ITS cleans computer code for Year 2000

By Steve Noone
Mustang Daily

In a race against time to make campus information systems Year 2000 complaint, Cal Poly Information Technology Services seems to be winning. Currently many computer systems around the world are set to crash if not corrected.

CURRENTLY, systems are set to crash if not corrected. However, the university's financial record system, which includes the overall budget, is not yet compliant. It is up to Sally Anderson, coordinator of Cal Poly's ITS Y2K task force, to make sure the computer systems that regulate campus operation correctly handle dates after Dec. 31, 1999.

"Student Information Systems, which include CAPTURE, Admissions and Records, Financial Aid, MustangInfo and Student Accounts, should be fully compliant," she said. "They were certified on Dec. 31, 1999."

"However, the university's financial record system, which includes the overall budget, is not yet compliant, but should be by the end of April," she said. "Energy management systems — which regulate campus heating, air conditioning, and some alarm systems — are controlled by embedded chips that are not compliant — those should be replaced by the vendor by April 12."

Eating Smart On Campus

March is National Nutrition Month and Campus Dining is using the opportunity to help students be more aware of their eating habits. Several eateries around campus are advertising nutritious meals to emphasize the convenience of attaining daily nutritional needs from several areas across campus.

Tapungo’s and Tapungo’s Super boast their Salad Burritos. Inside this tortilla is shredded lettuce, diced tomato, cheese (if desired), diced onion, and Girard’s fat free champagne dressing. For those who request it, a 99c fat free tortilla can substitute for the regular one.

City Deli offers custom-made sandwiches with non-fat mayonnaise to add to the taste but not the hips. Chick-fil-A serves chargrilled chicken sandwiches or garden salads, while Cowboy Grub offers their Garden Burger and spaghetti.

The Avenue also offers fresh fruit and veggie snacks from their coolers. To top off a healthy meal, customers can dabble in the nonfat frozen yogurt section which carries healthy toppings, trail mixes, and dried fruits.

For that extra boost in the day, both health and taste-conscious people can visit Lucy’s Juice and Tapango’s and Tapango’s fresh salads. Inside this tortilla is shredded chicken, light guacamole, raisins, and walnuts. To top off a healthy meal, customers can dabble in the nonfat frozen yogurt section which carries health toppings, trail mixes, and dried fruits.

The Avenue’s variety of food places also means a variety of healthy options. Patrons can load up on their carbohydrates at Pasta Pasta Pasta with the fresh prepped pasta along with sauce and toppings.

Welcome to Politics

With the recent and incredible rise from apathy I have witnessed on this campus, I feel it is my duty to praise my fellow students for their sudden leap into the beautiful world of politics. Whether you are a leader, a Carol, a Poly Plati or even the lack of parking spots on this campus, finally, I am seeing the opinion section filled with intelligent people willing to make their voices heard.

The surge of involvement is also prevalent in Associated Students Inc. Last Wednesday, at the ASI Board meeting, we hosted a task force of geeks, Poly Plati lovers and haters and a husky named Barker.

Allow me to tell you what happened. The ASI Board of Directors posted a resolution of rethinking the fee deferment rush policy and heard the pros and cons of the Poly Plati. Sound important? Damn right it was. If this student body has done anything in this last quarter, it has told the administration it won’t put up with "alternative, deceitful and shrewd." Absolutely not, in the business of education, necessarily a bad thing to have a little manipulation.

Politics are everywhere. If you are convincing your teacher to sway an grade -- or if you thought that Poly Plati deserved that is politics. It’s power plays, and Poly Plati’s administration has some of the finest power player’s I’ve seen. It is necessary to be a little manipulative, deceitful and shrewd. Absolutely not, in the business of education. However, at Poly Plati, it is misplaced. Poly Plati’s administration has a lot to learn and the building grounds for a foundation of education second only to Harvard and Stanford.

Our administration has been humbled. Realizing the tension and indignant attitudes swelling in the hearts and minds of students, the Poly Plati Steering Committee is now in a holding pattern. We are postponing the vote until the state legislature says no to differential funding. And an elected member of the Poly Plati Steering Committee told the Mustang Daily. It is a sign, my friends. They actually have their ear to the ground and see thePoly Plati would have.

Do we deserve a little pat on the back for actually giving a damn this year? Most definitely. The benefits of involvement in vital issues grow exponentially with each step. Do you think that if there wasn’t such a negative vibe on the Poly Plati and the overall lack of trust toward the administration that even the possibility of a vote wouldn’t come to pass? How about state Sen. Jack O’Connell — do you think he would have even proposed the possibility of the state making up the slack it sank to seven years ago of ASI and the administration had not humiliated him for it? Where did that humiliating originate? In the hearts and minds of every student who gave a damn this quarter. Student apathy is a disease only curable by the antibiotic known as caring, and we seem to have found that cure.

POLICY makes taking in some of the brightest and hardest working students in the nation. Yet students only get one week of rest between winter and spring quarter. Is this an adequate amount of time away from the stresses of school?

I believe another week is necessary for students to be able to rest up, visit their families, and still have enough time to fit in a trip to Mexico with friends. Don’t we hard-working, dedicated students deserve an extra week so we will not go crazy from studying and doing homework!

The thought of going back to school at the end of this month with a whole new set of courses makes me want to cry.

Why can’t classes begin a week early in the fall or a week later in the spring in order to provide another week of spring break? Is anyone really going to miss those couple of days of vacation when summer break lasts for almost three months! Even those taking summer school even have almost a month of vacation.

I sometimes hear my friends and even myself complain that summer break is too long. A lot of students actually look forward to starting school again and seeing their school friends after almost 12 weeks of vacation. But these same people, come spring quarter, are always dreading to begin school again just a week of spring break.

Some schools split up vacations so students get three major vacations each about 2-1/2 weeks long. A two-week vacation is also commonly used in the working world.

There have also been other trends made by companies to alleviate an all-work no-play atmosphere. For instance, some employers insist that their workers take a nap during the day, while others provide frequent outings so their employees can take a break. Their theory is that a less-stressed employee means a more productive worker.

If college is truly used to prepare us for the real world, then universities should follow some of these practices instead of setting up double standards between college students and the working class.

For example, someone who takes only one week of vacation from work is often seen as a workaholic, but it is expected of college students to only take one week for spring break. Students who decide to take another week’s vacation would have to face their professor’s wrath once they returned from school. But college students work even harder because many also have jobs and other extracurricular activities as well as balancing a full load of classes. Everyone, from students to those in the working world, deserves at least two weeks of vacation.

Joellen Smith is a Mustang Daily reporter who will try to make the most of her Spring Break this year.
The fall of feminism

By Erika Fields
Daily Targum (U-WIRE)

Feminism is a lot like MTV: it started out good, but somewhere along the way, it got into a dodgy, really wrong form. In its best form, feminism was simply the belief that women were equal to men. Period. All women should be feminists — there are so many at this school that you can’t keep track. Of course, in the popular trend, the most insane factions get the most publicity. Things like “feminazis.” “short-haired, big-breasted, anti-male, pro-baby, non-smart. The more we turn to laws mandating 600 words or more, the less you get to say. Some women. They believe they are either spiritually, physically, or emotionally superior to men. “If men had to have the babies, they’d never survive.” And “a woman who wants to get married is a fool, it’s legislating stupidity.” All are false, stupid, old. Apparently, logic escapes men and women.

Women won the right of choice of lifestyles, but the mainstream feminism has twisted this choice. Painting the two choices as the same, by portraying the choice as the same, by portraying the choice of the woman as a woman, not a woman, not a woman. Even though the majority of people in the United States do not go to college!

How about the percentage of women at Cal Poly is not exactly representative of the percentage of women in the United States — who cared?

Who are these people to decide how much diversity I need? I would think that minorities would be offended at the idea they were accepted to this school based on the fact that it is trying to be more diverse. We are all here because of performance — regardless of what color our skin is.

Nancy Rogers is a human development senior.

Andersen said that a study group was formed in 1997 to develop a campus action plan to bring Cal Poly's computer hardware and software up to Y2K compliance. The plan was implemented on June 15, 1998 when team members began testing campus systems for flaws.

"The problems could be in application software, operating systems, mainframe systems, network servers — we looked at everything," she said. "Most of the major ones are done or are being worked on right now."

Glaser oversees Student Information Systems as Cal Poly coordinator of student applications. He said he feels confident that these systems are compliant, and he will flip the dates ahead to 2000 to test them over the summer.

"We will be running a test of the system over the summer, but it's basically just to double check," he said. "We've added the term expansion wildly just to double check," he said.

Anderson said that an important part of Y2K preparations was deciding which systems were the most essential, and whether to repair or replace older equipment. The cost of the campus-wide upgrade is expected to reach almost $740,000.

First priority are the systems that could result in loss of life or potential harm — systems in the health center, campus telecommunication and alarm systems, and environmental control," she said.

"Next we looked at things that could cause an interruption in essential services — like CAPTURE and financial records," she said. "This quarter we've been working on contingency plans — what to do should systems fail."

"It's a lot more complex than most people think — we work with embedded chips in all of our facilities," Anderson said. "This you've got all kinds of software — some of the older programs are going to have problems."

Several common pieces of software that may not be Y2K compliant are Windows 95 and the OpenMail Client.

"OpenMail itself is compliant — the web client will work, but Hewlett-Packard is still testing an update to the user end! OpenMail GUL said," Anderson said. "Windows 95 is a compliant computer, but users should download the updates from Microsoft."

In an official Cal Poly year 2000 web page (www.calpoly.edu/year2000) shows the inventory and assessment stages, where problems are located and plans to repair or replace the affected systems are made, as nearly finished.

The final stage, Remediation, where the problems are actually fixed, is shown as about half complete.

"There are still some little things being worked on," Anderson said. "But I think students should be the most concerned about their personal computers."

She said students and staff should visit the web site for specific information on how to prepare themselves for Y2K.

"People should prepare for potential failures — they should have three to seven days of food and water, and you might want to fill your gas tank and have some cash on hand in case the ATMs stop working," she said.

"We have generators in the residence halls and a three-day food supply just in case there is a disruption."

Glcser said he was certain there would be some problems when 2000 comes, but he doubted they would be severe.

"I've heard an estimate that for every 2,000 lines of code written to correct the Y2K problem there will be one mistake made — and there are billions of lines of code being written," he said. "But will these shut down industries? I kind of doubt it."

City officials offers Year 2000 preparation advice

By Steve Noone

While some may be stockpiling canned food and ammunition, one group of county residents is working to educate the public about the year 2000 computer glitch.

The San Luis Obispo Y2K Action Alliance has posted a web page (www.county2k.org) which provides detailed information on how to prepare for potential Y2K-related problems including a loss of electricity, water and other utilities services personal, home, and financial safety issues; traveler preparation information; and emergency contact information.

Sally Anderson, coordinator of Cal Poly's Y2K task force and a member of the Action Alliance, offered some suggestions and reassurances for community members.

"I think there's going to be some disruptions, but of course I don't know where they're going to occur," she said. "We may see kind of a domino effect — a man on food and gasoline lines due to people stockpiling right before the end of the year. I think the computer may work just fine if it's the people who are unpredictable."

"FEMA has already publicly stated they don't guarantee there will not be power outages — and it's important to read their disclosure statements — but I'm not expecting any major disruptions," she said.

The Action Alliance web page recommends that people have extra cash on hand and enough food to last three days to a week in case supply lines are disrupted due to power loss or computer malfunctions.

Anderson said one of the main goals of the Action Alliance is to educate people about what reasonable preparations for Y2K would be.

"On one extreme you have people who don't even know what Y2K is," she said. "On the other extreme you have the dooms and gloom crowd — people stockpiling armes and buying gold, and some people moving out to the desert because they think it's going to be the end of the world."

"It's important for students and staff to be prepared, but I don't think we're going to see any really major problems," she said. "I know air traffic control is not fully compliant yet, although I doubt we're going to see planes falling out of the sky. But let's just say I'm not planning to travel on New Year's Eve."

Bush on abortion: Should be banned, but voters won't allow it

Texas Governor and likely GOP candidate suggests abortion-limiting legislation

WASHINGTON, Texas (AP) — George W. Bush, stepping sharply into the Republican Party's most fractious debate, said Monday he would back a constitutional amendment to outlaw most abortions if more voters supported it. But he said, "America is not ready to ban abortions."

Calling himself a "pro-life person," the Texas governor and likely presidential candidate told The Associated Press, "America is not ready to overturn Roe v. Wade because America's hearts are not right. And so, in the meantime instead of arguing over Roe v. Wade, what we ought to do is promote policies that reduce abortions."

Rush clarified his position in a lengthy exchange Monday that produced his most extensive comments on abortion so far. The conversation reflected his desire to appear conservative without using language that turns off swing voters, particularly women, who he hopes to win over.

"There are a lot of Americans who don't view the abortion issue as a matter of life, I'd say," Bush said. "That's one reason why I'm a pro-life person."

won three AL Most Valuable Player awards, appeared in 11 All-Star games, and entered the Hall of Fame in 1955, his third year of eligibility. For half a century, he was introduced as "the greater living player." Yet, the numbers don't account fully for his almost legendary place on the American cultural landscape. The reason Ernest Hemingway wrote about him and Simon and Garfunkel sang about him. There was something about the courtly bearing of this son of Italian immigrants that made him special.

DiMaggio touched all the bases of a legend

The Associated Press
In midcentury, when baseball stood above all American sports, Joe DiMaggio symbolized what fans loved about the game. Forty years later, he had lost little of his star quality.
"He was to people all over the world what a baseball player was supposed to be," said former Dodger manager Tommy Lasorda.
"If you said to God, 'Create some­one who was what a baseball player should be,' God would have created Joe DiMaggio. ... And he did," added Tim McCarver, who spent two decades as a catcher and is now one of baseball's premier broadcasters.
"The very mention of his name provokes class, dignity, elegance and profession­alism, both on and off the field," Lasorda said.
To those who knew him and to those who only admired him from afar, DiMaggio was the quintessential American hero. "This son of Italian immigrants gave every American something to believe in," President Clinton said.
"He became the very symbol of American grace, power and skill," Lasorda said. "I have no doubt that when future genera­tions look back at the best of America in the 20th century, they will think of the Yankee Clipper and all that he achieved," Mark McGwire, himself a larger than life figure after hitting 70 home runs last season, said he was saddened by DiMaggio's death.
"He was one of the best in the game," said McGwire, who never got a chance to meet DiMaggio.
"I think that's why the consecutive games streak of Lou Gehrig, a former DiMaggio teammate, said: "I feel fortunate and lucky that I had the opportunity to talk baseball with him."

Herb Kamm will always feel a glow of pride when he reads the inscription from the baseball Joe DiMaggio autographed for him. "For Herb Kamm, best always to a real friend," it reads.
Kamm is special assistant to the vice president for university advance­ment and a former journalism lectur­er and Mustang Daily adviser. He got the ball signed at a dinner with DiMaggio when Kamm was editor of the Cleveland Press.
When he heard the news of DiMaggio's death, Kamm said it hit him hard.
"I felt as though I had lost a per­sonal friend," he said Monday night.
His fascination with the baseball legend began as a child growing up in New Jersey.
"As a child growing up in New Jersey, I was a Yankee catcher," Kamm said. "He was such a great ball player." Kamm pursued a career as a jour­nalist, working in New York and Cleveland over the course of his career. He had many opportunities to interview DiMaggio, and in time, to develop a personal rela­tionship with him.
"Joe DiMaggio had a style about him that I don't think any other ball player had," Kamm said. "He wanted always to be known as a man who had dignity and who played the game with great pride."

Elian Brand, who missed almost half his freshman season with a broken foot, became a year later the only unanimous choice on the 1999-2000 Associated Press All-America team.

Duke's 6-6-inch, 6-foot-inch sophomore center was joined Monday on the first team by junior forward Tim Duncan of San Antonio, and Hamilton of Connecticut and senior guards Andre Miller of Utah and Jason Terry of Arizona, and junior guard Mookie Blaize of Michigan State.

Brand, who averaged 17.5 points and 9.9 rebounds for the top-ranked Blue Devils, was named on all 72 first-team ballots by the national media panel to become the fourth unanimous selection of the 90s. The others were Christian Laettner of Duke in 1992, Glenn Robinson of Purdue in 1994 and Tim Duncan of Wake Forest in 1995.

"It's unbelievable. I'm just elated right now. Just to have been considered a position for All-America by the Associated Press All-America is a special, special honor," said Brand, who shot 62 percent from the floor and 64.8 percent from the free-throw line.

"It's hard to expand upon that game, and hard to believe that the top five players in the nation," Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun said. "Last year, he just missed being a first-teamer and this year he has rightfully earned his spot among the top five players in college basketball.

Terry, 6-2, becomes the third Wildcat to earn All-America honors in the last two years. Former teammates Mike Bobby and Miles Simon were chosen last season.

Terry, the Pac-10 player of the year, led the league in scoring (22.1), assists (5.6) and steals (2.7) — the first player to do that since Gary Payton of Oregon State in 1988-89.

"There is no one more deserving for this honor because of what he has had to go through, in that he has had to provide leadership to the three freshmen that we have who have been here just two years," Arizona coach Lute Olson said.

Terry got 48 first-team votes and 38 more than Cleaves, 6-2, a second-team last season. Terry won Big Ten player of the year by the league's coaches for the second straight year. He averaged 11.8 points and 7.2 assists, and the 6-2 guard was given more credit for his team leadership than statistics.

Miller was the second-leading vote-getter in the 5-3-1 process, getting 38 points with 60 first-team votes. The Western Athletic Conference player of the year averaged 15.9 points, 5.5 rebounds, 7.2 assists and 2.3 steals, and the 6-2 guard had hard work paid off. Growing up it's one of the things you definitelydream of. I'm definitely a team player and the individual accolades come when the team wins.

Brady's win was an honorable mention. All-America last season despite missing 15 games with the injury, but he showed up for the big games when he led the U.S. team in the Goodwill Games in scoring and rebounding.

Terry was the only first-teamer who didn't win a trophy. All-American team. TCU's, Lee Nailon was the fifth member of the preseason team.
GREAT OUTING: Jeremy Cunningham pitched seven innings, allowing two unearned runs on Sunday.

Brian Oswos, shortstop Chris Hagman and Sheldon all scored twice for the Mustangs in the inning.

The second game of the double-header was not as much of a blowout as the first game, but Cal Poly still towered over Temple 9-6.

Center-fielder Bryan Gant scored three runs and added four hits. Ritter collected three hits and scored two runs and had two RBI.

On Saturday, the Mustangs once again defeated Temple, 9-2. The first inning was led by right-fielder Matt Brady who doubled to center and drove in outfielder Doug Morales.

Pitcher Mike Zirelli allowed five hits and stuck out 14, a season high. Brady scored two runs on four hits.

Three singles, including Gant's, two walks and one hit by Cal Poly completed their half of the inning. The Mustangs would lose the game 9-6.

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — He was simply and forever the Yankee Clipper, amazing America with The Streak, capturing it with his class and inspiring world ball in literature and song.

Joe DiMaggio died at home Monday, surrounded by family and friends, following a five-month battle with lung cancer.

At age 84, Joe's life has left and gone away. But his legend lingered, shoulder-to-shoulder with the likes of Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, his fellow Yankees. Very few others could measure up to them on the sports scene this century.

DiMaggio underwent surgery in October, but complications for weeks afterward and finally into a coma briefly, during his 99-day hospitalization. But he also abandoned his doctors by reportedly refusing to come back.

DiMaggio left the hospital Jan. 14, to recuperate at home, when his bed was decorated with a sign that said, "April 9, Yankee Stadium — Bird." He died shortly after midnight, said Moss Engelberg, his longtime friend and attorney.

According to Chris Berry, Joe DiMaggio had always been known for his dedication to family and friends. He was a devoted son, husband, and father, always putting others before himself.

DiMaggio, who played for the New York Yankees from 1936 to 1951, was a five-time American League MVP and a 13-time All-Star. He holds the major league record for the longest hitting streak, 56 games, which he accomplished in 1941.

The Mustangs took three of four games this weekend and six of nine on the homestand. Mustangs shoot down Owls, grab three wins

The Cal Poly baseball team won three games this weekend against Temple University, but lost the fourth on Monday, 3-2.

The first Mustang run came at the bottom of the second inning. Shortstop Craig Ritter walked and reached, but his科学技术 situation was doubled to center, driving in Ritter.

The third inning was scoreless and it wasn't until the bottom of the fourth that Cal Poly once again. Third baseman B.J. Richardson tripled to right field scoring a run.

Trailing 2-0, Temple began to come back in the eighth inning. Four runs were scored on four hits, off reliever Mike Shannon.

The Mustangs were not able to regain control of the game. "Our performance was not up to par," said center fielder Tanner Troup. "Everyone came into the game expecting to win, and we took the game pretty lightly. We were all on the same level, no one really showed any emotion, no one picked it up."

DiMaggio led the league in hitting, slugging, and on-base percentage in 1941, 1947, and 1949. He was also a two-time Gold Glove winner and a three-time Silver Slugger.

Joe DiMaggio was a legend — a sports icon who was beloved by many. His legacy continues to live on, inspiring generations of athletes and fans alike.

The death of Joe DiMaggio has left a void in the sports world, and his memory will be forever remembered as one of the greatest baseball players of all time.

Joe DiMaggio: "I never saw a player who was as graceful. There was an aura about him that was amazing."
