsey, and J.P. Ragen, who will carry our offense's rushing game," said Robert Biorke, Dayton linebacker coach.

The Dayton rushing game is ranked second in the nation amongst Division I-AA schools with an average of 283 yards a game.

"They have some good athletes at the running back position, but I think that ours are better," said Bobby Smith, wide receiver coach. "We are going to continue to do what we do best, and that's the run-the-ball-down-our-opponents-throats.""

The Hornets are coming off a loss to Cal State Northridge, who defeated Cal Poly 1-0 in overtime in a controversial game earlier this season.

"We know what Warren can do and I'm pretty confident that he won't be running wild against us," Biorke said.

Biorke is confident that Dayton All-American linebacker Sean Genet will be able to stop the Mustang rushing attack to a minimum. Genet has five interceptions this season and has returned three for more experience.

man in NCAA Division I history to post 100 steals in a single season and during the 1996-97 season he was named American West Conference Player of the Year and Rookie of the Year.

"It's a different role this year for me and it's something I'm still adjusting to," Larson said. "I'm now one of the guys trying to lead the younger guys and help them out. To be a leader you have to do the right stuff and be more vocal on and off the court... I'm trying to do what's natural for me."

Standing next to Larson to help lead will be Fleming (6-foot-5 inches, 225 lbs). This season he should see more playing time than the 11.1 minutes he averaged last year since the Mustangs consider him a key player for help lead the team. Also, this season, Fleming understands that he is being looked at as a team leader, which will hopefully help curb his over-exuberance and inconsistencies on the court that have plagued him in the past.

"Fleming's attitude has been great, he understands his role on the team this year and is a great leader on the team," Schneider said.

S Fleming said he tries to follow Cotwright and Levesque's example on how to be a good team leader.

"I'm glad my team can come to me about things on and off the court," Fleming added.

It's difficult to replace both the experience and leadership skills that Cotright and Levesque possessed. Along with Fleming and Larson, Schneider also believes that sophomore guard Mike Wornick and forward Ketchup will help lead the team.

There is no lack of talent on Cal Poly's team this season and overall, it is still a fairly young and inexperienced team. Nine players return to the court from last season, but only four of them actually saw more than ten minutes of playing time last season. Freshmen recruits may help add to the dazzle of Schneider's "up-tempo style of play," but whether or not they will be able to keep up with their tougher opponents remains to be seen.

If you can't attend Saturday's season opener against Arkansas State, it will be televised for the first time Cal Poly men's basketball games will be aired on local cable television. The tape-delayed games will be run on public access cable channel 6 and produced by Alpha Video Productions. The Arkansas State game will air Tuesday, November 18 at 7 p.m.
Volleyball wraps up regular season at home

By Peggy Carte

For the first time in five years, the Cal Poly women's volleyball team will finish its season with a winning record. Even with one regular season game and the post-season Big West Tournament remaining, the Mustangs, now 17-9 overall, 9-6 in the Big West, will have their best record since 1992 when the team went 22-11.

"What our goal is from beginning to end is to continue to get better all the way through," Cal Poly head coach Steve Schlick said. "I think we've made good progress from last season. That's what we're basing things on for us. (We're) not worried about 1992 or 1993. We have grown in the game over the course of the last year and a half, and I think we continue to grow every week. That's what is important to us."

Before Cal Poly heads to the Big West Tournament in Long Beach, Nov. 21-23, its final game and home match will be Sunday afternoon against 6th-ranked U.C. Santa Barbara. The Mustangs lost to the Gauchos in Santa Barbara in late September, 3-0.

"It's really advantageous for us to play them (for) the last game," defensive specialist Stephanie Rumsey said. "Everyone will give it all that they have and that's what it's going to take."

The Gauchos feature a powerful lineup comprised of Kathy Gregory, who has over 500 career victories in 23 years as Santa Barbara's head coach.

UCSB has been able to dominate opponents in the middle both offensively and defensively with a pair of middle blockers, Heather Bown and Katrina Crawford. Bowman and Crawford both rank in the top five of the Big West in digs per game, kills and blocks per game.

Gregory's team adds another offensive threat in 1996 Big West Freshman of the Year Roberta Gehlke and a setter, Tanja Hart, who averages over 13 assists a game.

"For us to compete with them is a huge challenge to begin with," Schlick said.

UCSB must put together a combination of players. Senior Louella Lipana will start at setter, with Asha Wagner and Kari De Soto in the back row for Wagner and De Soto on the front row.

"We'll miss the leadership and ball-control of the seniors," Schlick said. "This year's been very successful, and he looks forward to 1998."

"The season has gone by really fast," Lipana said. "It hasn't hit me yet that it's going to be the last (home) game in my entire collegiate career."

After the UCSB game, the Mustangs, as the probable fourth seed in the Big West Tournament will play the Eastern Division Champion, which in all likelihood will be the Idaho Vandals.

"It's going to be difficult, but just because they're ranked sixth doesn't mean they're going to get the automatic win," Lipana said.

"Going against UCSB's powerful lineup, Schlick will use a combination of players. Senior Louella Lipana will start at setter, with Asha Wagner and Kari De Soto in the middle and Trisha Jenssen, Melanie Hathaway and Melissa Pierce on the outside. Seniors Amy Aberle and Rumsey will rotate in the back row for Wagner and De Soto on the front row. Freshman Cyndi Eilers should also get significant playing time.
