Calif. Poly voters support Gore, Bradley

By Kirsten Orsini-Meinhard
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Students searching for their political identity can find it at www.selectsmart.com. A Web site aimed at helping the uninformed American voter with complicated election issues.

The site's biggest feature is the Presidential Candidate Selector, a tool that helps users find the ideal presidential candidate based on their opinion of different issues. By clicking on the "Presidential Candidate Selector," the user is greeted with 17 questions pertaining to issues that affect this year's ballot.

Users can select how they feel about subjects such as abortion, gay rights, health care and defense spending.

For example, regarding minority issues, the site asks: "Would you prefer that your candidate support or oppose such legislation as affirmative action?" Users then have a choice of selecting "oppose," "support," or "neither." For users who are unclear about the definition of "affirmative action" or other political words, the site explains it in simple, clear terms.

After all 17 questions have been answered, the presidential candidates are ranked from highest to lowest, depending on the user's stance on the issues at hand. The candidate who best matches the user's opinions is given the highest percentage, followed by the other candidates in decreasing order. But knowing that Bill Bradley will best serve your interests isn't helpful when you don't know who Bill Bradley is. Luckily, the site also provides a profile on each candidate and gives him or her personal response to each specific issue.

According to the site, "While campaign promises and statements should be considered with prudent skepticism, they indicate the candidates' most likely political positions." Architectural engineering senior Claire Vukajlovich said she thinks the site is very helpful.

"It summarizes the candidates' views in one location and gives people somewhere to start learning about the different issues," she said. Aside from deciphering the best presidential candidate for each user through questions regarding political positions, the "American Presidential Candidate Selector" gives his or her personal response to "legalese" on the ballots also concerns such legislation as affirmative action."

The site is very helpful."

As for other students, feeling that their vote does not matter, either. Students in the community are sometimes not regarded as being important, Moffatt said. "There are so many candidates, and the media focuses on the race, the winning and the center rather than the issues."

The panel also discussed the timeliness of voter pamphlets being distributed and the effect of commercials. "In Mexico there are two parties," said Rich. "One is in power, and the other is in power, but also, many people have background from countries with very different political processes where they feel their vote does not count."

Quick voter's guide

Where will you guide your polling place is on the back of the sample ballot, but in case you've tossed it, call the Elections office at 781-5228 or go to the County Clerk's Web site at www.slonet.org/~clerksc.

Be prepared

Marking your ballot before punch time will allow easier voting.

Avoiding the rush

To be counted, vote between 7 a.m. to 9 a.m., 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m.

Absentee deadlines

To be counted, absentee ballots must be received by 5 p.m., either at any polling place in this county or at the County Clerk-Recorder's office in San Luis Obispo or Atascadero.

Selectors II provides an opportunity to judge each candidate based on her or his "electability, experience, background and personal conduct."

Again, candidates are ranked by how well they match the voter's criteria.

For those tired of hearing, "Are you a Democrat or a Republican?" and not having an answer, the Web site suggests the political party that best suits the voter.

"The Political Quiz Show" provides a whole new round of questions relating to subjects such as AIDS, traditional families, the role of women and minority issues. Voters answer questions such as, "Do you tend to trust or distrust government's ability to solve problems?"

The outcome of this 25-question quiz determines the most adequate political party for the user and gives a description of it.

morn, works Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, plus weekends. At the same time, Olivieri takes 19 units.

Last quarter, she worked the dreaded midnight shift.

"I usually wouldn't go to sleep. It was easier to stay up all night," she said.

From 3 to 4 a.m. she would set up. Milking time would be from 4 to 7:30 a.m., leaving an hour for cleanup.

But people never hear her complain.

"It's really interesting; it's something I've never learned before," she said.

Her future goal is to become a herdswoman.

Col Pal. Herdsmen live at the dairy and act as managers. The College of Agriculture offers student housing at animal units to people who take care of the animals and facilities at all hours.

Dairy science senior Noah Lang is a herdsman and lives on the dairy in a trailer. He said sometimes he doesn't go to bed until midnight or 1 a.m. At times he awakes in the middle of the night to someone knocking at his door to seek help with a cow.

Last quarter he took 21 units, worked 25 to 30 hours and still made the dean's list.

A total of 24 students work at the dairy. Other jobs include calf feeders, cleaning, record keeping and feeding.

Chorus of bleatings

"Campus nights don't stop with dairy cows. A chorus of bleatings welcomes Michelle Borgmann to the sheep unit off Highway 1. The sheep know it's feeding time and that Borgmann delivers the goods."

"I'm coming!" she yells.

Animal science senior Borgmann began working at the sheep unit in June. There are 60 sheep to tend. The three-week lambing season is currently underway, which means early mornings and late nights.

Borgmann and her three fellow workers share a house at the unit. They each take turns doing chores and checking on the ewes at 5 a.m. and midnight to make sure everything is all right.

"We all get a bit tired," she said.

"We keep saying only six more ews to go, then (lambing season is) all done."

Borgmann takes 21 units on top of her duties at the sheep unit.

Beef and chicken

The poultry and beef units may not have the extreme early mornings and evenings as the dairy and sheep units, but students put in just as much hard work.

There's much not in Christina Hepner's day. At 6:30 a.m. she gets up to feed, goes to school from 8 a.m. to noon, comes back to the beef unit to work with the cattle, cleans up for evening classes, and feeds again at 5 p.m. She has been living at the beef unit since June.

"We work however long it takes to get the job done," she said.

There is a total of 150 head of cattle that consist of purebred angus and shorthorn. The job includes halter breaking, taming heifers, caring for the sick and taking care of different herds at various ranches off campus. Two other girls live and work with Hepner.

Though most of the work is done between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., recent vandalism has been keeping the workers up at night.

"This last week we had to go out in the middle of the night because somebody has been letting the animals get out," she said.

Animal science senior Dominic Dow, otherwise known as the "eagon," takes care of 14,000 laying hens and 6,900 broilers, or meat birds.

"It's challenging and rewarding," said Dicz, who has been involved in the poultry unit for three years.

Binge drinking increases among Cal Poly students

By Jillian Wieda
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Spring break is almost here and many students are busy planning elaborate schemes to unwind. After endless hours of studying and sleep deprivation come to a close, the partying will begin. By avoiding binge drinking, students can avoid serious alcohol-related problems during their spring break getaways.

According to a survey of more than 750 Cal Poly students, the number of students who binge drink in a two-week period has risen from 40 percent to 49 percent since 1996. We know that binge drinking increases violence and serious injury. In sufficient quantity, alcohol is a poison, said Martin Bragg, director of Health and Counseling Services. The university has called for medical help for students with presumed alcohol poisoning more this year than in recent years, Bragg added.

Alcohol poisoning occurs after consuming large amounts of any alcoholic beverage. Alcohol, a depressant drug, works to slow down heart rate, blood pressure and breathing. The amount of alcohol it takes to produce unconsciousness is danger­ously close to a fatal dose and may cause brain damage, according to the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence.

"Students need to realize that they drink too much they could be putting themselves at risk of dying," said Reyna Dominguez, director of health education.

Binge drinking is defined by the NCAOD as drinking five or more drinks in a row on a single occasion.

Mar. 7, 2000

Some signs of alcohol poisoning are unconsciousness or semiconsciousness, slow respirations, and cold, clammy or pale skin. Throwing up doesn’t rid the body of alcohol because it is already circulating in the bloodstream, Dominguez said.

If an intoxicated person dozes off to sleep, don’t leave him or her unattended. Call 911 if one or more signs of alcohol poisoning appear.

Students may avoid potentially dangerous situations by having a game plan before the night begins.

"It’s important to know your intentions before you go out," said Alexis Whelan, English senior and peer health educator. "Know how you want your night to go and what your limits are."

Water is essential in rehydration

Katy Kinninger, nutritional science senior, writes a weekly column for Your Body.

Water in the human body is like oxygen; you can’t live without it. Water is one of the most abundant nutrients in your diet. Drinking water and other beverages are the main sources, but you can consume significant amounts of water in solid foods like juicy fruit and vegetables, such as celery, lettuce, tomatoes and watermelon.

A healthy recommendation is 8 cups of water daily in a 2,000-calorie diet. Caffeinated beverages, such as coffee, tea, soft drinks and alcoholic beverages, aren’t a good source of water. Alcohol and caffeine act as diuretics, which cause the body to lose water through increased urination. To increase water intake, have water breaks instead of coffee breaks, complement food with water, drink from water fountains, and make sure to drink water before, during and after physical activity.

When exercising, consume 4 to 8 ounces of water every 15 to 20 minutes and bring a water bottle with you. Not every person should consume eight glasses of water, due to individual body size. You should average about 3 1/2 cups of water per 1,000 calories consumed. If you are thirsty, drink water, but don’t wait for the thirst. Instead, keep that water bottle available for constant drinking. Don’t think you always need bottled water; tap water is fine, too.

Letters to the editor

Tamas bashing true, but uncalled for and immature Editor,

As a frequent opponent of Tamas Simon and an individual who has, on several occasions in this very publication, disputed his weak arguments and special-interest loyalties, I thought I would applaud the day Mustang Daily stopped running his columns. However, I am not pleased. I am appalled.

Joe Nolan and Whitney Phaneuf’s letters on Friday’s opinion page were unnecessary and cruel. Is it true that Mr. Simon’s writing ability is lacking? Yes. Is it true that Mr. Simon has never offered a powerful argument with supporting facts? Absolutely. Does that mean he deserved to be publicly humiliated by the editorial staff? I don’t think so. I am sure there is a better, more mature, way to deal with the situation.

Megan Arenas is an environmental horticulture sciences freshman.

Tamas is not alone in his conservative views Editor,

How discouraging it is for another student to read the editor of the Mustang Daily slandering a fellow student? Friday’s opinion page (March 3), where Mustang Daily editors responded to accusations of a liberal bias, was entirely unprofessional and an embarrassment, not only to Cal Poly but to the Mustang Daily.

In my opinion, the Mustang Daily seems to be extremely fearful of Tamas Simon. Why? I can’t say. However, I do wonder, from reading all of this controversy going on in the paper, why such a big paper is so afraid of one man. Tamas has every right to publish his thoughts and opinions. I commend him for taking on not only the liberal press, but the liberal professors at Cal Poly. It is a difficult thing for anybody to do.

I find it funny how the Daily makes Tamas look like he’s alone. The Daily only publishes negative attacks toward Tamas. Well, Tamas, you’re not alone! And many other students feel that the Mustang Daily is a liberal organization. I commend you in taking the first step toward fighting it.

The Mustang Daily claims to be non-biased and claims to have more Republicans working for the paper than Democrats. Yet all I read are democratic points of view in the Daily. It’s refreshing to read Tamas’ conservative views when I pick up the paper. I really think it’s sad that an individual has to put up a fight and plead with the school paper to get a point across.

Editors, although you may not agree with Tamas, I urge you to focus more on the point he’s trying to make rather than on his spelling. Throughout half of the two articles, the only defense against Tamas was that he can’t spell. Well, I’m sorry we can’t all be English majors. I challenge you to prove Tamas’ articles are incorrect instead of just writing about it. It’s easy to sit there and criticize, but it’s not easy to really do anything about it. Every day Tamas is working, putting out the conservative voice, that’s much more than I can say for you.

It’s sad that students have to be afraid of putting their opinions in the school paper in fear of distasteful and unprofessional rebuttal arguments much like you’ve shown Tamas.

In conclusion, students, I urge you to learn from this mistake that the Daily has clearly made. Learn that a paper can print whatever views it wants and still claim to be non-biased. Always learn that editors have the last say. But also know that the truth will eventually prevail. Tamas, you’re not alone!

Jennifer C. Kirkpatrick is a political science senior.

Look at both sides of "Bible thumping"
Editor,
It is always interesting to see the reactions when a loud-mouthed "Bible Thumper" (and his partner) come to the University Union. You see those who don't believe mocking him for being crazy. You see those who do believe mocking him for using the wrong method.

As a Christian, it is hard to listen to that message and clearly know what to think. On one hand, the man and his partner are speaking the truth. One day every person will stand before God and be judged for their actions. Hebrews 9:27 says: "Just as man is destined to die once and then to face judgment." This is not a gray area and it is a message that every person needs to hear. Also, these men are very similar to John the Baptist, the prophet who prepared the path for Jesus. John didn't tour college campuses, but he definitely made the hair stand on the back of people's necks because he was shouting at them. John spoke out in the desert and wore camel hair and a leather belt. He preached the message, "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is near." Like the men today, John didn't care what people thought of him. He had the message of God and he needed to speak. Those men do the same.

Yet on the other hand, it is hard for me to back men who preach a loving Jesus through the message of condemnation. Judging people you don't know and arguing with them is rarely called love. As I was listening, I was saddened to remember a verse I've memorized, which ironically falls one verse before the verse they were preaching. John 3:17 says: "For God did not send His son into the world to condemn the world but to save the world through Him."

As a Christian, I praise their boldness ... but I can't praise the condemnation. The true message is the beauty of Jesus, not arguing religious issues. I didn't listen the whole time, but my prayer is that maybe at some point this message came across. God doesn't tolerate sin. It is a separation from God and it is rebelling against God's ways. All will be judged for their actions. Yet God knew that as soon as man screwed up once, there was no way to become perfect again. That is why God in His love and lack of condemnation sent Jesus with good news. This news says that those who ask God for forgiveness and believe that Jesus is the only way to Heaven will be saved. Don't get me wrong, a price has to be paid for wrong actions. Jesus, the sinner man who died because of our actions, took that penalty. In Jesus, there is a message of throwing out all that is wrong, but there is also the hope of a clean slate.

God has a serious message, but God has good news ... not news that makes you think "Oh great ... here's those crazy Bible guys again."

Scott Wagner is a fifth-year civil engineering senior who will gladly discuss Jesus with anyone who asks.

Good job, editors

I presume that you are the Joe Nolan who edits the Mustang Daily. Good letter, Joe (March 3). I don't think a poorly written letter or columns should appear in a paper even if it has been submitted by someone in an influential or important position. By the way, have you ever listened to G.W. Bush speak? If his "sentences" were transcribed onto paper, no respectable newspaper would print them. But then earlier presidents have demonstrated that a good handle on grammar is not a prerequisite for the job.

Jay Devore is a statistics professor.

Fast, Fresh Juice Drinks On Campus

By Lauren Nowenstein

The next time you're on campus, and looking for a cool and fruity meal or snack, stop by Lucy's Juice or Lucy's Juice, Too and choose from one of 14 delicious blended drink recipes—or create your own.

All the drinks are made with wholesome ingredients like fruit and fruit juices, non fat yogurt, and Power Powders like wheat germ and rice bran. Lucy's Juice is located along Poly View Drive, near the mail kiosk and the University Union. Lucy's Juice, Too is located downstairs in Dexter. The stores offer the same basic menu, but only Lucy's Too sells four special carrot drinks. Also, only at Lucy's, Too you save 25 cents if you buy a smoothie drink on Tuesdays or Thursdays.

When you pay with Campus Express or Plu$ Dollars be sure to remember to ask for your free second Power Powder at Lucy's Juice. At both stores, customers who bring a Lucy's mug to use instead of a styrofoam cup. save 25 cents.

Bill Jenkins, the manager of Lucy's Juice, said the store sold an average of 254 drinks daily between January 31 and February 4 of this year. The top sellers at Lucy's Juice (in this order) during the time period were: Rexy's Peach Berry Pleasure, Tweety's Tangy Delight, Joey's Guava Cooler, and Patty's Perfect Peach. Of the Power Powders ordered, about a 1/3 of customers requested protein, 1/6 requested calcium, and the rest requested one of the other seven Power Powders. During warmer months, Lucy's Juice sells up to about 350 drinks daily. The stores require a lot of fruit and yogurt to make all these drinks.

"At Lucy's Juice, we go through about three 40-pound boxes of sliced peaches a week. For orange, raspberry, and pineapple sherberts, we go through about six gallons of each every week," Jenkins said.

Lucy's Too also uses an additional 30 pounds each of raspberries, blueberries, and boysenberries. Jenkins added that while the staff at Lucy's Juice and Lucy's Juice, Too will gladly make any drink for a customer, they personally prefer to make drinks that contain bananas because they are easier to remove from the blenders.

for the start of the season. Schneider should come back in head coach.

But if Schneider doesn't correct the things he said he has to work on, he won't be around long. The first thing Schneider must do is calm down.

When you're winning, all the yelling and emotion and enthusiasm are great. When you lose, all the rah-rah becomes a tiresome act. The next point, which is similar, is maintaining composure.

Especially early in the year, Schneider had no patience, silencing players after every little mistake. It's the same players were making too many they were able to get a few minutes on the bench.

Schneider also needs to redefine the offense to take advantage of David Henry and James Grace's abilities to take their men off the dribble and drive to the basket. One of the main reasons that Long Beach State won the game was because of its athleticism. It had the ability allowed it to take the ball to the hoop, force the defense to collapse and allow the 4s to kick the ball out for open jumpers.

Henry and Grace have this ability, and with Wozniak's career now over the offense should be opened up, allowing this to happen. Also, the strong post-up games of Jeremiah Myers and Chris Byrdland need to be used. With the wins the offense is currently experiencing of those little mistakes, but it's unrealistic to expect players to play with one hand if the coach doesn't show any.

This is also evident when he verbal- ly abuses the referees after every call. Schneider also needs to be more positive.

All year he said the team was very young and then he would trade them apart for youthful mistakes. This method doesn't inspire confidence. It creates a tense environment where the players are playing not to make a mistake, rather than playing to win.

Schneider does so much to the Mustangs next year. But the players and fans also deserve a coach who will lead the team with patience and a poised leader. If it happens, there will be no need to look for a new coach.

Joe Nolan is the managing editor. E-mail him jnolan@calpoly.edu.

Mayes often catches the ball at the top of the post, where he isn't a scoring threat. The offense needs to rotate more so Mayes doesn't catch the ball more than 15 feet from the basket, so he can be in position to do what he does best, which is pick up offensive rebounds and get them in the basket.

Cal Poly has more talent than almost every team in the Big West — it just needs to utilize it. Schneider now has a long off-season to go through film and analyze what worked and what didn't the previous year. The threats of Mike WOMEN'S scoring touch will be definitely missed next year, but the Mustangs have the chance to adapt their offense and move closer to exploiting their strengths.

Matt Sterling is the Mustang Daily's assistant sports editor and is head coach of an underachieving intramural basketball team. E-mail him at sports@mustangdaily.calpoly.edu.
Men's basketball fails to deliver again
Will Schneider stick with Mustangs?

Sophomore guard Kristy Baker was named Big West Player of the Week.

Joe Nolan

When the Mustangs' disappointing season came to an end Saturday night, the hunt for talent, media, and anyone at all concerned with Cal Poly athletics got a little louder. Should Jeff Schneider retain as head coach of the men's basketball team next year?

After Saturday's season-ending loss to Long Beach State, Schneider told the media, "I have piece of mind with what I've done ... I realize there are things to work on in the program, and that I need to work on individually. I think there are some things I've done outstanding and there are some things I need to work on. But I have piece of mind with what I've done, with what I've still done and with what our players have done."

That sounds great, but there's no way anyone as competitive as Schneider can see a 10-18 finish and a second straight year with unfulfilled expectations as a job well done. A Division I coach should have higher expectations.

The more interesting part of Schneider's statement is what he has "done outstanding" and what he "needs to work on." This is where the debate over Schneider's job security gets interesting.

There's no question Schneider has done an excellent job bringing in talented athletes. He's had three Newcomers of the Year with Ben Larson, Mike Wozniak and Chris Byrdland. David Henry, Jason King and Jeremiah Merris have also established themselves as very good Division I players. But they haven't won.

Schneider thinks Jamal Scott (a freshman next year) may be the best recruit Cal Poly has ever landed. That addition, teamed with two other factors — Byrdland will be a senior and Schneider is signed through the 2002-2003 season — mean one thing: Schneider will be back next year.

And rightfully so. If Scott is the player Schneider claims him to be, Schneider deserves the opportunity to coach and win with them.

Byrdland is a logical favorite for Big West Player of the Year next season. He, along with several other players, know Schneider's system. A change before next year may cause more problems than it solves.

As for Schneider's contract, Athletic Director John McCutcheon wanted to sign him (McCutchon wasn't available for comment on that issue), but it wouldn't make financial sense. According to a source close to the athletic department, Schneider makes approximately $90,000 to $100,000 per year. That money would still have to be paid if McCutchon fired Schneider.

Also, it would be foolish to single Schneider out as the only person responsible for the team's failures.

Kristy Baker named Big West Player of the Week

Mustang Daily Staff Report

Sophomore guard Kristy Baker was named Big West Player of the Week after averaging 14 points and five assists last week while leading the Cal Poly women's basketball team to its first ever Big West Conference Tournament berth. Baker had 14 points in the Mustangs' victory vs. UC Irvine Thursday, and added a team-high 19 points in Cal Poly's 86-65 win over CSU Fullerton. She also hit a personal-high 10-for-10 in the victory.

Baker is averaging 9.8 points per game and 2.4 rebounds a game. Baker's scoring couldn't have been better, leading the Mustangs as they won their last three games, qualifying for the final tournament berth.

Today, Baker and the Mustangs head to Reno for their first round matchup with tournament host Nevada. Cal Poly fell to the Wolfpack 74-69 earlier this season in Nevada.

Cal Poly men's basketball coach Jeff Schneider needs to make the next step

Mike Wozniak played his final game for the Mustangs Saturday.

Losing Brandon Brown for the season with an injury and having Jabbar Washington transfer to Portland State severely damaged the Mustangs' depth. It also didn't help when Brandon Hulst came down with mononucleosis and wasn't ready to see NOLAN, page 7

Improvements needed to make the next step

The Cal Poly men's basketball team played its best game Saturday night, but it came away with a loss. The Mustangs' loss shouldn't be blamed on their play; they gave every ounce of effort. Their problem is with their system — and head coach Jeff Schneider needs to refine his system to exploit the strengths of his players.

A no-rotation doesn't allow your team to grow, as Cal Poly showed on Saturday night. Long Beach State was able to shut out in fresh players, while the Mustangs weren't able to keep up with the 49ers' speed. Cal Poly is a quick team, but no team is able to be quick for a full 40 minutes without getting ample time to rest.

This was clearly shown in the guard play, and the other players were able to substitute a little more. Jason King and Mike Wozniak played nearly every minute of the game and were effective, but they could have played much better if they were able to substitute a little more. The Cal Poly roller hockey team secured the final playoff spot in the Western Region after winning all four of its games over the weekend. Sitting in seventh place with only the top six teams earning playoff invites, the Mustangs swept their four matches to sneak into the March 26 regional in San Jose.

Cal Poly started off strong, routing Fresno State 24-2. Tim Girvin had six goals, and James Marshall and Chint Marsalek each added four goals in the blowout.

Cal Poly then faced Grossmont College, which had gone 2-2 in head-to-head matchups with the Mustangs. Girvin, Marshall, Marsalek and Joey Oksuta all had two points. Cal Poly won 8-5.

The Mustangs had no problem in their third match, shutting out the University of San Diego 11-0. The win was grate Brennan Edwards' second shutout of the season.

In the fourth and final match, Cal Poly beat its nemise, Cal Poly Pomona 7-2. The game was tied at two at the half, but five second-half goals sealed the game and the top to the regional.
