"It would have liked to have seen Sugar Ray before this recent album," said speech communication senior Kenny Stevenson. "Before they were a hard core band, now they sing airy little pop tunes."

Recreation sophomore Mariah Taylor enjoyed full quarter's tour and is excited to attend again. "I went down last time and I had a great time at the MTV village," Taylor said. "There was a lot of people there and it was like a big social event. I am also looking forward to going to Sugar Ray. I think they are a cool band."

KCPR Music Director Marcia Cozzi also feels this village will be an improvement over the last one because different companies are sponsoring it. "It is not a repeat of the same sponsors so it's not like seeing the same movie again," Cozzi said.

According to ASI Program Board it is not easy to book a concert that pleases the entire campus. "I would have liked to have seen Sugar Ray before this recent album," said speech communication senior Kenny Stevenson. "Before they were a hard core band, now they sing airy little pop tunes."

Prof awarded for cultural communication study

Inner-city students don't communicate the same as middle-class, research says

By April Charlton
Mustang Daily

The newest professor in Cal Poly's teacher education program has won an award for research she conducted in cross-cultural communication.

Roberta Herter just started teaching classes at Cal Poly's University Center for Teacher Education in the fall. Herter didn't win for her teaching skills alone, but because of her research on the complexities of language learning.

She received a letter in January from the American Educational Research Association stating she had won the 1999 Division K Research Award for Exemplary Research in Training and Teacher Education.

"Winning was stunning," Herter said. "I was very gratified. You don't win prizes teaching.

Herter said she doesn't know how many other people she was competing with for the award. She was nominated by UCTE Director Susan Roper, who couldn't be reached for comment.

Herter conducted her research over a 12-year period in Detroit, Mich. She was an English teacher at Henry Ford High School from 1979 to 1998, where she taught day and night classes.

She decided to study cross-cultural communication because she has always had an interest in linguistics and "Kid language."

"I was engaged in it myself, as a white teacher in an African-American school, for my entire career," she said.

Herter's research included studying students from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and working with the students from the high school.

All the students in the university were Euro-American. The students took a theater class together and Herter studied their interaction, with each other.

The high school students would often isolate themselves, and the college students would sit on top of the desks when speaking to the group.

She said they often used questions to silence the high school students, the way a teacher sometimes uses questions to silence his or her class.

Herter said it was evident the university students didn't know how to "represent themselves in an urban environment."

FRUIT OF HER LABOR:
UCTE professor Roberta Herter received recognition from the American Educational Research Association for studying the differences in the way cultures communicate.

"We assume because someone comes from a middle class environment they know how to act — and it's not always true," she said. "We don't have enough opportunities for cross-cultural communication — urban schools and communities are cut off."

Herter said students, especially the most disadvantaged, are damaged by a lack of cross-cultural communication because they don't get global experience and their "mobile access is minimised."

"I think we're becoming more and more isolated in our communities."

"Students' access to a larger world isn't there because of isolation."

She said it's important that a society has cross-cultural communication in its educational systems.

"Our idea of schools is that we'll move people around in a mobile society and that's just not happening."

Herter thinks research is important to the teaching profession and continues in her research endeavors at Cal Poly.

"Research, I think, is a really important part of teaching. Research informs teaching."

She's currently working on a project involving a reading program with Cal Poly students and Paulding Middle School students, as well as a project where she is interviewing people who are making the transition from labor work to knowledge work.

According to Herter, she has been working on the second project for 10 years and is looking to see if people's high school educations prepared them for the choices they make later in life.

Herter said she learned a lot from her years of research and hopes others will learn something too. She published the findings of her Henry Ford High School study in the book, "Literacy & Democracy."

"I think that this is just one of many concerns that the university has," said Steve Morris, kinesiology senior. Most of the public transit buses are too hot and unclean. The "first impression is that the bus will take you on campus until 8 or 9 o'clock, but it won't take you off campus that late," Morris said.

Cappi agrees there are areas the bus service can improve.

"Currently there's no bus stop at the library. Students have to walk all the way to the University Union to catch the bus," Cappi said.

Mark Anselmi, a Public Safety dispatcher.
“There were no power outages, but there were debris and trees that came down,” Anselmi said.
Many people spent Saturday in the downtown area of San Luis Obispo braving the wind.
Trage Storey, a guest student who works at Barnes &
Noble, didn’t see much downtown.
“The parking structure was really interesting because it was really dark inside. I didn’t think about the power outages until I got inside, but about half of the lights were out in there,” Storey said.
Some students get stuck in the heavy traffic that glazed downtown.
“(Traffic) was a mess. An entire block of Higuera was blocked off causing the traffic to double on the side streets. People who would normally go down Higuera (Street) had to take the side streets. It was more impact-ated on the side streets,” said Jenni Havlin, a construction management senior.
Some residents in the area of South Higuera Street were still without power late into the d. on Sunday.
Williams said MTV decided to come to Cal Poly again because MTV really liked Cal Poly’s enthusiasm. He also said it showed a lot about Cal Poly because MTV is very selective about which campuses they decide to visit.
Tony Rogondino, ASI Concerts Committee chair, said, “I see Sugar Ray perform in Hollywood and they put on a high energy show. It is difficult to bring concerts to Cal Poly due to the time and availability of bands. We are lucky to bring quality entertainment to Cal Poly.”

Windle said MTV tours bring more equality music, like Beck.
MTV has few people, with a lot of immey. They could have brought more quality entertainment to Cal Poly but that had problems with the heavy winds.
An Murkowski, mechanical engineering senior, said a skylight blew off the top of his house in the Madonna area of San Luis Obispo.
“My friends and I were talking in the living room and all of a sudden I heard this sort of knocking sound and the skylight flew off. I could see the sky. I told my roommate to climb up there and get (the skylight) off the roof, but it fell off and cracked before he got to it,” Murkowski said.

How to make your college experience more valuable

A s graduation nears, I am compelled to look back on my years at Cal Poly. For the most part, they have been the greatest times of my life. It may sound like a cliche, but it's true.

I've learned so many things in San Luis Obispo, not just from Cal Poly, but also from the situations that life has dealt me. In just ten short weeks, it will be time to move on to the "real world." First, however, I plan to enjoy my last quarter and do everything I ever wanted to do while at Cal Poly. This column is my first endeavor. I hope to share what I've learned throughout my college years and a little bit of my thoughts on issues that touch our lives.

For many of you, as for myself, it will take more than four years to graduate. This is not detrimental. As a matter of fact, think of it as an opportunity to explore classes that you may not usually think about taking.

We are here for an education first and foremost. Many are here to get a job and make some cash, but all that will come in time — we hope. This is the best, and for some, the only opportunity to gain knowledge about subjects that are not necessarily in your major.

Whatever your major is, you will most likely have experienced a quarter where they couldn't get certain classes or were forced to take about your spiritualities. Take Christian Origins, Hinduism, or Buddhism. Learn about the world systems and its problems, or compare economic systems to understand how they affect the world around you. Take global contemporary issues, the world system and its problems, or a comparative economics or political systems class.

Learn about your physical abilities. Take a soccer, tennis, or a bowling class. Learn about personal issues. Take human sexuality or pairing and marriage. Learn to be creative. Take glass blowing, drawing, or acting. Join the debate team or Model United Nations and travel to conferences and competitions. Become a KCTR FJ or write for the Mustang Daily.

Take something just for fun. The point is to get the most out of your education.

Why? We are here to become well-rounded individuals, not just engineers, architects or accountants. Your education will only be as valuable as you make it.

Empower yourself to not only become a productive member of the workforce, but also to know your culture, views, values and opinions. This is what truly makes your college experience valuable.

Toni Baez is a political science senior.

Another option for finding cheaper textbooks online

Editor:

As a fourth year graduating senior, I have seen many changes take place on the Cal Poly campus. One of the more noticeable changes is the recent increase of advertising by the El Corral Bookstore. Not only does it advertise their supposed highest buyback prices (other wise, the students, have to get tons of signatures proving our claim), but it also place fake advertisements claiming to be less expensive than its competitors.

On top of this, they have the nerve to deny a Cal Poly club the right to have a fund-raiser on campus, which could potentially infringe upon the El Corral Bookstore's "exclusive contract" with the university.

As the President of the Order of Omega Honor Society, one of my goals is to contribute to the overall well being of Cal Poly students. I want to make students aware of all the options that are available. One of the available options that are available to Cal Poly students is an easy to use, on-line discount bookstore called VarsityBooks.com.

This company is willing to give my club, and any other club on campus that wants to participate, a donation for spreading the word about their organization. This money would be used to put on a senior banquet for all graduating members of the Greek system, which would benefit about 320 students at Cal Poly.

It appalls me when I go to get my From 81L! I must have it signed by the head of the bookstore. What upsets me even more, is he refused to sign it because I am potentially having an impact on the textbook sales of El Corral Bookstore. He is protecting his profits at the expense of students, who could save on textbooks and help their organization at the same time.

I am extremely disappointed in the mentality of the officials that run Cal Poly. It disturbs me greatly that the textbook profits of El Corral Bookstore are more important than allowing a hard-working club the opportunity to pass out flyers for a donation in order for them to have a banquet to honor its graduates.

Like I said before, I remember the day when El Corral dominated the textbook market and ripped students off because the students had no other option. And now I see the day where El Corral is scared to have yet another competitor, it denies access to students from their entry.

Let me just ask one question to the El Corral bookkeepers: If your prices really are the lowest and you do offer the highest buyback prices, then why are you so scared that you deny any of your competitors to advertise on campus?

Jennifer Sargent is a social science senior and president of the order of Omega.

We can't just stand by and watch people die

By Johan Wanstrom
Oklahoma Daily (U-WIRE)

A civil war is taking place in Kosovo, and I must admit, I do not like the idea of NATO dropping bombs on Yugoslavia. A lot of innocent civilians will lose their lives because of the air strikes. I am not the only one who is skeptical about the airstrikes. People all over the world are complaining about the bombings. The trouble is, I have not yet heard a better alternative to using military force.

One common argument is the United States has no right to intervene in a civil war. People ask what would have happened if Great Britain or France had intervened in our Civil War. Others argue America should not be the world's police force.

The NATO intervention in Yugoslavia, however, is justified—not because of a civil war, but because of the horror the Belgrade regime is capable of. President Slobodan Milosevic has a proven record of "getting rid" of ethnic groups he dislikes. One only has to look at the terror in Bosnia to understand what this regime is capable of doing. The killing of thousands of Muslims in Srebrenica is just one example of the terror that took place during the civil war in Bosnia.

Stories from Kosovo indicate similar ethnic cleansing is taking place despite Milosevic's promises to stop the killing. Milosevic is simply evil and a liar who can not be trusted. The question then arises about whether we should stand by and watch thousands of people be killed because of their ethnicity? History tells us we cannot let this happen. There were many people at the beginning of World War II who argued the United States should stay out of the war. Many of those who objected were isolationists who argued we had no obligation to fight for a better world— to fight against evil.

We could have stood out of WWII and allowed Hitler to continue killing millions of Jews and people who opposed his regime. There are, however, very few Americans who regret we decided to fight the evil. The problem with U.S. foreign policy is we often try to become involved in too much, often because of domestic interest groups. America cannot dictate how every nation of the world should be ruled; we have to accept that all people do not share our democratic values. America cannot intervene in every minor conflict, but we can make sure despots all over the world know we are willing to fight for the rights of people to exist, regardless of ethnicity.

Milosevic has been involved in ethnic cleansing before, he is doing it right now and there is nothing that indicates he would not do it in the future. No matter how much we dislike the idea of bombin9 other nations, we have to stand up against Milosevic's policies of killing and deporting people because of their ethnicity. It is not the success of our efforts that matters. What matters is that we are standing by our moral obligation to support people's rights to exist regardless of ethnicity. The alternative of doing nothing would be a moral failure for modern civilization.

Johan Wanstrom is a student at the University of Oklahoma

Higgins shows who rules women's tennis

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Martina Hingis showed that tennis queen Anna Kournikova still has something to learn about winning, taking the Family Circle Cup 6-4, 6-3 Sunday.

Hingis, the world’s No. 1 player, and Kournikova were the darlings of the Sea Pines Racquet Club this week. Officials, fans and advertisers see them, along with teen-agers Venus and Serena Williams, as the future of women’s tennis.

But while the 18-year-old Hingis won her second Family Circle title and 22nd WTA championship, Kournikova, 17, still is searching for her first tour title.

Hingis said she felt overpowered by the excitement over the all-Williams Lipton final last week and Kournikova’s stellar run here.

“With the Williams’ sisters and Anna, I was saying, ‘What about me?’” Hingis said. “I think this was about time.”

Hingis has made the Family Circle into a can’t-miss tournament on her schedule. She became the youngest No. 1 in women’s history here in 1997, then followed it with a victory.

“Since I’ve always been very successful here, becoming No. 1 and having a lot of great memories,” said Hingis, who earned $150,000, “I always look forward to coming back to this place.”

Kournikova gave her a run on the courier concourse and practice courts this week. The saw Russian star’s power was one of the highest items at the season’s first clay court tournament. Her doubles matches got standing-room-only attention. Even Fox Sports Net analyst Pam Oliver told Kournikova, when presenting her with the runner-up honor, that she was “really popular with the men.”

But Hingis, smiling most of the way, showed who’s No. 1 on the court.

She trailed Kournikova 4-3 in the opening set, but broke the Russian’s serve three straight times in the next six games.

When Kournikova stacked back to close the second set to 3-2, Hingis broke serve again to regain control. When Kournikova’s forehand slapped into the net, Hingis had closed out her third tournament win this year and her 10th straight Family Circle singles victory.

Kournikova’s game was erratic. She double-faulted twice in the first set’s seventh game to go up 4-3. Then she double-faulted twice to lose the next one at love.

Hingis strolled steady throughout, never letting Kournikova break away.

And when the crowd tried to pull Kournikova through, Hingis would remind them with a surprise drop shot or sharp forehand winner who’s the best in the world.

TOO FAR! Mustang second baseman Tracee Carlisle applies the tag to a Gaucho runner who slid past the base.

For someone who threw a complete-game the day before, she did exceptionally well,” Boyer said.

Minus the seventh inning excitement, it was a dull Saturday game for the Mustangs, who tallied a whopping seven errors and left the bases loaded on three separate occasions. The strong gusts of wind and cold weather did not help either.

“(The weather) made a big difference,” Duncan said. “(Friday) was nice, today (the weather) made everything easier. It makes playing a little tougher.”

Good Friday was a good Friday for the Mustangs, who won both games of a doubleheader for the second time this season.

In game one, the score was tied 1-1 in the fourth inning. In an uncharacteristic move, Boyer decided to pinch-hit sophomore Melissa Haley with a runner on third base.

Going into the series, Haley had just two hits on .13 batting. Haley stepped up her game and hit an RBI single, scoring what would eventually be the winning run.

“The last week in practice, (Hale) has just been hitting the ball really well,” Boyer said explaining her reasoning to pinch-hit Haley. “Call it a hunch and a hunch that paid off.

“It was my turn and I was due for a hit,” Haley said. “I’ve been hitting well in practice, but you’ve got to convert it to the field during actual game-play.”

Jasper and Jenny Lee both picked up wins for the Mustangs, and combined for no earned runs on Friday. Jasper improved her record to 8-9, while Lee now has five wins and seven losses.

“We shut down their hitting,” Boyer said of Friday’s pair of victories. “The pitching was phenomenal and our defense played well behind them.”

The Mustangs will travel to Santa Clara University Tuesday to make up a previously rained-out game with the Broncos.

Johnson vs. Brown: Dream matchup

Los Angeles (AP) — It was a dream matchup last fall, when they squared off in the opening of the NL division series between the Houston Astros and San Diego Padres. Now, pitching for different teams and big, big money.

Randy Johnson of the Arizona Diamondbacks and Kevin Brown of the Los Angeles Dodgers oppose each other again in the highlight of Monday's 11-season opener.

Johnson vs. Brown. The Big Unit and his blazing fastball against the sledging geometry and his nasty slider.

Rams will certainly be at a premium. "If I was going to go to an opening day, ours is the one," said Todd Hundley, who will make his debut with the Dodgers as Brown's catcher. "If you're a fan of offense, that's not the game to go to."

The final scene when Johnson and Brown pitched against each other last Oct. 17: Big surprise — 2-1, Padres.

"Imagine that," Hundley said with a smile. The game at Dodger Stadium had an electric sellout.

A four-run Mustang attack in the bottom of the seventh inning Saturday blew away UC Santa Barbara, literally.

On a day that had enough wind to overturn trash cans and PA speakers, Cal Poly prevailed, 5-4, with a rally in the seventh inning. In fact, the Mustangs tallied six hits, including three doubles in their last inning comeback, to complete a three-game series sweep over UCSB.

Cal Poly won both games of a Friday doubleheader, 3-1, 2-0. With two outs, Mustang shortstop Leilani Lindsey singled in the go-ahead run, which gave Cal Poly the victory and a 14-19 overall record.

5-4 in the Big West Conference.

“There weren’t any displays due to the wind, but it just wasn’t ideal playing conditions,” said head coach Lisa Poet, whose club jumped from eighth place to a three-way tie for the league’s second place. UCSC fell from first place to a three-way tie for fifth.

The Gauchos led 4-1 going into the bottom of the seventh inning, but left-fielder Sara Stockton started off the inning with a ground-rule double. With one out, third baseman Kasey Poet and catcher Kelly Duncan both responded with RBI doubles, placing the Mustangs within one run of UCSB.

Designated player Christie Wells followed with an RBI single and right-fielder Alana Maquez added a base hit, setting up Lindsey’s game-winning single.

“I was so focused,” said Poet, who is 6-foot-4 and weighs 190 pounds. “I knew the hit was going to be a double.”

The Mustangs pulled off a series win at Sacramento.

Mustang Daily

After losing the first six Big West games, the Cal Poly baseball team has won five of its last six, including two of three at Sacramento State this weekend.

The Mustangs won Thursday, 4-2, lost Friday, 8-4, and won Saturday, 5-1.

The Mustangs were tied at one Saturday until scoring twice in the ninth. Freshman Jason Kelly picked up the win (2-1).

On Thursday, the Horned five runs in the first inning of Jeremy Cunningham gave them a lead they would not relinquish.

The Mustangs did get solid pitching from Jesse Guillup and Dan Mertens who threw 17 scoreless innings. Ben Gunt, Craig Ratter and Matt Reddy each collected two hits for the Mustangs.

Friday, right-hander Mike Zellars threw a complete game for the Mustangs.

The senior improved to 6-2 on the season allowing just three hits over eight scoreless innings. He did allow two runs in the ninth but finished the win.
