Sorority remembers sister, delivers breast cancer message to students

By Alexis Garbeff

When Tara Babiaz began attending Cal Poly in 1996, her sorority sisters never thought that 11 years later they would be fighting for a cause that takes the life of a woman every 11 minutes.

Babiaz was diagnosed with breast cancer at the age of 26 after feeling an abnormal lump during a self-breast examination. At age 31 she died.

Every October since Babiaz’s death, the sisters of Alpha Omicron Pi wear pink ribbons, which this year will mark the 15th annual National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

“It is a really important cause that hasn’t been done up much on this campus,” civil engineering senior and Alpha Omicron Pi member Alisen Mares said. “It has affected our chapter directly, and we want to make the whole school more aware.”

Alpha Omicron Pi believes in the importance of educating students about cancer because of its startling statistics. According to the National Cancer Institute, breast cancer is the leading cause of cancer deaths among women between ages 15 and 34, and ages 35 and 54.

For the second consecutive October, Mares and her sorority sisters are setting up a booth every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in the University Union plaza to give pink ribbons to

ASI weighs mandatory community service

Students may need to serve to graduate

By Sonia Slutzki

Gov. Gray Davis’ proposal to implement a community service graduation requirement in California colleges faced opposition Wednesday as Student Community Service representatives presented their stance to the Associated Students Inc.

The requirement would affect all California State Universities, UCs and community colleges.

“We don’t see the funding coming through,” said Matthew Huy, vice president of SCS and student mentor to Class and Community Connections. “The mandatory aspect of it would take away from the beauty of voluntary community service.”

Community Service Programs Coordinator San Lurin said many factors influence SCS’ opposition to Gov. Davis’ proposal.

“If we had the infrastructure, I would say yes,” Lurin said. “But we would need enough staff to accommodate the needs of every student.”

A proposal of this magnitude would require a significant increase in funding, but so far the governor’s office has made no commitment to additional financial aid, Lurin said.

Whether or not our community can provide enough services is another issue, Lurin said.

According to an ASI report, currently 90 percent of Cal Poly students self-report involvement in a community service. These students may be involved in community service through clubs, fraternities or majors.

Each quarter 200 to 300 students do community service through the SCS office, Huy said.

The Community Service and Learning Center already has a program that engages students in community-based experiences directly related to general education courses. Class and Community Connections is a program meant to enhance general education courses by adding service-learning components.

It would be a good idea to incorporate community service into the curriculum, Lurin said. But, SCS would not want to support something that would keep students from graduating as soon as they could.

“We are still investigating what it would take for all students to participate in a service-learning class,” Lurin said. “I think it can deliver learning outcomes for students, especially in this campus that happens to be very heterogeneous.”

ASI plans to vote on mandatory community service Wednesday.

ASIS office, Huy said.

“ASI weighs mandatory community service. The mandatory aspect of it would take away from the beauty of voluntary community service.”

Kids look up to Poly students

By Bryce Alderton

Mike Anderson is a Cal Poly student leading a busy life of schoolwork while belonging to Theta Chi fraternity and also making room every Wednesday to spend time with his buddy, Eric.

Anderson, a business senior, has been involved for almost two years with Big Brothers/Big Sisters of San Luis Obispo County, which gives underprivileged children someone they can count on to care for them.

“This has been the most memorable thing I’ve done since I’ve been at Cal Poly,” Anderson said.

Anderson picks up Eric, whose last name is confidential, at 2 p.m. every Wednesday in front of Grover Beach Elementary School, and they spend the rest of the afternoon in San Luis Obispo.

Anderson and Eric work on homework, play sports, visit Pirates Cove and have even gone to Disneyland.

“I had an internship over the summer, but I still came up every week and stayed at a friend’s house so I could spend time with Eric,” Anderson said.

Volunteers must spend four hours every two weeks with their buddies and are expected to call their buddies during weeks they aren’t with them.

Anderson goes beyond the minimum, seeing Eric every week.

“You really have to want to do this (being a Big Brother) because it’s such a commitment,” Anderson said.

The biggest thing is your buddy knows you’re going to be there for them.”

Big Brothers/Big Sisters recruits Cal Poly students, preferably second-year students and above. The program targets boys and girls ages 7-16 who are fatherless.

What a difference a day makes

By Carolyn Ficara

Cal Poly students can join communities nationwide to make a difference Saturday.

As part of National Make a Difference Day, Beyond Shelter will take a volunteer crew to the homeless shelter on Ocean Street in San Luis Obispo to help with winter chores.

This is the first year shelter residents and volunteers will work together, Cechini said. He hopes a program will be started that will bring former shelter residents back to pitch in with the chores and projects.

Make a Difference Day began nine years ago as a day dedicated to helping others. It is sponsored by USA WEEKEND magazine and Points of Light Foundation. In addition, there is more than $2.6 million available in grants to help pay for projects. Those with projects in mind can apply for these grants.

Wal-Mart stores, for example, offer $1,000 grants.

The day has become a truly national event. Children, college students, corporations and retinues all give their time and money to improve others' lives.

"Make a Difference Day connects people with common others and represents the very best of American traditions," said Robert K. Gochnour, president and chief executive officer of Points of Light Foundation.

But those receiving help aren't the only ones whose lives are changed for the better. Matt Cechini, Beyond Shelter's director and computer engineering junior, said volunteering has changed many of his perspectives.

"It has really opened my eyes about how fortunate I am," Cechini said. "Making money isn't everything..." This is Cechini's second weekend working with Beyond Shelter.

Entertainment architects to present at forum

To drive through Yosemite National Park is to take a trip through time, witnessing the power of ice and rock and the dance they began together millions of years ago. Boasting three of the world’s ten tallest waterfalls and the largest single granite monolith on Earth, Yosemite is a magical place that beckons to souls from all corners of the globe. Offering spectacular hikes, open meadows exploding with wildflowers in the spring and world-class rock climbing, Yosemite has something for everyone.

Located 200 miles from San Luis Obispo at the end of Highway 41, Yosemite is open year-round for outdoor enthusiasts. There are numerous campgrounds for both campers and RVs, as well as tent cabins in Curry Village and hotel rooms at Yosemite Lodge.

Hiking enthusiasts will enjoy the Mist Falls Trail, which winds past Vernal and Nevada Falls and gains 3,200 feet of elevation in four miles. The falls are at their highest in May and June, but the trail can be slippery with dense mist sprouting off the falls. On the Valley's North side, the Yosemite Falls Trail makes its way to the top of Yosemite Falls, the third highest waterfall in the world. The trail is steep and exposed to the sun much of the way. Hikers should bring plenty of water and take a moderate pace up the slope.

Rock climbers will appreciate the valley's classic climbs, such as Ice Route and Lost Arrow Spire and the famous El Capitan and Half Dome. During the summer and fall months, Tuolumne Meadows, located 50 miles east of Yosemite Valley, offers more breathtaking climbs, including Cathedral Peak and Eichorn Pinnacle. Tuolumne Meadows isn’t as well-known as Yosemite Valley but boasts its own dazzling array of granite domes and alpine lakes.

Back-country adventurers can find an assortment of trails connecting Tuolumne to Yosemite Valley, which can take between two days and a week to complete. The road connecting Tuolumne to the valley is closed in the winter, so calling ahead for road information is necessary. For information about Yosemite National Park, call the National Park Service at (209) 372-2222.

Avila's new little secret invites runners

In case you slept in last Sunday and missed the City to Sea Half Marathon, you missed an incredible race and the christening of the new City to Sea Greenway.

Every part of the racecourse led through major roads, so participants could drive and see the area they would be racing, except the last two and a half miles on the City to Sea Greenway. Nestled under the trees of Ontario Road in Avila Beach, the City to Sea Greenway is a hidden treasure.

The paved trail runs parallel to a small creek and takes the runner, walker, runner and perhaps helmeted inline skater away from roads and into quiet sanctuary. The trail is relatively flat and runs right into Avila Beach Golf Club.

The trail accommodates outdoor enthusiasts with varying levels of experience.

Cameron Watts

For athletes, start in downtown San Luis Obispo and run down South Higuera to Ontario Road and follow the Greenway to Avila Beach. Drink some water, find a phone and call your roommate for a ride back, or if you’re a stallion, run back.

On the other hand, if you’re just looking for a leisurely workout, drive and park in front of the trail. A large dirt turnout can be used as a parking lot. Either run or walk to the beach, enjoy the scenery and then head back to the car.

For those tight on time, take a date for a walk on the beach. Your beau or lady will be impressed. Just make sure he or she didn’t read this article before you claim the idea as your own.

Before I ran the race last weekend, I didn’t bother to check out the last few miles along the Greenway trail. My dad kept telling me to run the trail before racing it so there would be no surprises. I tried to see the Greenway, but I just ran out of time. And I’m glad I did.

This was my first race in quite a while, and I wasn’t trained for the full 13.1 miles. When I hit the Greenway, the lactic acid started building up in my legs, making them feel like burning concrete. This would have been discouraging; however, since I hadn’t run this section of the course, it was new and the landscape was beautiful. The scenery took my mind off my heavy legs and engulited me in its beauty.

The last mile and a half seemed to last longer than I would have liked, but the City to Sea Greenway made my day.

Campus Express Lotto Winners

The rewards for opening a Campus Express Club account are being felt in the wallets of three lucky Cal Poly students. All those who added their established accounts or started up a brand new account during August and September became instant contestants in a lottery of sorts. On September 30th the contest closed with a drawing that resulted in three winners.

The prizes included reimbursement of fall quarter in-state tuition, up to $150 credited to the bursement for her fall quarter in-state tuition, “I like (Campus Express Club) because you don’t have to carry around cash to buy books and stuff,” she said.

Jennifer Warfield, a senior Kinesiology student, was credited $150 for textbook purchases. Warfield has had an account for a couple of years.

“I probably use the most dollar amounts at the bookstore but as far as getting snacks and stuff, it’s really great,” she said.

The third winner, Emily Smith, now has a 50 dollar boost to her account after winning that portion of the drawing.

FERPA turns Poly into a tattletale

e for children in kindergarten through high school, parents and school administrators have a responsibility to work together to monitor the activities of students while on campus. At 18-year-olds, students have reached adulthood. As adults they are entirely responsible for their own actions, legal or illegal. Parents are limited to offering financial help, legal assistance or moral support. Nothing more. And then only if the student asks their parents for help.

The changes to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) allow universities the option of notifying parents if their children are caught on campus violating alcohol and drug policies. This policy takes the responsibility of being an adult away from the student.

At 18, most students have the responsibility of a driver's license two years. They can vote, serve on a jury, sue and sign contracts. Students can own a business, a car and a home. They pay taxes and can run for political office. An adult student can go to jail or prison, and under certain circumstances, can receive the death penalty. By the time they reach adulthood, students have all the constitutional rights, privileges and responsibilities of any other adult citizen. Overall, the government takes adulthood very seriously.

The new FERPA policy doesn't. Granted, college is a transition from coping with life in the less mature high school environment to becoming a responsible part of society in the real world. But it's incomprehensible that Cal Poly would want to usurp the students' responsibilities for the consequences of their actions. To assume a parent can change students' actions, or the consequences after the fact, is absurd.

In fact, the policy is so absurd I have gone from being insulted, to finding it so humorous I have fallen into side-splitting laughter while discussing the utter ridiculousness of the policy.

Under the proposed policy, unless Cal Poly intends to discriminate against younger students, all adult students should be included in the plan to inform parents of drug or alcohol violations on campus. This means older re-entry students attending Cal Poly also would fall under the FERPA policy.

I can just imagine parents opening a letter from Cal Poly informing them that their 20- or 50-year-old son or daughter has been caught violating drug or alcohol policies while on campus. I don't understand the expected outcome of this policy. Outside of disappointment and the threat of withholding financial help, parents cannot control the actions of their adult children. Off-campus laws regarding the violation of alcohol and drugs exist. Any adult must face the consequences of breaking these laws. Parents are not called when an adult is arrested. Parents are not responsible. The offender must go through the court system.

Cal Poly has its own policies regarding campus violations. These policies should be enough all for that, too. I'd rather be held accountable to my parents than to the police.

Diane Farnsworth is a journalism senior and a Mustang Daily staff writer.

FERPA is for the better of all society

et's say an 18-year-old, who we'll call John Doe, moves to college and lives in the dorms. John gets caught up in his new lifestyle — partying Friday night with his roommates and neighbors, spending Saturday hung over and recovering in time to party again that night. John begins drinking with greater frequency and starts missing his classes. His grades fall.

John's resident advisor writes him up numerous times for alcohol violations. Should the university call John's parents and let them know about his underage drinking in the dorms?

With the recent amendments to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), universities now have the option of notifying parents of on-campus alcohol consumption. Cal Poly has yet to decide whether it will adopt a policy to inform parents.

I believe such a policy would be beneficial.

Now before you start writing your letter to the editor about what a fool I am, hear me out...

First of all, Cal Poly is a dry campus. Students aren't allowed to drink on university property. There aren't kegs next to the soda machines in the dining halls, and the Budweiser girls don't hang out on the University Union to encourage beer drinking. This is because Cal Poly wants to ensure a safe and healthy environment for its students. A FERPA policy is one more way to promote safety.

Particularly with freshmen, college is an awakening experience. They're away from home, free from curfews, allowed to come and go as they please. A FERPA policy is another tool in ensuring that students aren't worrying about anything but keeping students' feet on the ground. Students would be less likely to drink if there was a chance their parents would find out.

Let's look at adopting such a policy as an opportunity to open the lines of communication. For most Cal Poly students, their homes are hours away, making it difficult for parents to know what's going on in their children's lives. A FERPA policy encourages students to discuss drinking habits with their parents, hopefully before a phone call from the university.

Most importantly, adopting such a policy is a deterrent against devastating situations like alcohol poisoning, D.U.I.s, alcohol-related sexual assaults and drunk-driving accidents. If a phone call to someone's parents saves him or her from these situations, then any negative aspects of a FERPA policy can surely be overlooked.

Letters to the editor

Long live the quarters Editor,

A change from the current systems to the semester system would be ludicrous. While I agree that the quarter is stressful and fast-paced, I also realize that its advantages far outweigh its disadvantages. Ten weeks— it fairly easy to survive 10 weeks of anything. Could you imagine having to suffer through one of your least favorite professors for 18 weeks?

I didn't think so.

Chancellor Reed is attempting to bring parity to the California State University system. Cal Poly is one of the few schools in the Csu that is on the quarter system. And Cal Poly is continually ranked as the No. 1 regional university. I do not see CSU schools on the semester system with this distinction. If it is to come down to another vote (the vote in 1993 overwhelmingly favored the quarter system), then I say all students to vote to keep the current system and tell Chancellor Reed to mind his own business and leave Cal Poly alone.

Phil Angel is a social sciences senior who chose Cal Poly in part because of the quarter system.

Take your time at Poly Editor,

There is nothing wrong with taking a little more time to study; I'm doing it myself, and I'm a student at Cal Poly. There are a variety of reasons why people often (more often than not) take five or six years to graduate from this school. First, what's the big deal? I'm no math major (and neither is Barnaby Hughes) but I'm going to be in the "real world" working for probably 35 to 45 years. What difference is one or two years right now going to make? It can't hurt to spend an extra year in an institution of higher education, and the opportunities to help others are endless.

Second, and more importantly, those of us who do not take 15 units a quarter are not necessarily lazy. In fact, quite to the contrary. Many of us not only go to school, we work 20 to 30 hours a week to pay for our education. Others have taken the time and effort to spend a number of hours on and off campus each week volunteering their time in the community (and yes, probably learning more in this service than enclosed in the walls of a classroom or with their nose in a textbook). Go talk to the students who work with Student Community Services, Associated Students Inc., or who are involved in their respective fraternities and sororities. Others have even taken advantage of their time to learn and study in another country, learning the ways of another culture.

My point is simple. Your college experience will last a lot longer than the "real world" will last ohhhhh so long. I'm sorry that Barnaby has not come to this realization. I hope he does sometime soon. My brother graduated in three years from a four-year university. I, and five after years of work, he is more than ready to quit his job and travel, volunteer, work in a foreign country, go to the beach on a Tuesday or have more than 10 days vacation a year. I encourage students to take an extra year here if it all possible. There is so much more to the "real world" than the textbooks and notes. Take the time to go find out!

Steve Bennett is a social sciences/elementary education/Spanish major/minor senior, proud member of the five-year student association and a hard working broker.

Stop being egocentric Editor,

The reason why I'm writing in response to Tamas Simon's Oct 20 column is because a lot of kids actually read your article, which in itself poses a great risk and therefore demands a reaction and clarification. I shall not give you the satisfaction of insulting you, simply because it would give you material to slander your opponents. It is also unnecessary since simple logic is sufficient to discover the shortcomings of your statements and mindless repetition of popular slogans.

You pride yourself on being a Republican. Republican government equals representative government, which leads me to assume that you would love the opportunity to give your consent as a citizen through your domestically elected representatives in the legislature and executive. But if you do, what do you need a gun for? The fact that you see the need to protect yourself means you don't trust your own representatives to do their job. Whom do you want to protect yourself from anyway? Kids who are given the chance to have gone because people like you prevent legislation to keep it away from them? Being a German citizen, I witnessed the wall coming down, but I can't recall anyone demanding the right to bear the same arms they have suffered from for so many decades. So what does your origin have to do with carrying a gun? You should know better, having served in the military and despised and derided and sanctioned and committed to it and to the very people that you do not appreciate the liberties, for the achievement and protection of which so many of their fellow Americans gave their lives.

If you really loved your environment, you wouldn't go about destroying its resources and inhabitants by fishing and hunting. If you didn't want the world to be hostile, you would stop convincing everybody that it actually is, by labeling it as such, making people believe they have to meet hostility with hostility.

You are a member of a society. You have chosen to be a member of this particular one and have therefore chosen to abide by its laws and values, which, generally, reflect the norms and values of society itself. Society is all of us, so please stop being egocentric! Stop being inaccessible of others because YOU want to get fishing and because YOU want to go hunting and because YOU want to kill things whenever it pleases YOU.

If your article was supposed to be advertisement for the campus Republicans, I believe it backfired massively, and if I was a member, I'd get a lot of grief at you associating the club's name with your views in the footer of the article.

Bert Wissig, 36, is an economics freshman.

Don't forget about sin Editor,

I am responding to the most recent article discussing faith and sin in the October 20 issue of "The Other Side of Faith." Oct. 20. With all this talk of good works, we have seemingly left out the major point of faith - what to do about sin. None of us is able to claim all of our deeds as good.

Listen to the apostle Paul's letter to the Romans in chapter 8, verse 19: "I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my sinful nature. For I have the desire to do what is good, but I cannot carry it out." Paul admits here that his sinful nature handicaps his desire to do what is right. If a man with such faith as Paul cannot always do what is right, it is obvious that we cannot either.

Fortunately, there is one who can — Jesus. And the only way that our sins can be atoned for is the fact that the life of Jesus, one that was perfect and holy and true, was sacrificed by consent as a citizen through your lives, ones full of anger, bitterness, immorality and wrong. The only way we can be saved is by offering our lives to Christ, admitting that without Him our lives are lost in sin. We are poor and worthless compared to Jesus himself, found in John 14:6 "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me." Besides, Jesus promises us that by giving our life to Him, our lives will be productive enough. Again, in John 15:5, Jesus said, "I am the vine; you are the branches. If a man remains in me and I in him, he will bear much fruit.

Scotty's mixes atmosphere, serious food

"One Saturday afternoon I came out of my office and said 'that gal looks familiar,' but I thought she was just a regular," said Scotty. "Sure enough, it was Olivia Newton John."

The Milsteads are proud of their beautifully curved and mirrored dark wood bar. It's a full bar with wine, and plenty of on-tap and imported & domestic beers. Happy Hour is daily from 3 p.m.-6 p.m.

Scotty and his staff create magic with daily grilled specials in a cheerful, open kitchen. The menu includes a wide variety of barbeque items, from Jack's Baby Backs to the Teriyaki Shrimp Kabob, and specialties like the Black Bean Chili Dog and Veggie or Fajita Wraps.

And don't forget to save room for Dana's homemade cheesecake.

Scotty's Bar and Grill features a reasonably priced menu sure to fit students' budgets. Come out to 751 Price Street and have a good meal and take a walk on the beach. The restaurant's phone number is 773-1922, and its website can be found at www.sbng.com.

"The area lacked a sports-style bar, and I love sports," said Scott, a Cal Poly alumnus who places great emphasis on taking care of his customers. One menu item was specially named after a regular customer. "The Uncle Lair's Special is a pasta dish prepared especially for him," said Scott. "At the time, we did not have any pasta dishes. Larry mixed the sausage sampler platter with some pasta we prepared especially for him."

Over the last two years, Scotty's Bar and Grill has become a well received local establishment. The restaurant "gets a nice mix of people," says Scott, from families to the elderly, and at least one celebrity has been spotted eating at Scotty's Bar and Grill.

Poly does her bit

According to Major Ray, there are now forty-one former "Poly" students in the service of the United States. Several are in the regular army, some in the coast artiller y at American Lake and Linda Vista and one in the navy. No name or place can be mentioned if we obey the new and strict censorship established by the government. We are glad, however, to be able to mention that so many of our students have found it possible to do their bit.

Below is a letter from one of the boys at American Lake, which is typical of many that Major Ray receives.

Dear Sir: We arrived at our destination Monday morning at 2:00 and it was a glad bunch when we stepped off the train here. Documented on the train were as good as could be expected. We stopped off at a San Francisco hotel, the line for eat, and at every place we were treated somewhat in the same manner as we were in San Luis.
Imagine looking forward to the week as much as you look forward to the weekend. Imagine spending each minute with unlimited opportunity and continuous options. At Ernst & Young we provide access to the most sophisticated and effective tools in the industry. See you Monday.

team has not won an away game since 1997. With only one road game remaining after tomorrow, few chances remain to retard a two- sea-son-long losing streak.
"We've come close to winning on the road a number of times, but we've also made our mistakes," Welch said. "We're working on eras- ing those mistakes and winning these road games."

Cal Poly was defeated at home last year by Davis, 34-24. The Mustangs may not be motivated for that reason, but Bagie head coach Bob Bugis is aware that his visiting team may want to avenge that loss.
"We know their record is misleading rela- tive to the teams they've played," Bugis said. "They've lost to some teams ranked in the nation. There may be a revenge factor for us. It piques our interest more.

"We've come close (to winning) for us. It piques our interest more.

"We're looking forward to playing them to come up and try to do the same thing to us that we did last year to them."

The schools have other things in common aside from a football rivalry. Both are academic schools with football teams looking to break an 11-11-2 series tie.
"We see ourselves similar to Cal Poly academically and recruiting wise," Bugis said. "The fact that Cal Poly is Division I-AA is a challenge for us. It piques our interest more than some other teams on our schedule." Current campaign included, Davis has won their active streak of winning seasons in Division II with 30. The team, ranked No. 8 nationally, will be looking to improve its chances for Division II playoffs with a win over their long-time rival.
"Despite the rivalry, this is another game on our schedule we need to win," Bugis said. "We're trying to put ourselves in position to get into the playoffs, and a win will help us in the national and regional rank- ings.

The Mustangs, who will miss the playoffs this year, will not underesti- mate the Aggies due to their Division II status. If anything, Cal Poly knows it will be tested by Davis' strong passing game, which nets nearly 350 yards each game.
"They're one of the best Division II teams around; this is actually the lowest they've been ranked in three years," Welch said. "They like throwing the ball to score points."

The Mustang secondary, which has been ailing since the second game of the season, is regaining its health. Senior defensive captain Kiko Griffin returned to practice for the first time since injuring his knee Sept. 18. His return has helped the Mustangs in the defensive backfield.

"We will need a lot of confidence from our secondary because (Davis) likes to throw," Welch said. "Our vet is back with him. Practicing again, the younger guys can't catch up to his leadership. That makes our secondary better even though he isn't all the way back."

Davis will attempt to exploit that secondary this weekend as it looks to improve on its 20-14 lifetime record against Division I-AA oppo- nents. Though they were victorious a week ago, distractions nearly got the best of them.
"Our focus in practice last week wasn't great, and I'm a believer in the adage that you play the way you practice," Bugis said. "We were in multiple troops, and our players were a little distracted. That won't be a problem this week getting ready for Cal Poly."

this morning, and I was thinking, 'This weekend is it. We make history this weekend. Two games. 180 min- utes.'

Connor said fewer injuries have plagued the team this year than in years past. Junior defender Kim Silva is still out with a broken leg, along with senior goalkeeper Natalia Garcia, who is out the entire season with a left-foot stress fracture.
Senior forward Omar Quezada came back from a knee injury on Oct. 1 to help defeat North Texas, and Crozier said she is gradually improv- ing.
"It's hard to say, but the way it's been this year, if a couple players aren't really on, then others will be," he said. "Then we'll just put them in, which is how our game in Santa Barbara went."

"We don't have to rely on anyone else winning or anyone else losing. Our fate is in our hands."

have confidence that we can play well and win that game," the speech communications senior said. "I'm just going to play the best I can and give every minute I'm playing the hardest I can go."

Crozier said the away-game status of this weekend's games doesn't affect their difficulty. The Mustangs are 3-4-1 on the road.
"This year, whether we're home or away, hasn't really changed how we approach the games," he said. "We've struggled at home as well as on the road."

In 1997, the Mustangs won the conference title but lost in the Big West Tournament ending their sea- son. The Big West no longer has a tournament and a conference title would be sufficient for a trip to the NCAA Tournament.
"We have a lot of revenge," George said. "We're going to go no matter if we win those two games. We don't have to rely on anyone else winning or anyone else losing. Our fate is in our hands."
Chamberlain remembered in hometown

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Wilt Chamberlain was remembered Thursday with spontaneous laughter and tears at a church near his high school where he first scored to basketball fame.

More than 500 people attended the hushed emotional service, telling stories about the tall skinny kid who went on to become perhaps the greatest player of all time.

"Wilt never really left Philadelphia, even when he was geographically far away. He never forgot us and we never really forgot him," Philadelphia Mayor Edward Rendell said.

Chamberlain died Oct. 12 in his Bel Air home at 63 of an apparent heart attack. A previous memorial service was held in Los Angeles.

Among those attending Thursday were former Warriors teammates Tom Gola and Paul Arizin, former 76ers teammate Bill Melchionni, Hollis Thompson and Matt Guokas, ex-Knicks star Earl Monroe and Temple coach John Chaney.

Chamberlain led West Philadelphia's Overbrook High School to several championships before playing 14-decading seasons in the NBA.

Chaney played alongside Chamberlain while he was in high school and Chamberlain was in junior high. Even then, Chaney said Chamberlain was amazing.

"We'd beat the ball up, and Wilt would throw the ball out at the court while he was up there. He'd put the ball in the basket, and then he'd always say it's credit for my basket," Chaney said.

"I had to pull him aside and tell him to stop taking my shots," Gola said.

Gola said he still has a t-shirt from now on an elbow from Chamberlain. Gola noted that Chamberlain's height sometimes gave him a question, which was actually 7-foot-3 1/2. Gola said he measured Chamberlain using a ladder at training camp.

Several friends and former teammates liked Chamberlain to such greats as Babe Ruth and Michael Jordan. Chamberlain still holds the NBA record for most points in a game (100) and highest season average (50 points in 1961-62).

"He was a legend. He was a great player. He was a friend," former teammate Dick Van Arsdale said.

Poly football faces rival UC Davis

The Mustang football team meets a familiar foe tomorrow as Cal Poly and UC Davis square off in this year's installment of a 60-year-old rivalry.

Cal Poly (2-4) travels to Fresno Field in search of its first road victory of the season. The Mustangs face a Davis team (6-1) that is on a roll, winning four straight games and is undefeated at home this year. The game is homecoming for the Aggies, but Cal Poly head coach Larry Walsh expects lots of support for the Mustangs on the road.

"We usually have excellent support up there," he said. "It's close, and there are a lot of Cal Poly graduates in Northern California. We almost feel at home."

The Mustangs will need some of that home feeling. Winners of both home games this year, the

One ticket for the NCAA Tournament, please.

That's what Cal Poly's women's soccer team is asking of itself this weekend. Two wins on the road will automatically give the Mustangs the Big West conference title — and an NCAA Tournament bid.

Head coach Alex Croeter said the team's only focus now is playing well in Friday's game against Long Beach State (3-4, 5-10). In addition, the Mustangs (6-1, 8-7) face '98 conference champion University of Pacific (4-3, 8-4) on Sunday.

"The game against Long Beach is all we're really talking about," said Croeter, who has been the Mustangs only coach for eight years.

"It doesn't make any sense to worry about Sunday's game yet." Croeter noted the difficulty of playing at Long Beach, not only due to the poor field but also because of the 49ers' competitiveness. We can't let those factors distract us, though,

"Everyone keeps coming up to us and saying, 'Oh my god! You guys are almost there. Just win this weekend,'" the liberal studies senior said. "It's exciting. I was folding clothes

49ers Jervey suspended for four games

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco 49ers running back Travis Jervey was suspended for four games by the NFL for violating its policy on anabolic steroids and related substances.

Jervey cannot return to the 49ers until Nov. 22, the day after the team plays the St. Louis Rams. He is expected to be out four weeks anyway while recovering from ankle surgery.

The NFL did not specify how Jervey had violated the policy.
