Student’s freedom becomes profane

The Cal Poly “P” Tuesday morning should have told the story of computer science sophomore J. Paul Reed and his alleged port scanning incidents. It did until 4:25 a.m. when the words “Free Paul” were taken down, a mistake for profanity.

Doug Overman, assistant director of Facility Services, said the form 81 Reed obtained from Student Life and Activities to decorate the “P” and to hang a banner in the University Union was approved by Facility Services. Yet, after one complaint, University Police Sgt. Lott Hashim ordered the “P” decoration taken down.

“Who thought it said something else,” said an employee of the College of Architecture and Environmental Design who requested to remain anonymous. “From one direction it looked like a profanity.”

The cager mistakenly thought it said “Free Paul.”

After Monday night’s storm, the bed sheets that spelled out his name were disintegrated by the wind and spelled out something that looked like “Free Paul.” Reed noticed the “P” at 9 a.m. while he was on his way to his Judicial Affairs hearing on the port scanning case. When he finished his three-hour meeting he

A Cal Poly student said he found a misplaced police report from the Sigma Chi hearing case Monday night, causing him to question the efficiency of Judicial Affairs.

J. Paul Reed, whose own case pertaining to alleged misuse of campus computers is being handled by Judicial Affairs, found a campus police report stapled to paperwork from his own case.

Reed said the paperwork, an explanation packet of student disciplinary procedures, had been in his possession since March 7. The report was dated March 1. The Sigma Chi story was first opened to the public on March 29, three weeks after Reed unknowingly received it. Reed did not notice the report was something unrelated to his case until Monday.

“I was reading the policies one last time, and I saw this police report and thought it was a sample case,” Reed said. “Then I saw it was Sigma Chi, and I thought ‘Wait a minute.’”

Reed, who said he didn’t think he should have that information, brought the police report to Judicial Affairs coordinator Amanda Tregnere Tuesday morning before his hearing.

“I don’t know how he got that copy,” Tregnere said. “It does not match the paper that comes out of our office. Our documents are date-stamped.”

Tregnere said the report did not come from Judicial Affairs and that there are many copies of the report in circulation.

Judicial Affairs hearings and procedures are typically kept behind closed doors. However, J. Paul Reed, currently accused of port scanning computers from on campus, has talked openly about his case.

“Can he say anything he wants because it’s his case,” said Amanda Tregnere, Judicial Affairs coordinator.

“I can’t release information of comment without having the student sign a release.”

Tregnere said she wants to assure students involved with Judicial Affairs that their information will remain private unless they speak publicly about it or sign a release form allowing university officials to comment.

A Cal Poly student was carjacked and escaped kidnapping Sunday night after the suspect approached her in front of her home and asked to use a phone. Autumn business junior Kim Buntill, 21, saw an opportunity to free herself from the suspect and was unharmed. The suspect is still on the loose.

The suspect is described as a white male, 45 to 60 years old with gray hair and beard, brown and mustache. He was wearing black pants and a black jacket.

“She has frizzy hair and a pretty big bike,” Buntill said.

She was approached at her Bond street home, an area she describes as safe, by a suspect who knocked on her door. “He was looking for a girl named Abigail,” Buntill said.

After explaining that no one by that name lived there, Buntill locked her door and returned to a phone call. Approximately 15 minutes later, Buntill said she left her home and asked for directions to downtown.

She was approached by the suspect again, who asked to use a phone. Buntill offered her cellular phone and called information for the suspect.

Buntill then got into her car. “I locked the car doors... He was freaking me out,” she said. The suspect came to the driver’s-side window and asked for directions to downtown. She rolled the window part way down to offer directions.

The suspect put a gun to Buntill’s neck and ordered her to move to the passenger side. Buntill was then told to close her eyes and keep her hands on the dashboard.

“She told me he wasn’t afraid to use the gun,” she said. “He showed his gun in his hand for part of the car ride, which lasted about 10 minutes.”

Faculty keys into free software

By Amy Lovell

Cal Poly faculty and staff now have access to the latest in computer technology through Information Technology Services (ITS).

"KeyServer," as it is accessed via a Cal Poly Internet Protocol network address, is a device that Blackley said the programs for each department money, which ultimately benefits students.

The software is available through current licensing agreements. It works like a library. A user checks out software when the software they put it back and it is available to someone else, Blackley said. "Instead of each department having to purchase individual licenses, they can use that money for other things."

Some students think the program will benefit their learning environment. "My psychology teacher puts the syllabus and some overheads online," architecture freshman Vivian Le said. "It helps to familiarize me with the topics that will be covered in class."

"We have two graduate students that used Sound Edit to compare woodpecker and frog sounds," Bowker said. "They simply went out and recorded the animals on a regular tape recorder and then plugged the machines directly into the computer. This allowed them to analyze the sound and detect differences." KeyServer is funded in part by the fees non-faculty staff pay to access the software pool and partly through the Faculty Workstation Project (FWP) computer program. Blackley said that although these applications are free to faculty and available to non-faculty staff for a minimal fee, only about 30 percent of Cal Poly faculty are using the KeyServer program.

"Cal Poly has about 1,200 faculty and staff members," Blackley said. "Right now we only have 378 people using the KeyServer program. We'd like to see more staff taking advantage of these applications." Anyone connected to the Cal Poly network has access to KeyServer. Faculty members using an FWP-computer may use KeyServer at no cost, and can also download software onto laptops and home computers. Employees not using FWP-computers must pay a $100 start-up fee and a $50 annual fee to access the software pool. The software is updated every summer.

Users can go to www.keyserver.calpoly.edu for information on how to get started.

was informed that it was taken down at 9:10 a.m. Hashim received the complaint from the college and made the judgment call whether to take theбед sheets down from the "F." "I went out there and looked, I saw Paul but couldn't see the 'Free' part," Hashim said. "At that time I wasn't sure what it said. My whole thinking was that someone was offended." Reed added that the weather distorted his message, but he stressed his "Free Paul" decoration was not the only thing he put up around campus and Reed's flyers and banners also conveyed his message.

"It rained last night turning it into Free Paul," Reed said. "I figured that with the banner in the UU and flyers that people could see that it was Free Paul. I wished they could look around and open their eyes to see what was going on."

Hashim added University Police rarely receives complaints from departments to remove flyers, banners or decorations on the "F" and University Police would decide whether or not to honor the complaint.

"What's he referring to many people have access to."

Reed does not understand how he could have received information like this.

"It surprises me that Judicial Affairs would look something like this, either by mistake or on purpose, especially something so critical at that point in the Sigma Chi case," Reed said. Sigma Chi members, meanwhile, are still in the appeal process in their case. Four fraternity members - Kevin Kalin, Chad Mcllroy, Parr and Thomas Griffith - were accused by freshman Jason Stone of being involved with a hazing incident during fall pledging activities.

The fraternity's appeal was accepted on Monday, and the next step is a meeting with Vice President for Student Affairs Juan Gonzdez. The meeting will take place within the next 10 days.

"At the meeting they'll come in to make their case (with an adviser if they want), and Dr. Gonzalez will review their case," special assistant to the vice president Polly Hamigan said.

Sigma Chi members refused comment at this time on the status of the case or the mix-up involving the police report because the case is still ongoing.

parking lot behind Mid State Bank. "I was crying and shaking... I kept telling him to shut up," said Buntill. He said he would let her go if she followed directions. The suspect ordered her to move to the back seat, but she refused. When he placed the gun on the dashboard to move Buntill's purse so she could move to the back, Buntill fled the car.

"As soon as I saw his hands free from the gun, I jetted out of my car," she said.

Buntill did not know what his intentions were once he got her in the backseat. "I couldn't live with myself if he would have tried to rape me."

She ran for about four blocks and called the police from Taco Rooco on Casa Rosa Street. "When you are that scared, your body says 'get the hell out of there,'... I am just glad I know where I was."

"I kept hoping all the cars driving by weren't him."

Buntill's vehicle was found by the 7-11 near California and Taft streets. Prior to this incident, the same suspect approached two other women - one at her home and one while jogging. Both called the police after being anned, said Dan Brethahn, San Luis Obispo Police Department detective.

Police viewed 7-11's security tape in order to get a photograph of the suspect. All three women - Buntill and the two others - identified the man on the tape as the offender, said Brethahn.

"We have a photograph and have a very good description... we're waiting for someone to come forward with information," Brethahn said. Since the attempted kidnapping, Buntill said she hasn't been by her home.

"You never think it's going to happen to you. It comes straight out of nowhere," she said.

Purchasing computers online is becoming a very popular shopping method, but before making a financial commitment, it is important to keep in mind a few things to help you distinguish one site from the next.

“Shopping on the Internet is catching on fast. More and more people are shopping online because of the convenience, choices, values and time savings,” says ZDTV’s Web site, www.zdtv.com. The site, which is run by a technology publications and media firm, provides consumers with comparisons of computer equipment and online shopping tips.

One of the greatest benefits of online shopping is cost. Online stores often offer better prices than traditional stores, but it is important to look at a variety of sites to determine what is a good deal. Apple computers, for instance, are sold for the same price by all dealers, so it may be necessary to look closer.

Some sites do not charge sales tax, which, for a computer purchase, can add up to quite a bit. Sites like PCConnections.com and MacConnections.com do not charge tax on any items shipped to California. Shipping charges vary among sites. Some offer free shipping, some overcharge and some ship at a reduced rate. Online retailers often offer free overnight shipping and no sales tax when shipping to California. Sites like these allow substantial savings on large purchases.

With the range of different sales taxes and shipping costs, the site that has the best price for the item alone may end up charging more for the total transaction than a competitor with a higher initial item price but lower shipping or sales tax fees. Apple.com, for example, often offers its computer hardware at a discounted price for students and faculty if bought for educational purposes. At first glance, the savings seem worthwhile; however, after factoring in shipping and sales tax, a full-priced system from Apple.com may end up costing more for the sum of computer hardware at a discounted price, including for students and faculty if bought for educational purposes.

Another option to consider is buying a refurbished machine. Many Web sites offer models that are used and then returned by fulfillment factors specifications. Consequently, these systems can often be found at a very good price; however, the latest innovations are sacrificed. These are a good alternative for buyers who don’t need the latest of everything.

For other online shopping tips, or to verify that a computer is a particular business, visit the Better Business Bureau’s site at www.bbbonline.com. As well as verifying information, many sites offer a phone number to call with a live salesperson to this resource to get answers or clarification about anything that seems unclear from the Web site.

This is it: the ultimate betrayal. You’re going to dump your “baby” (PC) to buy yourself a brand new one. You are going to leave the beloved machine that served you well in the past, what is it, like, four months these days?

Well, if you’re going to do it, then make sure you know what you’re looking for so at least you will come out satisfied.

Buying computers online is never easy. Especially if you lack knowledge about what the various sites actually offer. If you are the gambling type, try searching on E-bay.com and watch out for security. If you are the purchasing type, make it easier for the customer to recoup their money if the product is not delivered.

The only problem with doing this is that I wouldn’t trust most of them with my credit card number and many of their tech support are inadequate. If you are the gambling type, try searching on E-bay.com and bid on a PC. You can find very good deals, just make sure that you don’t end up bidding too much money.

If you think you know enough about PCs to not need tech help, you’re better off buying parts and building your computer yourself. Try www.priceswatch.com. It will provide you with yet another accomplishment to list on your resume, and save you a bundle. Heck, if you can fix a friend into building one for you, even better!

After all, if you can’t take advantage of your friends, then where is the joy in life?

ASI has issues; candidate has good solutions

As a freshman, my student government experiences at Cal Poly have been limited to the Sports Complex moves incident, which was handled by the John Mulholland questionable endorsement of Mike Ravn, and the recent Azorean Delarrt scandal; these events haven’t cast ASI in the most flattering light. I am appreciative that there is a strong voice for ASI. The corporation manages the Children’s Center, REC Center and Universities Union, which are all invaluable campus resources. I don’t currently have any children, but I’ve often made use of the REC Center, and I think most of us take advantage of the AU on a daily basis.

And while I can see the positive work of ASI, I can also see how the student governance aspect is definitely lacking. Potential members themselves are encouraged to vote “creatively” into the board, and at least one candidate is urging the student body to “expect more.” I agree that we should be pressing ASI for more than they’ve given in the last year, but expect more what? More canceled meetings? More meeting situations? Maybe! One candidate for that has it right when he urges us to vote accountably, but I am also get-involved-itis. The reason Eddie Drake’s campaign caught my attention was because it offers realistic solutions to things I believe are wrong with ASI. Representatives should be accountable for their attendance and voting records and a way to reach the reps from my college.

I also think everyone realizes that leadership needs to be strengthened on the board. A strong-minded chair could prevent unnecessary motions, build stronger subcommittees and help to polish the tarnished reputation ASI currently has. Someone focused on returning leadership could be instrumental in preventing things like the Azorean Delarrt vote from becoming scandalous.

Finally, my favorite aspect of Drake’s campaigns: student-advocacy. ASI doesn’t always know what students want or even need. I think it is time that ASI really understood and supported students; this is a subject needs we’re fond of complaining about. I fully support a student-advocacy committee where the entire student body would have the opportunity to voice concerns and opinions.

Let’s face it: ASI takes money straight from student fees to fund its $58 million budget. While free buses and ID’s printed pages and co-op attempts at serving our needs, I don’t think ASI is living up to its full potential. I would like the chance to become informed voters during this next week and head over to Dexter Lawn April 26 and 27 to vote.

Megan Arenaz is an environmental horticulture science freshman who’ll be voting Eddie Drake for ASI chair.

There’s no place like summer camp

There’s no better way to relieve the good ol’ days at camp than to become a camp counselor. I’ll never forget going to sixth-grade camp. I was considered a child and forming a strong bond with my counselor. I was so scared and nervous when I got there because I’d never been away from home. I wanted to cry. But Sheila was there from the start to cheer me up. We had a great week together with all my classmates. We camped, cooked, swam, skied and enjoyed outdoor activities. Sheila kept us so busy we didn’t even think about home, and when the end of the week arrived it was time to get on the bus. I did cry.

I didn’t want to go home, and I was going to miss Sheila so much. She made us all look like a band of gaggles. You never saw her again, but I still have the necklace she gave me. I’ll never forget that time at camp.

I’d like to think that I’m a better person for having that camp experience and knowing Sheila. If nothing else, it helped me get over my fear of being away from home for more than a couple of days at a time.

Aside from getting paid, counselors get to venture into the great outdoors and work with kids of all ages. Many of these kids need good role models, and this profession offers the opportunity to make a difference in a very impressionable person’s life.

Several of the camps I found on the Internet were designed to help their visitors slim down. Here’s a chance to make a strong connection with someone who needs support through his or her struggles. These kids probably don’t have very high self-esteem, and your involvement in their summer can leave them feeling better about themselves. Their time with you is one they’ll remember for the rest of their lives.

Liberal studies majors, especially those who want to go into teaching, stand to gain great insight from a position like this. They will be exposed to working with kids of a wide age range with a variety of needs in very unique situations. Unfortunately, few traditional camps exist on the West Coast. Establishments such as the YMCA are in need of counselors for their day camp programs. If you just want to play all day and leave the kids with someone else at night, there are several camps located throughout California. The Career Services Center on campus has job postings for various types of camp counselor positions. There are several resources online for those interested in counselor positions abroad. One organization, campcounselors.com, lists counselors all over the world, including Australia and Russia. Other resources for camps within the United States include campjobs.com, campstaff.com and horizonscamps.com. These organizations say that counselors can earn anywhere from $350 to $1,500 in a summer position.

Beyond summer camp — unless you become a teacher — you may never gain such important life experience. Dance, sing camp songs, make soap carvings and bond with some very unique kids. A position like this is a last chance at reliving childhood summers when nothing mattered but winning home to Mom and Dad and taking in an afternoon on the lake.

The job is not for people looking to slack off but for people interested in making a difference and getting involved in something bigger than themselves.

World Bank college protestors flood D.C.

(WIRE) MADISON, Wis. — University of Wisconsin has always been home to protesters concerned about many different issues. This weekend approximately 85 UW students left Wisconsin to join over 10,000 activists in Washington D.C. to protest during the joint meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

UW freshman Andy Lehn was among the group of students in D.C. Lehn said taking part in the protest was a moving experience.

"I felt empowered to be around so many people who were working together for freedom — for the rights of other people who have been oppressed," Lehn said. "It was also kind of scary, because the police were marching around in platoons formation."

He added that the protesters were very peaceful at times and that people were extremely creative in their demonstrations.

On Monday, protesters attempted to shut down the meetings by blocking the streets of Washington, but were held back by blobs of police officers equipped with tear gas.

"Six hundred protesters were arrested Monday, somewhere in the double digits. Police sprayed tear gas once and pepper spray many times during the day," he said.

Reed said he attended his preliminary hearing Tuesday morning with Judicial Affairs. Tregenza and her advisor, Reed and his advisor, and a hearing officer attended the hearing. Both sides presented evidence and arguments.

Judicial Affairs now has about 15 days to respond with a finding of fact, and later with sanctions. Reed said sanctions leveled against him may include deferred suspension or expulsion.

POLY ESCAPES

Spring is finally showing its blessed signs of serenity. The sun is shining, the birds are chirping, and the rivers are flowing! Don't worry you'll still be able to hear the birds and feel the sun as you take a adrenaline pumped trip down a gushing river stopped inside an eight foot boat. White water kayaking season is running at full speed, and Poly Escapes is in the middle of it all. We offer kayaking roll classes every Monday night at the Crandall Pool from 6-9pm, we lead kayek river trips to the Kern and the American Rivers, and we go kayok surfing when we're not doing one of the previous. Come in and find out how to get involved... For questions about kayaking please call Brooke Dukin at 756-2743.

Sharks surprising Blues

SAN JOSE (AP) — The St. Louis Blues, who led the NHL with 114 points during the regular season, scored two goals in a row, are struggling against eighth-seeded San Jose in the first round of the playoffs.

After their second straight loss to the Sharks, the Blues were blue Monday, but looking how they broke through against a suddenly - and soundly - revived San Jose defense.

The Sharks' 2-1 victory Monday night gave San Jose a 2-1 lead in the series. Game 4 of the best-of-7 series is set for Wednesday night.

Curtis Nolan scored twice Wednesday for the Sharks, who broke a four-game home losing streak in the playoffs. The first of his goals deflected into the net off St. Louis defenseman Chris Pronger, but the Blues had one more way to go.

"I think they've scored one lucky goal a game," Turek said. "They were just more lucky than us. We had more shots and more scoring chances than they did.

St. Louis outshot the Sharks 32-22 Monday, but San Jose goalie Steve Shields made tough saves - including a glove stop at close range against Scott Young while St. Louis was on a power play early in the third period. Young earlier scored the only goal of the game for St. Louis."

"(Shields) was outstanding. He made great saves," teammate Mike Ricci said. "He's now settled into a groove. He's the whole package. He likes to play, and that's what old saying goes. Do you get experience? You play. Well, he's playing and he's playing great."

The Sharks went 0-4-1 against St. Louis during the regular season, but only one of the four losses was in the playoffs. In Game 2 Saturday at St. Louis, the Sharks scored two goals on St. Louis goalie Grant Fuhr, so the Blues may have sweated it out.

"I'm past all my dreaded days," said manager John Schuerholz. "I respect our fans and I respect the way they feel that we have the appropriate, insensitive comments."
Ski and snowboard team finishes second

By Jennifer Beard

Despite injuries to team members, the Cal Poly ski and snowboarding team finished second place in its league at this year's Southern California Collegiate Ski and Snowboard Conference (SCSC). The team ran second to UCSC's first-place finish and was followed by UCLA in third and USC in fourth.

"Santa Barbara has been the team to beat for the last three years," said team president Greg Gerken. Gerken attributes the high standing of UCSB to its proximity to Mammoth Mountain, where all eight races took place. The team competes in a league of 11 schools from San Diego to San Luis Obispo, most of which are closer than Cal Poly to Mammoth.

"I feel that we have the strongest team in the league, but it's tough for our school to get our athletes up to Mammoth Mountain because we have the longest commitment to drive there. Our trip is about seven hours long," Gerken said.

ROCKER makes controversial return

ATLANTA (AP) - With hardly a hint of protest from the crowd, John Rocker returned the Braves on Monday night, hoping fans remember his fastball more than his foul mouth.

The game against the Philadelphia Phillies seemed just like another nondescript, midweek contest except for a lot more reporters. The reliever returned for his first game of the season after a two-week suspension for comments about minorities, gays and immigrants.

Rocker said he heard only one negative remark while traveling with the Braves last weekend in Milwaukee. "It's not a big deal," Rocker told TRIB for an interview that aired before the "I think when the team starts winning and we eat the Brives last weekend in Milwaukee.
