Breaking even: \(e\) men's voting may pose dangers, check it in email.

By Kerri Holden

Voting for student leaders in the future could be as easy as registering for classes by checking e-mail.

The Associated Students Inc. Elections Committee is researching the feasibility of online voting as one way to increase voter turnout. Only 7.3 percent of students voted in last April's ASI election.

Committee Chairwoman Leslie Moffitt said several universities across the United States have doubled their voter turnout by implementing online voting.

Western Illinois University Trustee Jim Phillips said voting there has increased slightly every year since its initial jump of 82 percent during the first year of online voting.

"Any feedback we've had from students has been positive," Phillips said. "Even when we did away completely with paper ballots there weren't any gripes or groans."

Moffitt said a higher turnout at elections would better represent students in ASI.

"When the directors are elected by more than a handful of students, it provides a greater representation of students' wishes and wants," Moffitt said.

According to a survey of 224 students conducted by Matt Harris, Armando Alvarado and Ryan Rangel for English 215 class, voter turnout could increase as much as 70.5 percent if ASI changes Internet voting.

The report also showed that over 23 percent of students surveyed said they did not vote in last year's election because they did not know where their polling location was or voting was too inconvenient.

Moffitt said she thinks students would welcome the new system of voting because they can cast their electronic ballot anywhere they find an Internet connection.

"You wouldn't have to stand in line as you currently have to," Moffitt said. "You could just walk up, log in, and leave."

Voting online would also be more convenient for those overseas the system.

Moffitt said the hours of manually tallying votes would be replaced by the press of a button.

The system would most likely be similar to POWER or MustangVote, Moffitt said.

Students would need to enter their student identification number and personal identification number to be connected to a secure page with the candidates' names.

Moffitt said she thinks security will not be a big issue.

"Most students are comfortable already with the security provided by the registration and student information systems and voting would be modeled after those," she said.

If anyone felt uncomfortable giving those numbers online, paper ballots may still be an option, Moffitt said.

The main concern Elections Committee adviser Bob Walters has is the ease of online voting could encourage uninformed people to vote.

"I'm more concerned about having an uninformed electorate," Walters said.

First Day of Service honors King legacy

By Melissa McFarland

Crayons, trees, murals and children were the ingredients for Cal Poly's first Day of Service in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. Saturday.

Day of Service was a joint effort between Cal Poly's Multicultural Center and Student Community Services (SCS). About 40 students volunteered to help with two projects: mural painting with children and tree planting at the sewage plant.

Patrice Force, the Multicultural Center coordinator, alluded to a quote from King himself to describe the day's goal. "An individual has not lived until he can rise above the narrow confines of his individualism to the broader concerns of all humanity."

"Martin Luther King was all about service," Force said. "That quote talks about how we don't really reach our full potential until we serve our community.

"This year, 220 students met about 40 children at the Housing Authority to paint murals of King and celebrate his message."

Every kid made 20 10-by-10-inch tables full of pens, crayons and seemingly endless glitter, but the end result was something to be proud of. The students helped the children create scenes of King with children and at the pulpit, along with phrases they thought described him, like "freedom," "peace," and "justice."

"Artwork is able to express some of the things he did," Force said. see SERVICE, page 2

Doctors, victims face physical scars of domestic violence

By Amy Lovell

An innovative program to address the physical aftermath of domestic violence was introduced to Sun Luis Obispo residents in the Sierra Vista Regional Medical Center Auditorium Wednesday.

Dr. Roman Bukachevsky introduced the program, called the Face to Face Project. "Physicians need to heighten their awareness of patients who may be suffering from domestic violence," Bukachevsky said.

Face to Face provides free plastic and reconstructive surgery to domestic violence victims who suffer injuries to the head, neck and face. The patients must be out of the violent situation for at least a year. "It takes therapy to heal on the inside, but it takes a physician to heal on the outside," said Delores Winje, a local business owner who survived a shotgun blast to her face.

Marianne Kennedy, executive director of San Luis Obispo's Center for Alternatives to Domestic Violence, said a woman is abused by her partner every 13 seconds in the United States. One of every two women will suffer domestic violence sometime in her lives.

"That's an alarming statistic if it's correct," speech communication student Alan Jam said.

Bukachevsky, a plastic surgeon with offices in San Luis Obispo and Templeton, said, "It takes community involvement to address domestic violence issues."

The American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery (AAFPS), together with the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, founded the National Domestic Violence Project of which Bukachevsky is a member. The organization has 275 plastic surgeons in 43 states enrolled in its program.

According to AAFPS literature, the goal is to eliminate painful memories of the abuse.

"When I walk down the street, people won't look at me all the time, and my children's friends won't ask what happened to their mom's face," Winje said of what Bukachevsky would do for her. When she went to the emergency room in 1985, the Face to Face program didn't exist. "I went in and the plastic surgeon who treated me was a friend. I was so embarrassed, but he put me back together," Winje said.

Bukachevsky told Winje that the former approach of taking bone from the hip and using it to fill a metal plate has been dramatically improved.

"In the new procedure, the physician takes bone from the leg or stomach area and attaches it to the living tissue in the jaw, and it lives," Bukachevsky said.

"Linda," whose name has been changed to protect her safety, already had surgery to fix her broken nose. Linda was also attacked in 1985 by an older man who courted her in high school. see VIOLENCE, page 2

Taylor McGee, a third-grader at Hawthorne Elementary School. "Kiny asked that people aren't different from each other and everyone should get along," McGee said. "He didn't want us to think that white people were better than black people, or that black people are better than white people, because everyone's the same."

The idea for the mural painting came from Conlan, and she hopes the service program will become an annual tradition.

"Student Community Services serves every week, but we wanted to purposely do it on a day that would really celebrate (Kiny's) contribution to society," Conlan said. While murals were being painted, trees were being planted at the sewage treatment center several blocks away.

Mark Skinner, the stewardship director of the county Land Conservation, took charge of the Redwood-planting group of about 20 students. The trees were planted to line a walkway and trail, which might one day connect to the City-to-Sea Greenway. That greenway leads all the way to Avila Beach.

“They have their work cut out for them because we have to start from scratch,” Skinner said prior to planting. “We have to use gravel to under­proof the trees, and these aren't small trees. These things are in 15-gallon containers.”

Despite the challenge, the students came through, accomplishing more than Skinner expected. Twenty-two of the 15 trees were successfully planted, and the remaining five were left for another group the following day.

Community establishes home for endangered coastal plants

By Monica McHugh

Mustang Daily Staff Writer

Nipomo Native Garden is looking for volunteers with green thumbs who enjoy working outdoors to help plant weed and repair sprinklers at their 12-acre botanical garden.

According to their mission statement, the Nipomo Native Garden will feature plants from the seven plant communities on the Nipomo Mesa prior to European discovery of California.

The garden is in a residential neighborhood, located on the corner of Camino Caballo and Pomeroy in Nipomo. What used to be known as the Nipomo weed ranch is now an area where many native plants and creatures thrive.

“Our work here is more of a gesture of regard for what was already here,” said Herb Kandel, a member on the garden’s board of directors.

In 1994, when county parks considered selling the land to developers, local citizens gathered and proposed using the land for a native garden.

The idea of using the land to build a native garden came up in the community because that’s what the people desired, said Kandel.

“I just like the thought of having a native garden as part of our community,” said Larry Verheula, president of the Nipomo Native Garden.

Now the land is under an adopt-a-park agreement in which the Nipomo Native Garden board is in charge of taking care of the land.

“It’s kind of organic the way we do things,” said Kandel. “Plants were placed kind of randomly, like nature would do it.”

Grasslands, wetlands, riparian marshes, oaks, coastal sage scrub and chaparal areas are being developed.

“We’re really advocating the chaparal community because of how rare it is,” said Kandel.

Chaparal sage is usually considered a fire hazard and ballistically made for combustion. Nipomo Native Garden is home to a variety of endangered species from the chaparal community.

With the help of AmeriCorps volunteers, three new pathways have been added to the park. More pathways will not be made until planted plants have matured and natural pathways have formed.

With a history of successful fundraising, Nipomo Native Garden has many hopes and plans for the future. Plans to plant California poppies along Pomeroy were established at the January board meeting.

“We’re creating a habitat for the future,” said Cindy Fellick, a member of the garden’s board of directors. “I like the idea that a group of community members can make a difference.”

Work days are the first Saturday of every month from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. Those with specialized expertise in landscaping and irrigation are also welcomed and encouraged to attend.

Contact Cindy at 928-3589.

Remember our native plants

Native California plants have recently been recognized for their ability not only to attract fauna and wildlife, but to thrive with minimal care. Many landscape architects, designers, and environmental engineers weave this native California theme into the fabric that makes up their designs.

The idea is simple: utilize the tree, plant, and grass communities that encompass this vast state of California and blend them into our urban settings.

A California plant that you may be familiar with which also performs well in the landscape includes the Lupine, a soft green to silver evergreen that produces colorful blooms from stark white to deep purple.

Last spring along Highway 101, I noticed a variety of Lupine which boasts yellow flowers. At Montana de Oro, the Lupine is a soft blue-white variety that compares the sand spit dunes.

The California Redbud is a small tree, which in early spring provides viewers with a spectacular show of red and pink blooms. Found in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada mountain range, this small tree was used by the Awahnee Indians and other Native American tribes to make baskets. The California Redbud’s flexible branches, when made into baskets, carry acorns, roots, and other staples of early Indian life.

A large native tree here on the Central Coast, as well as throughout the state, is the California Sycamore. This gnarled tree is found along stream banks and waterways and exhibits off-white peeling grey bark with large, often fuzzy leaves supported by huge limbs.

Online voting for Poly raises new concerns

o much for the red-and-white striped curtain and that hideous machanism used to select your favorite candidate. Cal Poly students may soon move their civic duty to the Internet if Associated Students of the Central Coast, which has approval over the polls, votes for the idea. Cal Poly online voting has pushed voter turnout through the roof to an all-time high for the polls. But consider the repercussions. By removing that red-and-white striped curtain, voting becomes a public act — difficult to monitor and ensure privacy. Anybody, perhaps campaign managers or their campaign members, can look over a voter’s shoulder and influence the vote. They could round up a bunch of impressionable freshmen and have them vote as a collective group. Worse, they could collect Social Security and pension numbers of students and use them to control electronic voting. The rest never know how much they have to learn about the candidates and cast their votes. Seems like the perfect solution. But consider the repercussions. By removing that red-and-white striped curtain, voting becomes a public act — difficult to monitor and ensure privacy. Anybody, perhaps campaign managers or their campaign members, can look over a voter’s shoulder and influence the vote. They could round up a bunch of impressionable freshmen and have them vote as a collective group. Worse, they could collect Social Security and pension numbers of students and use them to control electronic voting.

In addition, rules prohibiting campaigning near polling places would no longer apply. Conceivably, candidates could plaster every computer lab on campus with campaign slogans and mug shots. Candidates could run every student online to elect the process. The Elections Committee needs to take these dangers into account as it determines if online voting is right for Cal Poly. It’s not the quick fix that ASI would like it to be. Like any major change in established policy, switching the voting process requires serious attention to detail. If these problems are addressed — perhaps by developing a new voting mechanism and reorienting the election process — online voting can work.

Stop American-Cuban tug-of-war

He’s a cute six-year-old boy, in many ways not unlike most boys his age in this county. He loves to laugh and play, was thrilled with a recent visit to Disney World and is excited about his new puppy. The big difference between this little boy and others in the United States is that this particular boy is in the midst of an international tug-of-war. A survivor of a November 1999 shipwreck that occurred during an attempt to defect from the oppressive regime of Fidel Castro, Elian Gonzales has been used as a political pawn between the United States and Cuba. Elian’s mother, stepfather and 11 others perished in the shipwreck. A mother lost her life in an effort to give her child a better way of life than is possible in Communist Cuba. But the U.S. government swayed toward Immigration and Naturalization Services regulations that recognize the right of a parent to assert their interests in an immigration proceeding. Elian’s father remains in Cuba and is demanding the boy’s return. Legal proceedings have been repeatedly postponed while proponents of Elian look for ways to keep him in the United States. The emotional trauma resulting from the shipwreck and loss of his mother would be enough to trouble a child for years to come. Now young Elian is in the eye of a media storm exacerbated by the politics of two very different nations.

The problem is that Elian’s life in Cuba is not going to last a lifetime, and it is time this battle over him came to an end. The U.S. government should see that the greater emotional trauma resulting from the shipwreck and loss of his mother would be enough to trouble a child for years to come. Now young Elian is in the eye of a media storm exacerbated by the politics of two very different nations.

The boy is likely to have a far better life in the United States than he would in Cuba, and there are plenty of people in this country who are more than willing to give him that opportunity and raise him. Many argue the fact is still has one surviving parent — his father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, who remains in Cuba — and should have sole parental rights. Unless there is reason to believe that Elian would be at risk by being placed in the custody of his father, he should be given a one-way ticket back to Cuba to live happily ever after.

Letters to the editor

Being gay isn't a choice
Editor, Megan Aren'an's letter (“Homosexuals are more affluent than straights...” Jan. 21) does an excellent job of pointing out some often-ignored statistics, and her editorial certainly makes you stop and think. However, there is one major flaw in her letter: the last sentence.
Megan claims, “With stats like that, I don't know why more Poly students aren't seriously considering the move to a queer lifestyle.” I don't know if this statement was made tongue-in-cheek or seriously, but I feel compelled to clarify: Sexual orientation is NOT a choice.

One of the most common myths about gays, lesbians and bisexuals is that we “choose” to be that way. Did we adopt ourselves, it’s sort of a self-serving point to deal with is that of adoption, which, I am in favor of (having been adopted. Adoption is just as valid as many ways as possible. Marx's ideas of a utopian society are generally too idealistic and incomprehensible to produce. He said so himself.
People like Lenin and Mao used them as a way to put themselves in Abortion saves some children from misery

Editor, The pro-life propaganda set forth by Adams Jami ("Embrace a small life...” Jan. 21), although not typical of the ultra-right conservative ramblings usually found in the opinion pages, compels me to rebut. The most appalling statement made was that we need to be careful when “one impas­ tioned moment quickly becomes a nine-month commitment.” Try a minimum 18-year commitment, assuming you don't send your child to college.

Here's how the men's basketball team fared during its past weekend at home.

Shooting guard: Mike Wozniak struggled, shooting just six of 24 in the two games for an .250 average, well below his season average. He did play solid defense Saturday four steals and hit two clutch free throws in Thursday's win. Watende Favors' traveling was a big turnover Saturday, but he played good defense Thursday.

Small forward: Chris Bjorkland was unstoppable in the second half Thursday, leading the Mustangs to a comeback victory. Saturday's four of 20 shooting was Bjorkland's worst game as a Mustang, yet he still managed five assists. John Hafford didn't look comfortable in the offense in limited minutes.

Center: BJorklund jumper tying the game at 58. Green hit a 3-pointer with 22 seconds remaining, the ball ending up in Richard Henry's hands, who made a turnaround jumper, putting the game out of reach.

Power forward: Jeremiah Mayes, right, was sensational Thursday with a double-double (25 points, 12 rebounds) and was the only offensive threat Saturday with 25 points and eight rebounds. Henry and Grace rebounded well when giving Mayes a break.

Point guard: Jason King, the one guy who wasn't ice cold, was capable in the second half Thursday, leading the Mustangs to a comeback victory.

Coach: Joe Nelan.

Flyers, Hurricanes swap stars

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Carolina Hurricanes ended a five-week contract dispute with former captain and all-star Keith Primeau by trading him Sunday to the Philadelphia Flyers for Rod Brind'Amour.

"I am excited that there's finally a resolution, and am looking forward to playing in city like Philadelphia," said Primeau, a restricted free agent who has missed Carolina's first 49 games. Primeau, who had 30 goals last season, said he signed a five-year, $22.75 million contract with the Flyers and should be in uniform Thursday night.

"I think he knew the call was coming," Maurice said. "While there may have been a shock to it when he finally heard it, he is still that great pro and he snapped right into the arrangements of when he was coming.

"He got very focused at the job hand. There wasn't any, I'll have to call you back or I have to talk to my agent. It was hockey.

Rutherford said Brind'Amour has two years remaining on his contract, which will pay him $3.5 million next season and then $4.2 million.

Lakers halfway leaders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers reached the halfway point of the season with a 33-8 record — best in the NBA by 2 1/2 games. And even coach Phil Jackson is surprised.

It's been an excellent three months for a group of players branded as underachievers. Of course, the Lakers didn't have Jackson as coach until this season.

"It's pretty much the same group from last year," forward Bak Fox said. "I thought we'd have a little slower start."

No doubt, so did many others, including Jackson.

He acknowledged recently that the Lakers had picked up his system faster than the Chicago Bulls did when he became their coach 10 years ago. Led by Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen, the Bulls won six championships in the 1990s.

"The other surprise is Portland was the one being talked about at the beginning of the season, and we're the team with the best record and no longer considered the most talented," Fox said. "We really want to be a surprise at the end. It's been 12 years."

The Showtime Lakers of the 1980s won five championships, most recently in 1988. The last time they reached the NBA Finals was 1991, when the Bulls beat them in five games for their first title.

Jackson quit after the last championship, allowing the 1997-98 season.

He watched from the sidelines during the lockout-shortened 1998-99 season before signing a five-year, $33 million contract with the Lakers last summer.

"He keeps basketball interesting," Fox said. "He expands the game. There's more than one way to skin the cat. There are certainly principles, you still need the tool to skin it. He's found a way to use the talent here to the best of its abilities."

Mustangs split two in Big West

By Joe Nolan
MUSTANG DAILY MANAGING EDITOR

After a spectacular 71-70 victory Thursday night against Nevada, Cal Poly came out flat Saturday, shooting just 31 percent in a 24-62 loss to Utah State.

Good pressure defense kept the Mustangs in the game. Cal Poly forced 20 Utah State turnovers and only trailed the Aggies by two points with 6:37 remaining.

"As bad as we played, the amazing thing was we were down only two with [six minutes] to play," head coach Jeff Schneider said. "It's odd. We weren't shooting well, they were shooting well and we outrebounded them. You just wonder how you're in the game."

After a 20-second Aggie timeout, Utah State slowed the pace down and stretched out a nine-point run during the next four minutes. The Mustangs, however, didn't have another comeback in them, and Utah State held on to improve to a perfect 4-0 in the Big West. The loss, in front of the first Mont Gump sellout out of the year, dropped Poly to 1-3 in the Big West.

In the Nevada game, the frontcourt combination of Jeremiah Mayes and Chris Bjorklund combined for 46 points, but Utah State's Shawn Daniels shut Bjorklund, who was four of 20 from the field.

"We had a hard time scoring on Daniels," Schneider said. "Daniels dominated the game with 16 points and 17 rebounds, and Chris obviously did not shoot that well. We got the ball consistently in the low post but just couldn't score against Daniels."

The Mustangs also didn't score well in the game.

Tennessee, St. Louis headed to Atlanta

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The Tennessee Titans found another improbable way to win.

This time it's taking them to their first Super Bowl in the franchise's 40 seasons, 37 of them as the Houston Oilers.

The Titans spot Jacksonville 31-14 on Sunday to win the AFC title, beating the Jaguars for the third time this season with a burst of 16 points in about 4 1/2 minutes in the third quarter.

Steve McNair led the way, running for 93 yards on nine carries and scoring on two 1-yard quarterback sneaks, despite limping all week with a boot to protect an injured toe.

Tennessee won as it has all season: a little offense, a lot of defense, and a big contribution from special teams. The defense forced six turnovers.

The Titans trailed 14-10 at the half — but then came their third-quarter scoring binge.

It began with a 76-yard drive on six plays for the go-ahead touchdown, on a sneak by McNair.

On the next sequence, Jacksonville's Kyle Brady fumbled and Jason Fisk recovered at the Jaguars 35. Frank Wycheck returned the fumble with a fumble, but it was at the 1-yard line.

Two plays later, Fisk and Josh Evans sacked Mark Brunell in the end zone for a safety, and it was 19-14. It also set up seven more points: On the ensuing free kick, Derrick Mason, who earlier set up a score with a 44-yard kickoff return, went 80 yards for a TD to make it 26-14.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Midwest Express offense came alive just in time.

Kurt Warner threw a 30-yard touchdown pass to Ricky Proehl with 4:44 to go Sunday, lifting the surprise-preseason St. Louis Rams to an 11-6 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the NFC Championship.

The Rams, who struggled all day on offense, rode their unheralded defense and Warner's late heroics to the Super Bowl.

They will play Tennessee, which won the AFC crown in Jacksonville 33-14. The Titans beat the Rams in Nashville during the regular season, 24-21, but St. Louis opens as a 6-point favorite for next Sunday's game.

Tampa's gallant defensive effort wasn't enough against the Rams because backup cornerback Brian Kelly couldn't stay with Proehl down the left sideline on the long third-down pass.

Proehl, the Rams' No. 4 wide receiver, leaped to had in his first touchdown of the season. He finished with six catches for 128 yards.

"If you are ever going to bet on someone coming up with a big play, bet on Ricky Proehl," Rams coach Dick Vermeil said.

The winning score was set up when Bucs rookie quarterback Shaun King was picked off by another rookie, cornerback Dre' Bly, at midfield.

AFC title game a classic

Despite all the chaos in the NFL this championship had the potential to be a classic. It pitied the best two teams of the conference against each other, something that doesn't happen very often.

The Titans walked confidently to Jacksonville to face the Jaguars, who had received their only two losses of the year at the hands of Jeff Fisher's Titans. It is said in the NFL that it is nearly impossible for any team to defeat another three times in a season, so the challenge was definitly there for Tennessee.

The Jags were favored by seven, but it was the Titans who walked out the victors, causing six turnovers en route to a dominating 33-14 win.

Steve McNair carried the team with both his running and passing attack, accounting for 43 percent of the Titans' offense with 91 running yards and 112 passing yards. It was McNair's 15-yard run in the fourth quarter that sealed the victory for the Titans, as well as his mobility in the pocket that led to so key third down conversions.

The anticipated matchup between running backs Eddie George and Fred Taylor was relatively even, with Taylor packing up 110 yards on 19 carries and George running for 85 yards on 25 carries. However, the key was George's 25 carries, which helped the Titans establish their ball-control offense.

Having the Titans control the tempo was critical for victory, as it helped slow down a Jacksonville team that had put up 62 points against Miami a week ago. The Jags certainly didn't help themselves, committing nine penalties for 100 yards.

From the opening drive, it appeared that the Jaguars were on their way to another high-scoring effort, but the Titans came back to tie with a nine-minute punting game.
