Poly student Eric Chavez follows in grandfather's steps

By Joellen Smith

Mustang Daily

It was Eric Chavez's grandfather, Cesar Chavez, who taught him one person can truly make a difference.

The Cal Poly student said he often prays to his grandfather for guidance. He strives to continue his grandfather's struggle to provide a voice for thousands of migrant farm workers.

The younger Chavez, a 29-year-old speech communication senior, is a union organizer for United Farm Workers, which Cesar Chavez founded and led until his death in 1993.

Established in 1966, UFW negotiates union contracts for farm workers that require protective clothing against pesticide exposure, clean drinking water and breaks from work.

Eric Chavez has been helping out with statewide events honoring his grandfather's legacy for the past couple of years.

"March 31, 1977 and died on April 4, 1993."

"My purpose is to represent my family, and continue these events," Eric Chavez said.

Two weeks ago, Chavez spoke to about 550 people at a cultural festival in Santa Maria. He talked about his grandfather and how people can carry on the legacy of a man who lived an amazing life.

When Eric Chavez's father, Federico, was young, Cesar Chavez took his children into the fields when they were home from school.

Polyratings site attracts 13,150 hits

By Cathy Lee

Mustang Daily

The Polyratings professor-rating web site continues to increase in popularity with a steady stream of visitors accessing the site almost every day.

As of Monday, the site had received 13,150 hits and 966 evaluations.

"It's been actually pretty steady, with more evaluations coming in every day."

— Forrest Lanning, Polyratings co-creator

The site, which is similar to the University of California, Berkeley's web site, has attracted a steady stream of visitors accessing the site since it launched last spring.

"It has been actually pretty steady, with more evaluations coming in every day," Lanning said.

The site began with 25 evaluations on Jan. 9 and continues to grow since Lanning and his roommate Doug Dilbit, a computer engineering senior, created the web site over winter break. Students can evaluate professors online and read other anonymous comments on Polyratings.

ROTC student to receive top award among Cal Poly cadets

By Joellen Smith

Mustang Daily

A Cal Poly student with more than 10 years of military experience will be honored with the George C. Marshall ROTC award in Lexington, Va. next week.

Cadet Scott Leach, a 29-year-old speech communications senior, will be presented with the award while attending the national security seminar beginning April 13. The George C. Marshall award recognizes seniors involved in ROTC programs who excel in leadership and academic ability. The award is given to the top cadet at each school.

Leach was picked because of his excellence in leadership, especially in ROTC events this past year, said Lt. Col. Richard Kane, who runs the ROTC program at Cal Poly and serves as the department head of military science.

Eight other cadets were also considered for the nomination.

One only needs to look at Leach's military experience to realize that Leach is a unique ROTC cadet, said Capt. Bob Whiteholt, Leach's coach for Ranger Challenge, a team competition among ROTC units on the West Coast.

Leach began his military career in 1989 as a parachute for Operation Just Cause in Panama. Then he was stationed in Saudi Arabia for Operation Desert Storm/Desert Shield. He also served in Somalia and younger Chavez said.

The family tradition of participating in the UFW movement was then passed down to Eric Chavez and his cousins when they were children.
Describing himself as a "weekend warrior," Chavez attended many UFW events when not in school.

"Some of the loudest voices (there) would be me and my cousins," he said.

Before going to Cal Poly, Chavez spent almost two years working full-time for UFW. He also served as his grandfather's personal assistant and chauffeur for nine months in 1991.

From that time Eric Chavez holds some of his fondest memories of his grandfather because they shared stories, a love for jazz music and language.

"(Cesar) was a very entertaining man, obviously through his travels, experiences and his work," Chavez said.

During the next three years, the younger Chavez then moved to New York. Florida and Washington, D.C. to help organize public support and lobby for UFW.
He was in Florida when he heard of his grandfather's death. A year later Eric Chavez helped organize a 343-mile march from Delano (near Bakersfield) to Sacramento that took place on Cesar Chavez's birthday. The march served as a reassurance that UFW will continue Cesar Chavez's work to protect farm workers.

Five months later, President Bill Clinton posthumously awarded Cesar Chavez, the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest award that can be given to a civilian.

Despite Eric Chavez's ability to continue on with his grandfather's work, he said there will only be one Cesar Chavez.

"The strength, religion and the force that he had ... he was so dynamic," Chavez said.

William Martinez Jr., a professor in the modern languages and literatures department, said the UFW movement spawned student activism in the 1960s and created more open doors to Chicanos.

"The labor movement really initiated ... the educational reform movement among Chicanos in California," he said.

Eric Chavez said the pressures placed on him because he is Cesar Chavez's grandson only motivate him to work harder.

"I want to basically make sure that when (my grandfather) looks down at me, he is smiling at the work I do."

The Cal Poly Multicultural Center will host a student-panel discussion on humanity called "Recognizing and Understanding How We Are Related" on Thursday.
This event is aimed at promoting a discussion of how humans are more related than people think. "This event will help us go beyond the labels and recognize that we are all humans," said David Iniguez, coordinator and speaker of the event.

Iniguez, an animal science senior, said this event is being held in response to an ignorance he believes people have.

He said that especially Cal Poly students, who are from a polytechnic school, should go into fields that are working toward a positive change for humankind.

"We have to remember that we are in school not just for ourselves but for the betterment of humanity," Iniguez said.

they were interested in trying to do the same thing," Lanning said.

Lanning and Dahms have had problems with ResNet. "ResNet represented," Mark Tomasko said, "we were breaking the rules on ResNet." Lanning said. Lanning said they have not encountered any more problems since the problem with ResNet. Lanning said they modeled their site after the online bookseller Amazon.com. "We liked the way people could make comments on the books and read what each other wrote," he said. "We tried to make our site similar to that. We did a lot of brainstorming ... looking at ratings and applications."

Lanning said last quarter he was interested in creating a web-site when he had a bad experience with a physics professor, and the goal was to allow students to research on professors.

DOUBLE TAKE: The front page of the Polyratings web site, located at polyratings.kenwtech.com, is a similar design to that of the University of California, Berkeley, on the Internet at www.berkeley.edu.

"The soul reason for creating the web-site was a tool as a student guide on who to take for a class," Lanning said. "The guy was the worst lecturer, and he spoke in a monotone voice," Lanning said. "I ended up dropping the class on the first day, but my friend stayed in the class," Lanning said. He said he is happy the site has made an influence on students at Cal Poly. "We weren't sure if we could deal with the problems ... it's been positive," Lanning said.

Man accused of carrying out hit after the contract with victim's son was canceled

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Sixteen-year-old Brandon Lund wanted his father dead. So the teen-aged came up with a solution straight out of the "T.J. Hooker" reruns he loved to watch. He hired a hitman. But the former Box Scout learned that calling off a hit isn't like cancelling a dentist appointment. Dressed in black, the alleged hitman, Billy Don Wilson and his gang cut the phone line and crept through a window of the Lund house. Wilson pushed Mark Lund onto a bed, shoved a pillow in his face and shot him in the head, prosecutors allege. Then, a member of Wilson's gang scratched a cross on Brandon Lund's face with his fingernail and slashed his throat with a knife, prosecutor say.

On Monday, Wilson went on trial on murder charges.

Cuba. "Anyone that CNN shows, I was likely there," Leach said.

Leach joined the Cal Poly Mustang Battalion in September 1997. His previous military training made him a standout, Worldbridge said. Outscoring 3:202 other cadets from across the country, Leach placed first nationally in a ROTC advanced camp last year. The five-week camp evaluates all cadets involved in the ROTC program.

His performance earned him the ranking of Battalion Commander, the highest ranking cadet at Cal Poly. "He's the cream of the crop," Worldbridge said.

Leach said he was not sure what to make of all this attention he's receiving. "I see myself as an average person to receive this award is surprising," he said. Leach said he feels honored to be honored in the national security seminar where featured speakers include General Henry H. Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera. "I am looking forward to hear top people speak about what I learned through my education in (ROTC)," Leach said.

Leach seems more comfortable talking about the seminar than his accomplishments in the ROTC program. "(Leach) is notoriously modest," Worldbridge said. "Trying to get him to talk about himself is like pulling teeth."

Worldbridge said Leach was just born to serve in the military. "He's an expert marksman," he said.

Since many of Leach's fellow cadets have never been involved in combat, Leach acts as a role model for the 55 cadets in the ROTC program. Kane said.

"When you're 18 or 19, you are still pretty young," Kane said. Ten years makes a big difference, especially when one is experienced as much as Leach is, he said.

Worldbridge echoed Kane's comments.

"Everyone emulates him, even his teachers," Worldbridge said. "The most memorable thing is his genuine care for others."

He said Leach was a good example for the Army because he is nothing like the stereotype of the angry, yelling sergeant displayed on television and in movies.

"I have never heard him raise his voice," Worldbridge said.

Flynt publication shouldn't be taken seriously

In 1989, Larry Flynt fought for our constitutional right to publish and distribute a magazine called " Hustler " that has been hidden since 1989, but Flynt is not about to give up, not even for all the pitfalls and the lack of support from the media. In this issue, " The Report " is probably the most important example of its publisher. Despite his First Amendment rights, Flynt's magazine has been shut down by the government. "The Report" is a publication of Progressive magazine, but it is not the same thing as " Hustler ".
The one-sided perspective on the events in Kosovo is reminiscent of the severe form of stagnation in the former Soviet Union, when all mass media hysteria was conducted, controlled or censored by Brezhnev's clique. The poem that appeared in yesterday's issue of Mustang Daily, "Yellow Ribbons for our solders." confirms how efficient the brainwashing ideological mechanisms in the United States are.

The images of the captured soldiers are an essential part of the ideological propaganda. The U.S. government wishes to invoke international law under the Geneva Convention to protect three American soldiers held by the Yugoslav government.

Yet at the same time, the 19 states of NATO, led by the United States, are or have just been flagrantly violating international law — and without even any declaration of war — by bombarding military and civilian targets in Yugoslavia.

The NATO states deliberately bypassed the United Nations and set aside its consultative procedures for the discussion and settlement of international disputes. NATO members, including the United States, are blatantly abrogating — even more than violating — the mainstay of international law.

NATO, and particularly the United States, has been obstructing international criminal law. It has deliberately failed to arrest persons indicted for genocide and other violations of human rights and rendered them to the War Crimes Court in The Hague.

The very man, Slobodan Milosevic, who was selected and supported to guarantee and implement the Dayton agreement, is now being denounced and used as the pretext for this illegal NATO bomb-attack against an entire country. However, Milosevic abrogated the Kosovo autonomy ten years ago and began his autocratic rule banning Serbian nationalism Western support for the breakup of Yugoslavia gave Milosevic that opportunity.

NATO bombing has effectively emasculated the Serbian opposition to Milosevic and his rule. This opposition offered the best chance for a democratic, peaceful political settlement and the furtherance of more humanitarian policies. This domestic opposition to Milosevic was long led by the Serbian Peace, Women's, and other Democratic movements. They became a worldwide movement of peaceful mobilizations when they brought hundreds of thousands of people out into the streets for months on winter nights. Their movement obliged Milosevic to invoke a number of undemocratic and illegal measures. If the NATO powers had even the slightest interest in promoting democracy and human rights anywhere in Yugoslavia, they would have worked with, rather than under, the domestic democratic movements.

NATO bombing, as the CIA and Pentagon reportedly predicted, has immediately increased the deprivation of the Kosovo Albanians' lives, property, home and person. It is difficult to see how any measures could restore even what little they had before NATO bombs and Serbian persecution drove them out into neighboring countries. And still at the time of this writing, the number of Albanian refugees from Serbia does not yet or is only just beginning to match the number of Serbian refugees to Serbia, who were forced out of Croatia by ethnic cleansing that was itself instigated and supported by NATO policy. So there is more than just hypocrisy in the comparison and relation of these two flows of refugees. It will be a massacre worthy of the Croatians and Serbs, who were displaced with NATO help and still have found no place to take root, end up in Serbia.

Serbian Kosovo after NATO also helps to chase the Albanians out. NATO member states have always denounced and combated all "terrorist" military and para-military forces except of course those that they themselves have trained, armed and financed around the world from India-China, via Afghanistan and Angola to Colombia and Guatemala and Nicaragua. Yet now the military wing of the Albanian movement in Kosovo has become "freedom fighters."

There is a touch of hypocrisy in the genocidal changes the U.S. has brought against Kosovo. Indeed, the U.S. itself has been responsible for the death of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis, women and children through bombing and a soon decade-long embargo, that cripples the Iraqi economy and stagnates social services — and for what? In other parts of the former Yugoslavia, the U.S. and some of its NATO partners set up some "safe havens" in Bosnia, and then "helplessly" tried to watch massive massacres and ethnic cleansing. "Safe" areas were taken over by Bosnian Serbs with help from the same Yugoslav army who massacred whole communities of Muslims in Srebrenica and elsewhere.

Thousands of Serbs were driven out by Croats who similarly enriched themselves, only on a still larger scale. Shameful hypocrisy also has been the consistent failure, not even refusal, of the major Western NATO powers to avoid and then to remedy the breakup of Yugoslavia and its dealist consequences that are allegedly of "old ethnic" origin. For it is, for it, at each step of the way, it was those Western powers and their policy, or lack thereof, that provoked and condemned the domino-like set of events that are too long even to summarize. Moreover, each time it was the Western powers who refused to accept settlements that would avoid bloodshed until it was much too late and the combination of countless deaths with their power politics resulted in what was essentially the self-same settlement that had been resisted years before. (For example, the Orenz Plan and the Dayton Agreement.)

So again the Western powers hold out for a "settlement" they knew must be unacceptable to Yugoslavia, while in Paris all major Yugoslav parties, including the Albanians, came to an agreement that the Western powers rejected.

So NATO started bombing because it wanted to and not because all other options had run out. No sooner did NATO bombs start falling than the Russian Prime Minister flew to Belgrade and negotiated an agreement that would have stopped the persecution and invasion of Albanians in Kosovo and would have permitted an immediate ceasefire. But of course that was not acceptable to the major NATO powers, for whom the plight of the Albanians is no more than a hypocritical excuse for the American NATO offensive in the Balkans.

If the U.S. enters into the fight in the Balkans, it has to face the full consequences, including death of its own citizens. Why should Serbians and children have to die while American soldiers are getting away with bombing.

The First World War started in Serbia, as we all know from history. The Balkans is a very complex region where different conflicting interests are tightly interwoven. Inevitably, Russia remains inactive, but the vast majority of Russian population supports the Serbian case. So for this support is bound to the moral one. But soon that might no longer be the case. The Russian surveillance ship, Liman, has already steamed through the Dardanelles into the Mediterranean and, according France Presse, the first group of Russian volunteers arrived last Sunday in the northern Serbian town of Novi Sad to defend Yugoslavia. The Balkans are not Iraq, and the consequences of the U.S. hypertrophy can be brutal for world peace.

Health Center sponsors free substance screening in UU

By Jenny Ferrari

Cal Poly will participate in the first-ever National Alcohol Screening Day Thursday. Students and Faculty will be offered information to help them learn about signs and symptoms of alcohol abuse and dependency.

NASD is a nationwide effort to raise awareness about alcohol abuse and alcoholism. Cal Poly is a part of 2,200 screening sites nationwide, 500 of them college campuses. April is national alcohol awareness month and according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, approximately 20 percent of adults drink in a manner that puts themselves or others at risk. One in every 13 adults suffers from alcohol abuse or dependence.

The free screening is scheduled for Thursday, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the University Union plaza. The service is anonymous and confidential.

The San Luis Obispo County Drug and Alcohol Division wants the public to know what it’s like to be drunk.

At a press conference Tuesday to kick off Alcohol Awareness Month, the Drug and Alcohol Division demonstrated “Fatal Vision Goggles” to simulate alcohol-impaired vision. This year’s theme focuses on binge drinking. The Journal of American College Health defines binge drinking as the consumption of five or more consecutive drinks for males and four or more consecutive drinks for females.

Prevention Specialist and press conference organizer Mary Peracca said she wants to concentrate primarily on the problems binge drinking causes in youths.

“Students are not drinking leisurely or a little bit, they are drinking to get drunk,” Peracca said.

She added that the disappearances of Kristin Smart and Rachel Newhouse have highlighted the dangers of alcohol-related incidences, but real drunk-driving tragedies do not make the news.

Two pairs of fatal vision goggles were on display at the conference, representing .08 and .17 blood-alcohol levels. A .08 blood-alcohol level is roughly four beers, while a .17 blood-alcohol level equals about nine beers.

“The function of the goggles is to mess with your brain,” Peracca said.

Cal Poly and the Drug and Alcohol Prevention Specialist Vicki Farber added, “People are just floored. They have no idea. When you’ve got the goggles on (and) you reach for a pencil, your hand goes in the wrong direction. It is just a really enlightening experience.”

The goggles have been a part of demonstrations at Cal Poly residence halls, Cuesta College and local high schools.

“Generally when we did them at Cal Poly and at Cuesta, students said the goggles were pretty realistic,” said Wayne Hansen, division manager with the County Drug and Alcohol Services. Hansen is also the project director of the San Luis Obispo Substance Abuse Prevention Alliance.

Other events for the month include free, anonymous alcohol screenings on April 8 at the Cal Poly University Union from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The National Council on Alcohol and Drug Dependence created Alcohol Awareness Month 12 years ago, according to Farber. The division is working with the San Luis Obispo DUI Task Force, Office of Juvenile Justice Delinquency Prevention, and the San Luis Obispo Prevention Alliance.

Matt Brady drove in two runs, and Jeremy Cunningham allowed a pair of hits over six innings, leading the Cal Poly baseball team to a shutout of the University of Hawaii-Hilo, 6-0, in the second game of a doubleheader Monday. The game at San Luis Obispo Stadium was called in the eighth inning, due to rain.

Bradley broke the game in the bottom of the third with a single that scored Tanner Troop and Nick Murphy. Kirk Albritt followed with a two-run homer to left for the Mustangs, which swept both games of the doubleheader and improved to 16-14 on the season.

Cunningham (3-3) stunned the Vulcans, striking out nine and walking two. Josh Morton and Jeff Wallace each pitched an inning to preserve the win.

"My arm felt real good today," Cunningham said. "It was a big-time confidence builder, since I had a couple of tough outings the last two starts), and it was good to get a good one under my belt, so I was happy with it.

Other players noticed the solid effort.

"He dominated the whole game," Albritt said. "He's been struggling a little bit, so I think this is a big one for him to come back and get some confidence back."

Vulcan starter curso Alkaldas gave up eight hits and struck out three. He allowed six runs in free innings. Alkaldas had trouble with bases on balls, and the Mustangs stemmed the tide with a pair of two-run innings. The Mustangs scored in the fourth and the eighth.

Los Angeles (AP) -- Eccentric basketball rebuilding star Dennis Rodman and his actress wife Carmen Electra have called their marriage quits.

"Carmen Electra and Dennis Rodman have announced that they have mutually agreed to end their 6-month-old marriage under amicable circumstances. Divorce papers were filed today in Los Angeles on behalf of Carmen Electra and Rodman and will remain friends," publicist Matt Labor and Todd, speaking for both.

Rodman, 37, and Electra, 26, were married in Las Vegas on Nov. 11 after what was reported to be an all-night bender. Nine days later, Rodman filed formal and the following announcement, saying he was of unsound mind when he recited his vows.

"Electra, whose real name is Tara Patrick, was with Rodman at Planet Hollywood in February when he announced he would be joining the Los Angeles Lakers.

During that news conference, Rodman said he and his wife were happily married, but living in separate homes.

Electra attended several games to watch her husband play.

Then on March 11, Rodman received permission to leave the Lakers to pursue personal issues. The team sent him on assignment.

"I was of unsound mind when I recited my vows," Rodman said.

Electra, whose real name is Tara Patrick, was with Rodman at Planet Hollywood in February when he announced he would be joining the Los Angeles Lakers.

Rodman, who has won five championships, mustered the eight-day break had nothing to do with drinking, gambling, smoking or marital problems.
