Tournament aims to raise mental health awareness

By Erica Tower
Mustang Daily Staff Writer

An important Cal Poly tradition continues Friday at noon at the Rec Center with the third annual Mark St. Reuliny Memorial Volleyball Challenge to benefit Health and Counseling Services.

Reuliny was an avid volleyball player and a former Cal Poly student who took his own life. It will also raise money for an endowment aimed to increase awareness about depression and bi-polar disorder, also known as manic depression.

"It's a fun event for a good cause," said Bob Naguntis, counseling services administrator. "All of the money we raise goes directly back to the students."

Reuliny, a 1989 Cal Poly construction management graduate, committed suicide in 1996 after struggling with both depression and bi-polar disorder. Reuliny's twin brother also suffered from both conditions but received treatment. For Reuliny, however, help came too late.

After Reuliny's death, his parents created an endowment in his honor to fund mental health education, and initiated the idea for an annual fund-raiser. The benefits eventually assumed the shape of the annual Volleyball Challenge, because Reuliny was an avid volleyball player while he attended Cal Poly.

The memorial tournament will be held in conjunction with a presentation on mental health this Friday from 10 to 11 a.m. at the Albert B. Smith Alumni and Conference Center.

Anne Goshen, Ph.D., Cal Poly professor and counselor, will speak about the types and causes of mood disorders, how to recognize depression in yourself or someone you know, and the variety of treatments currently available.

"This disease is much more common than people think. The symptoms usually first appear in the college-age years."

Students start search for rental housing

By Larissa Van Beurden
Mustang Daily Staff Writer

Although it's only winter quarter, many students are already looking for a place to call home next year.

There is a major housing crunch in San Luis Obispo, with more students than available affordable housing. With an even greater number of incoming freshmen next year combined with a limited number of on-campus dorms, students are starting early to find affordable housing, preferably close to campus.

Julia Americh, an art and design freshman, lives in the dorms this year, but hopes to move off campus next year. She hasn't started looking for a place yet, but has an idea about where she wants to live next year. "We're hoping to lease at Mustang (Village) next year," she said.

Mustang Village is a popular location for students because of its proximity to campus. Since houses close to campus fill up fast, some people will live almost anywhere, as long as they have a roof over their head.

Ellie Malkont, a property manager at California-West, Inc., said students have already started calling for lists of next year's housing.

"The list comes out May 1st," she said. "But we have actually started receiving calls from students for about the past month."

Malkont said the craziest time for her office is from May 1 until mid-September, but she gets calls year around from students needing a place to live. About 90 percent of Malkont's business is from students, she said, but she will rent to anyone.

There are numerous places students can go to look for rental lists besides a property management company. The Web site Slorentals.net lists numerous helpful sites for housing. It gives everything from property management lists to help finding a roommate. Many of the rental lists are updated daily throughout the year.

The classified ads in any newspaper will list apartments, condos, houses and rentals to share.

Downstairs in the University Union, there is a large housing billboard that lists houses for rent, rooms for rent and roommates wanted. Currently, there are 12 listings for housing.

The most important thing to remember when trying to rent a house is the application.

One of the main problems Malkont has is that students' rental applications aren't complete. The most important thing people don't list is also the most important: "Make sure you have your prior tenant's phone number listed," she said. "We do call references, and we notice that lacking most of all."

Malkont said the main problem is that everybody wants a house, and there just aren't that many. She suspects that if students are seriously looking, they should find a house they like and stay with it.

"Be tenacious," she said. "Once you start tracking a list, stay on it. Have your application filled out and ready."

Many students hope to find a house like this one, to rent. Competition for rental housing is stiff, and students must act quickly and persistently to find one and keep it, said one property manager.

Housing listings can be found in newspaper classified ads, Web sites such as Slorentals.net and down-stairs in the University Union.
National study shows college crimes are up

Many American universities struggle with binge drinking—the excessive consumption of alcohol by students. The implications go beyond drinking, Carter added. “Alcohol and violence have a direct correlation,” he said.

The report cites 108,846 incidents of alcohol-related referrals for disciplinary action in addition to the 25,933 alcohol-related arrests in 1999. Drug abuse increased 6 percent nationally.

The number of homicides dropped dramatically from 24 in 1998 to 11 in 1999, a 54 percent decrease. Hate crimes increased from 1,374 in 1998 to 2,287 in 1999. The report attributes this increase to the decrease of two-year for-profit institutions that “generally do not have police or security officers.”

“Important is to collect these data at an institutional level because violence with binge drinking—motivated by hate or bias seriously threatens the values of the school and the larger community,” the report said.

Despite increases in certain crimes, the report said students are safer on campus. Only 19 percent of the crimes reported occurred on campuses, while 72 percent occurred off or near institutional grounds.

The report is a result of two congressional acts requiring such data to be reported. The 1990 Student Right to Know and Campus Security Act is now known as the Clery Act in memory of Jeanne Clery, a student at Lehigh University, who was sexually assaulted and murdered by a classmate in 1986. The Higher Education Amendments of 1998 also required a collection of the data.

The idea of a monorail system is not a new concept, but in the United States, rail systems and public transportation in general are not a popular option," Chatriozou said. "It's looking better and better as the way to go, but there is some resistance. If this can happen in Fresno, it can probably happen anywhere.

While the concept of a monorail in Fresno is an interesting one, there is no guarantee that the concept will be possible. Quite a few factors must be weighed, including whether the citizens of Fresno like the idea of a monorail, and if so, for what reasons. The sheer magnitude of a project this size may not be able to work in a city like Fresno. "It may come out to be a negative study, saying that this may not work," Chatriozou said.

Fresno is on the border of being large enough in population and having the population density to have a need for a light-rail system, Chatriozou said.

The current concept of the monorail system for Fresno is to have a main line running north and south through the downtown area, with the main station built where the Amtrak station currently stands. From there, a series of shuttle buses will run on several streets east and west.

The proposed central station of the monorail system would be placed at the location of the current Amtrak station in Fresno. The Poly group is in the process of organizing the feasibility study at present. The group will look at the demographics of the city to see if there is a need for such an expensive and complex system. Several focus-group studies will be done to determine if the citizens of Fresno like the idea and if they think it is the best option for their town. The study will be conducted in the spring.

"This is an experiment in many ways, and if it works, a lot of other cities will see it as a good thing and try it on their own," Chatriozou said.

Mission Linen Supply, one of the largest privately owned companies in the textile rental industry, will be conducting on-campus interviews on February 6, 2001 to find bright, hard working graduates for our management training program. Positions offer excellent growth opportunity and are available at locations throughout CA, AZ, NM and TX. Take a look at our listing on Mustang Job Link and sign up today!

Duke may soon require laptops for undergrads

By Steven Wright

On a larger scale, many faculty members complained that UNC failed to provide the proper training on how to effectively use the laptops in their classes. Students complained they were not being taught how to use the laptops to their fullest abilities.

Lange said he hopes to use the next 18 months working to avoid such pitfalls and to create a way to train Duke's faculty on how to best use this new technology.

Administrators said they will also look at successful models such as the University of Michigan and Carnegie Mellon University. Those schools specifically required laptops as a means of curbing costs and advancing technological initiatives. Wireless connections are cheaper than other types of connections, which require more equipment and building renovations. By using beams and a local emitter, wireless technology eliminates the need for physical data ports. University administrators have already begun implementing the conversion to wireless transmitters currently exist in the Bryan Center and Perkins Library.

"What I'm seeing is we've got a strong infrastructure for the wireless support," said Mike Pickett, special assistant to the provost for academic technology. "It's in our current network, it shouldn't stretch us past what we already have. There will be marginal additional work that will have to be done."
More survivors found in Indian earthquake rubble

BHUJ, India (AP) — The discovery of a living 5-month-old baby — covered in her dead mother’s blood, but alive in her lap — on Monday capped the heartbreak and the singular miracles of India’s killer earthquake.

The rescue was rare cause for hope following the earthquake, which killed at least 6,200 people and as many as 20,000 — or more. Damage was estimated at up to $5.5 billion. Indian prime minister acknowledged Monday that his country was ill-prepared for disasters.

In the case of the miracle baby, doctors said the woman’s body helped keep her alive for three days in the ruins of a collapsed building in Bhuj’s Kanara Market.

"We saw the baby in the mother’s lap, we saw some movement from the baby," said R.K. Thakur, a Border Security Force assistant commandant. "I took the baby to my house and handed it to my wife."

Doctors said the baby was conscious and breathing, and that it was alive.

Survivors complained Monday that conditions to back up the country’s relief efforts were still lacking. Indian soldiers had trouble reaching survivors “in the mountainous region of the state,” Vajpayee said.

"They are not alone in this," Vajpayee said. "We saw them with our own eyes." Vajpayee said it was the job of the government to provide them with the necessary means to reach them.

Opinion

Virginy is all it's cracked up to be, isn't it?

V irgins have become somewhat of a myth, like unicorns or honest politicians. They do exist, but getting harder to make generalizations about them. The word itself calls to mind a young, blushing maiden, unfamiliar with the ways of love. The world is changing, and sex is becoming more and more natural. Society as a whole is obsessed with sex. I say, let's get it over with. It is never going to stop. I think that most people know that not giving it up winds men tighter than a nut at a prison rodeo.

"It's cracked up to be a sense of immorality," said my friend Zack about the virgin mystique. "They're going to remember me for the rest of their life, no matter how bad the sex was." We both laugh.

Reach for the stars. Zack. But his statement gets to the heart of the obsession; that you are guaranteed something that isn't real. For some, the true beauty of love, that it springs eternal! Man can't always vague their way into a woman's heart, so some set about weaving into her pants!

But let's not shame men for their craftsmanship and pride. Even we women must admit that being the one to defect a boy gives us a thrilling sense of role reversal. To claim something that has been 15 to 20 years in the making is fabulous. It is just as exciting to give it away. So when is that magical moment, when you are relieved of your virginity and say hello to womanhood? Is it merely technical intercourse? I don't think so. Friends never really believe that I've not done it, maybe because I've kissed over 30 guys.

But am I missing out? My sex life is fantastic without actual sex. I think that to lose one's virginity is more that just a physical act. It is giving your body your heart and your trust. My wanting has nothing to do with religion or my parents. I simply want it to be... special. Meaningful. Frequent!

I want to know that the boy I lay with, I will wake up to, both the next day and many days to come. But again, that's just me. There are a million other people with a million other reasons, all equally valid.

Shallon Lester is a speech communication sophomore. Earlier this month, the FBI reported that the number of cyber-crimes under investigation has tripled since 1998. Due to the increase, officials have launched a nationwide program to fight cyber-violations.

Do ing opposite is Argus, a company that wants to be attacked. The company is going to pay $50,000 to the first hacker to get through its software.

Argus and many other companies are smart for Computational sponsoring such contests and events. For companies, contests like these are a way of working with the problem instead of against it. Finding defects in other people's work is how the world works. It is the only way to get real progress. This way of getting improvement is used everywhere. Police use ex-thieves and robbers to learn how they circumvent car and home security systems.

That is why the new Club attaches to the gas-pedal instead of the steering wheel.

In science, this is how we get closer to the truth. A scientist publishes research results, and the rest of the scientists try to null it. Every aspect of the thesis is dissected and questioned. If scientists find any error or discrepancies in the manner in which the results were produced, they do their own research on the subject and the cycle continues.

There have always been individuals who question and want to make things better. Common hackers probably just think about the chaos they produce. They don't know about the bigger service they do to companies, they keep them on check and make them strive to make a more secure system. Hackers help the technological world become more secure for Web consumers and Web sattires.

Hackers shouldn't be discouraged. Collective talent and intelligence is lost when there are 14- and 15-year-old children punished for hacking into government computers. These children's intelligence should be honored and nurtured, not pulverized. Intelligent people like these shouldn't be expected to play by the same rules as everyone else. They should be given slack.

The first hackers in the '80s have become the CEOs of the larger computer and software companies. They are the ones that paved the way to better-quality products. That benefits all of us.

After the two weeks of this contest, Argus will have information on the effectiveness of their security software. They will be able to make changes and make an even better program.

In everyday life, we accept too many things on face value. The hackers force companies and ourselves not to accept "good enough."

Don't punish party hosts for wrongs of underage drinkers

Imagine being cited for hosting a party that included alcohol and random people, mostly underage drinkers, who showed up uninvited. Like most parties, it gets out of control and the cops showed up. Being the host for a party isn't always an easy task. Not only does the host have to be aware of who's doing what at the party, but there's always fear of the police showing up. It's not the host's job to check identification cards for every person that enters through their door. Not only is the host not well skilled in checking for fake identification, but it's not their job to be the law enforcement for underage drinking. Most people who have parties at their houses don't always have alcohol, but the people who crash those parties usually bring the alcohol without the host knowing about it. It shouldn't be the host's responsibility for the alcohol that was brought into the party and, therefore, the host shouldn't be cited for it.

The City of San Luis Obispo is proposing to cite homeowners who have anyone under the age of 21 drinking alcohol at their location. The Alcoholic Ordinance states that it is unlawful for any person to permit, or assist or consent to, a minor under the age of 21 to purchase or possess alcoholic beverages. The police need to take action against underage drinking. They may be doing their best to develop a solution to this problem, but citing homeowners is not the answer. The police have always been there to break up parties, but this time it will be different. The officers who were either called by neighbors or happen to be driving by the party, will check for underage drinking and cite the host $100 for the first offense, $300 for the second and $500 for the third.

This ordinance needs to address the real problem of underage drinking. Police shouldn't cite those homeowners who are over 21 and can drink. The police department needs to do something about those who just show up at the party with their own alcohol. The officers need to not only cite those who are under 21 and drinking but need to come to the realization that the homeowner is not a police officer and will not do their job for them.

If I host a party, I will not stand by the door and check every single person's ID card to make sure that they are over 21. I am not a bouncer at a bar and don't know for sure if an ID card is fake or not. It seems outrageous to let such an ordinance pass. If this goes through it will mean the end of parties. Who's going to host a party knowing that anyone can show up as well as the police and get cited for it.

I'm sure many students oppose this Alcoholic Ordinance, and do not want the host to be fined for underage drinking. There will be an ASI meeting tomorrow evening regarding this resolution in the University Union, room 220, at 5:10 p.m. Come to the meeting and state your opinions to the Board of Directors. You have a voice in this school and by coming it will be heard and taken into account.

Don't misunderstand evangelism Editor,

Evangelists. Not another one of those freakin’ evangelists. TESTIFY!

There are a lot of words that have bad connotations. See hem, hemorrhoid, root canal, midterm. The word evangelism has a bad connotation.

The word evangelism has a bad connotation. For about two weeks, my professor would begin class by saying, "Don't punish party hosts for wrongs of underage drinkers."

But for the love, folks. I would use the word "offering." Don't be "pushing." It's been said, "Sometimes people don't care what we know until they know that we care."

After studying in France for five months now, the one thing I've gotten used to - besides countless hours of charting over cafes - is to continually make a fool of myself. I suppose it's a given when learning a new language, but when conversations with aspiring French law students begin with "I am a U.S. student" and I swear I'm not making this up - "How do you believe the recent election of your president will affect the foreign relations with Europe?" it is almost impossible to struggle through the conversation without admitting, sadly, that I have no idea.

Even more than the mystery surrounding California's beaches and glamorous culture, the French - all Europeans, actually - love to discuss American politics.

I've been warned about this, of course, but never gave it a second thought until I decided to study in France during an election year and through the mess that followed the results (or lack of them). For about two weeks, my professors would begin class by sarcastically inquiring whether the Americans had chosen a leader yet. And when the "comédie's Florida" was finally finished, the same instructors made no secret of their disappointment in the outcome.

They are just waiting for Monsieur Bush to make a mistake, and I know he does not stand a chance against that ballsy Clinton, who say attached strong foreign relations with Europe, despite the bloodshed that closed the second half of his presidency.

Fortunately, the French differentiate between politicians' political views and their private lives -

Davis leaves Miami for Browns

By MAE A. Ohio (AP) - Bath Davis, who brought Miami football back to national title contention, resigned Monday to coach the Cleveland Browns, a university spokesman said.

Davis, who led the Hurricanes to a No. 2 ranking last season, will be hired as Chris Palmer's successor. Miami's athletic director, last weekend and said the sides only had to work out a few details on the contract.

Davis, who interviewed for the Houston Texans' head coaching job, had reportedly lost interest in pursuing a job with the Browns because he would not have full control of football operations in Cleveland.

Davis has coached the Hurricanes since 1995. He turned around Miami's troubled program after it was hit with numerous NCAA violations.

This season, he led the Hurricanes to an 11-1 record and 37-20 rout of Florida in the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 2.

what kind of offensive sets the team is seeing. She said that she tries to prepare the team for what they need to do to be successful.

"I always tell my players that preparation prevents panic," Mimnaugh said. Thus, during the game she tries to prepare the team for every possible situation so that they are not hit by surprise.

Mimnaugh does a variety of things during a game. Circumstances are constantly changing, such as fouls and mismatches.

"There are a million decisions to make in a course of a game," she said. One scenario that she gave was if the team goes into a game with an opposing team that hasn't won a game yet. As Mimnaugh said, the team has nothing to lose, so she doesn't want her players to be overconfident, but she wants them to have a certain level of confidence.

"In a situation like this, it is important how her demeanor is and what kind of confidence that I exude," she said.

Mimnaugh said that there are very few times that she has lost her cool, and that she doesn't even let it happen.

"She's an intense person as a coach," said Kate Valenine, a freshmen forward. "During the game, you can see it in her eyes that she is totally into it."

Another situation that Mimnaugh faces during a game is if a player has had too many fouls in the time limit. She must make the decision if she should substitute her, or has to take a chance and leave them in the game. At this point, she has the choice to either back off their defend-or keep fouling, and in that case, the player could foul out of the game.

After the game, Mimnaugh spends time talking with the players about whether they were successful on the court. She tries to highlight the areas of improvement or those that need work.

"You want to give them something to feel good about, but you also want to give them something to continue to work on to be a better basketball team," she said.

The program is still young, and Mimnaugh and she has seen great improvements over the course of the year and during games.

"When you get players that give their best effort every day, then it is fun to coach," she said. "We keep working toward the wins; the losses are always disappointing, but not as disappointing as when we lose the effort by the players."
Head coach Faith Mimnaugh has many preparations on game day

By April Pack
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Game day is a day that brings excitement, sweaty palms, victories and defeats.

It is a day that Faith Mimnaugh, head coach of Cal Poly women's basketball team, reflects on improvements made and challenges ahead.

“I get just as excited about the game as the players do,” Mimnaugh said. “I spend some time working on that excess energy, so I start out the day in the Rec Center,” she said.

Junior guard Odessa Jenkins said she believes Mimnaugh is the same kind of coach that she was a basketball player.

“She is very emotional and passionate about the game, even though she tries not to show it,” Jenkins said.

A typical game day for the women's basketball team begins with reviewing videotapes then devising the game plan. Mimnaugh said this is used to get some things into the players' heads about what is expected of their opponents and how they are going to handle situations. This is also a time that players get personal counsel, if needed, about what it is they need to work on.

Before the game, the team also reviews some of their opponents' plays. “This is a day where we are focusing mostly on what the opponent is going to do,” Mimnaugh said.

At 6 p.m., it's game time. Mimnaugh begins her game plan by jotting notes on a clipboard as refreshers about opponents' plays. “This is a day where we are focusing most of our time on our own,” Jenkins said.

Wrestling tops No. 12 Oregon

By Ryan Ballard
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Led by a comeback victory from David Schenk, the Mustang wrestling team knocked off No. 12 Oregon Sunday night by a score of 23-20.

In the first match of the evening at 197 pounds, sixth-ranked Chad Sonnen of Oregon was on his way to an easy victory, with an 11-0 lead, when David Schenk quickly scored an escape and took Sonnen down to his back, recording the pin at 2:31.

Eleventh-ranked Cedric Haymon recorded his team-leading 2nd win with an 8-0 major decision over Oregon's Tony Overstreet at 149 pounds. Freshman sensation Braddy Barnos continued to be impressive for the Mustangs at 165 pounds, winning 8-1 over Luke Larkin.

Steve Strange dominated Leif Williams from the start at 174 pounds, scoring a major decision, 11:2. Jaime Garza won by forfeit at 125 pounds.

Head coach Lennis Cowell was pleased with his team's performance.

“It was happy with the whole team effort, but obviously for anyone one there, David Schenk had the see WRESTLING, page 10
