Getting to know the war

10 need-to-know facts about the possible war with Iraq

Colin Powell, U.S. Secretary of State, spoke to the United Nations and the nations took sides with either war or more weapon inspections. Powell said that Saddam Hussein is engaging in an "active and systematic effort" to hide weapons of mass destruction from U.N. weapons inspectors.

The weapons Hussein allegedly harbors are: Chemical and biological weapons such as sarin, mustard gas, anthrax and botulinum toxin and Al Sadristan 2 missiles, which fly farther than the 93-mile limit established by the United Nations in 1991.

Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, Mohammed Alidouri, said Powell's allegations were "utterly unrelated to the facts."

Iraq is in material breach of U.N. Resolution 1441, which spells out serious consequences should it refuse to cooperate with U.N. inspectors and provide them with evidence of its nuclear, chemical, biological, and language missile programs.

Iraq at a Glance:

Country: Iraq
Population: 24,001,623
GDP per capita: $2,000

The CIA is working with Iraqis who oppose Saddam Hussein, developing potential targets for air attacks and setting up communication facilities.

By Saturday, Saddam Hussein must begin destroying all of his known biological, chemical and nuclear substances, or face military action.

Iraqi officials have launched a massive public relations campaign to try to convince the United Nations that Hussein is not trying to hide weapons of mass destruction.

Fellowship provides insight into Internet security

On a campus well known for its prominence in technical fields, students still struggle every day at Cal Poly to pass class, tests and get degree. The event, presented by the Channel Islands chapter of the National MS Society, will begin at 8 a.m. at Santa Rosa Park with a speaker and warm-up leading to the 10K run.

The Greek Parthalian Association and sororities Alpha Phi, Gamma Phi Beta, Alpha Chi Omega Alpha Omicron Pi, Kappa Alpha Theta and several departments seek outside approval

Two College of Liberal Arts departments, graphic communication and music, will seek accreditation this spring, while the journalism program, which was denied re-accreditation last year, is making changes in an effort to regain what was lost.

Cal Poly's Graphic Communication Department, which ranked second of the top two national programs of its kind, will be the country's third program to receive graphic arts accreditation, GRC department head Harvey Levenson said.

Accreditation gives Cal Poly graphic communication students an edge over competitors in the job market because it establishes credibility within the profession, Levenson said.

"We think that it's always good to have an outside body review what you see on a day-to-day basis," Levenson said. "I believe that when evaluators come here, they're going to see such a high standard ... that it's going to raise the bar for other schools."

The Council for Higher Education Accreditation, which oversees 60 high-education accrediting organizations, defined accreditation as "a collegiate process based on self and peer assessment for public accountability and improvement of academic quality."

For Cal Poly's Music Department, the steps toward accreditation are a laborious, three-year process, said music professor Alyson McLamore.

"Accreditation (creates pressure)," McLamore said. "We're going at it with our fingers crossed."

Despite the pressure, McLamore said accreditation is worthwhile because it examines the department and enables faculty to pinpoint strengths and weaknesses.

However, accreditation can be confusing and it has the potential to water-down a program, McLamore said. Not all music departments choose to be accredited. The program at University of California, Los Angeles is one program that has chosen not to.

NAM (National Association of Schools of Music) might require the music department to more how much money, which would tighten the budget for other programs the department wants to offer. NAM could also insist the department offers a certain class more often, causing it to forgo others, McLamore said.

"We'll have to make hard choices in order to comply," McLamore said. With all the tough decisions, why is the music department going about with accreditation?

"The current administration wants any program that has accreditation to be accredited ... it's sort of a political thing," McLamore said. "$12 million in grants, $20 million in guarantees and a better base for refugees and Kurdish guerrillas.

Running and walking for a good cause

By Courtney Witt

Old and young alike will lace up their running shoes for the 14th annual multiple sclerosis walk and run April 5 in San Luis Obispo. Early sign-ups begin Thursday from 11 a.m. to 12 p.m. in the University Recreational administration senior Danny Murray, a National MS Society intern helping put on the event.

Meghan Harrington is a National MS Society intern, will begin at 8 a.m. at Santa Rosa Park with a speaker and sororities Alpha Phi, Gamma Phi Beta, Alpha Chi Omega Alpha Omicron Pi, Kappa Alpha Theta and other classes, McLamore said. "It is also going to be a lot of fun."...

North Korea accuses the United States of aerial intrusion

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea said Tuesday that an American reconnaissance plane intruded into its airspace on a spring mission.

"This is a premeditated move to find an opportunity to mount a pre-emptive attack on the DPRK," said the North's official Korean Central News Agency.

"This move is a serious provocation," the agency said. "The United States is deliberately provoking a confrontation with the DPRK.

"The United States is thinking that North Korea is a weak nation and a poor country and therefore it is trying to deceive the world public.

"This move is a reflection of America's aggressive policy of violence."

Bush heads drive for U.N.

backing on using force

WASHINGTON — Iraq must fully disarm to avoid war, President Bush said Tuesday, as he urged the United Nations to "honor its word" and back U.S. action against Saddam Hussein.

"We are asking nations to come together in a strong and united voice to tell Iraq to disarm," Bush said. "The text of the resolution is not on issue there are no reasons to delay it.

"If they don't disarm, there will be a new chapter in the history of this world, a chapter that will be marked by the decisive end to the evil of Saddam Hussein."

The developments came one day after thousands turned out to honor the dead at three separate memorial services.

Investigators have been trying to determine who is to blame for Thursday's inferno, which was apparently sparked by the band's pyrotechnics and swept through the one-story, wooden building in just three minutes. The band has had made similar inclusions in recent days.

Explosions outside Spanish embassy and Colombian consulate in Caracas injure four

CARACAS, Venezuela — Powerful explosions damaged the Spanish embassy and the Colombian consulate minutes apart in the Venezuelan capital early Tuesday, injuring four people and raising suspicions in a city still recovering from an anti-government strike.

The blasts shook the steel gates of the buildings and blew out windows in residences almost a block away. Leaflets supporting President Hugo Chavez were found outside the Spanish Embassy.

"We believe these were very potent bombs judging by the damage done," said Leopoldo Lopez, the mayor of Caracas Chacao district.

The first blast was outside the Spanish embassy in eastern Caracas at about 2 a.m. The second explosion, 15 minutes later, rocked the Colombian consulate.

The blasts slightly injured four people, including a night watch man, Lopez said.

China searches for survivors of western quake

URUMQI, China — Hundreds of aftershocks rattled western China on Tuesday following a major earthquake that killed at least 265 people and flattened thousands of homes.

An aftershock of magnitude 5 was recorded before dawn, but no additional injuries or damage were reported, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

Chinese officials put the magnitudes of Monday's deadly quake at 6.8, while the U.S. Geological Survey measured it at 6.3.

Rescuers were digging through rubble for survivors in the disaster zone, an isolated area of the Xinjiang region near the mountainous border with Kyrgyzstan, Xinhua said. Houses and hundreds of other buildings were destroyed.

Local band works food service, local clubs and interstate highway system to make future

By Sean Martin

People stand bands for many reasons; it could be a love of music, riches, sexual escapades or loud noise.

Whatever the reason, artists all have the same goal: For people to hear their music.

Such is the case for San Luis Obispo-based band Treluna. The quartet, whom I met at the Madonna Obispo-based band Treluna. The members use adjectives like "busy," "melodic" and "spacy" to describe the fruits of their labor.

They are also reluctant to compare their sound. "The band has heart, drive and big organ sound," according to Rory, the band's vocalist/keyboardist. "But we are all absolutely different, but because they can work together, we think of it as a democracy," singer and keyboardist Allison Milham said. "We are all obsessed with music."

Nick Dayka, drummer, said the tour was good for the dynamic of the band because it tested the band and allowed them all to understand each other much better.

"If we all had to do was the band, that would be ideal. We are all obsessed with music."

Treluna has heart, drive and big organ sound

Treluna has heart, drive and big organ sound and has helped the band become a lot more "rocking" ever since, McElver said.

The quartet plays a lot of their gigs at Z-Pac in San Luis Obispo, a place where Rory actually got a job right before the group was scheduled to go on stage.

Having to work other jobs is a reality for members of a band of Treluna's stature. Dayka holds a job at Uptown Espresso and plays in bands there. Milham, who is also a photographer, and McElver are both Cuesta College students.

"If all we had to do was the band, that would be ideal," Dayka said. "We are all obsessed with music."

The band did get to experience their ups and downs for two weeks earlier this year when they loaded up Milham's boyfriend's minivan and a trailer and, with Devo playing on the stereo, went on a tour of the Pacific Northwest.

The best part of touring was, "playing to different kinds of people and seeing them dance to something you created," Dayka said.

Rory said he "felt so alive from everyone feeding off (the band's) music."

Milham also said the tour was good for the members of the dynamic of the band because it tested the band and allowed them all to understand each other much better.

"The tour was not all fun and games, though. The band had to deal with the problems of not being of age."

In Portland, Ore., the band was going to play in the Blackbird, which they called "the club you have to play in that town. Unfortunately, Milham and Rory were not 21 years old and a new Oregon law forbade them from entering the club.

Another downside to the tour was the band's lack of merchandise sales, which are usually a profitable venture for a group. They had approximately 50 Treluna T-shirts made for the excursion but only sold one.

After one tour, the band is considering a miniature tour in the spring to go along with their dossier of local shows.

For those not able to attend a show, Treluna has an EP, "Dine Alone," available at Bao-Bao's Records and mp3s on their Web site, Treluna.com.

No matter how listeners find their music, the band members think people will be pleased with what they hear.

"Our music is very accessible," Dayka said. "It is something your parents could listen to, too."

McElver explained Dayka's comments further.

"If people are looking for something different, they will find our music interesting," McElver said. "The music is layered, textured, a little softer, quieter, more melodic."

Dayka gave people not interested in music a reason to attend. "People will want to come because Zane is really hot and wearing the latest styles," he said.

Never enough duct tape in the world to fix peace of mind

I guess the Bush administration must think the adage is true — "God made the world, but duct tape holds it together." Now the Bush administration can say they did something about the ongoing war. But "through a "compensatory" conservative" can say they really just stressed to protect the American people. When ter­ rors pump anthrax into the air, Bush is off the hook. You should have seen the rest of us.

The Department of Homeland Security arbitrarily raises the com­ med risk level with little or no public explanation. People are cov­ ring with their canned goods and without even knowing exactly who or what is to be feared. Despite this innovative approach to peace, the gov­ ernment can actually predict when or how a terrorist may strike. Although the U.S. public should stay alert and aware of possi­ ble threats, there is really no use for us to prepare for such an emer­ gency. Certainly not with duct tape. America is better off using the tape to craft Has-mat suits than to make Burlington coats. In fact, the Web is selling duct tape in designer colors (pink and blue) and patterns (camouflage). You could have the most stunning suit on your back.

"God made the world, but duct tape holds it together."

The editorial section of the Daily has always been a battleground where the liberals, conservatives, religious and political eccentric all meet up for a Battle Royale on life, liberty and the pursuit of being right.

Why doesn't Associated Students Inc. fund a actual fighting ground where the brightest of the brightest beat the living daylight out of each other to determine who is supreme and utterly correct? Picture it. We would all gather in the Union Union around a barb wire, battle the combats between the combatants rage. First up, the First Fight of Impeding Moral Death. The participants beat the religious conservative Jonathan Dow versus morally ambiguous Justin Fraga. Frankly, I'd put money on Dow because I bet he'd beat Fraga over the head with the Bible.

A major issue in between fights where President Baker makes the decision from our multiple fee increases disappear. Granted, we've all seen that show but hey, it's another laugh.

And finally, the Battle Royale of Equality, settled between the spiritual man­ifestation of faith from the Col Poly Poly Col Republicans and anyone with common decency.

I urge ASI to let the window become might­ er than the pen and let these editors become col pol students. At least then, we'll get some stimulation other than the main-feel­ ing in the pit of our stomachs when reading the physical written proof that most people at Cal Poly are idiots.

Conservatives need to look at whole picture

Editor,

In Justin Kaechele's letter on Feb. 24 ("Liberals wrong about foreign policy"), his claims that liberals are wrong about foreign policy is way off base. Indeed a large number of liberals in the past have done good things but the peace promoters of today are not looking at Saddam's mismanagement of Iraq. Of course, conservatives for the war are not stepping back and look at the matter of the war. At this moment, the full force of America's navy is poised in the Persian Gulf and ready for a planned five-day battle (more like massacre) in which 800 or so cruise mis­ siles will be launched into the heart of Baghdad. The missiles will be targeted at tactical military facilities dotted around the city of 4.8 million people. And he is trying to say that liberals should have compassion for the Iraqi people and stop protesting. The U.S. military cares nothing for the country's pop­ ulation and Bush is just hell bent on killing the man who "Tried to kill his dad." Kaechele has a valid point and I also agree as a liberal that Saddam should be taken out of power, but there is another way than war.

Flag mistreated at peace rally

Editor,

I was writing this letter in response to the peace rally that took place last Thursday. While I disagree with the stance that was taken at the rally, I am not writing to start a peace/crêpe debate. There was one thing that bothered me more than anything else did. That was the simpli­ fication of the flag of the United States of America. Taking the stars off the flag and replacing it with a peace sign showed very poor taste, no respect and no ethics on the part of the organizers.

I suggest that instead of replacing the stars with a peace sign, the flag was repeatedly being defaced in the ground. The United States flag stands for freedom and so the flags for and showing the flag that type of disrespect is uncalled for. Even if you don't agree politically with this great nation, there is no reason or excuse for treating the flag in such a manner as was displayed at the rally. Beyond the politics of this country the flag stands for the hundreds of thousands who left their lives so people like you could have all the freedoms you possess today and have the right to stage your peace rally. If you want a peace flag buy a peace flag. Don't disrespect America and hundreds of thousands of people who died for your free­ doms and rights. Keep the Colors intact and off the ground.

Plagiarism an embarrassment to U.S., England

Editor,

A story is sweeping the world, and it says a great deal about those who are forcing the world into a war it does not want. The faked report presented by British Prime Minister Tony Blair to his Parliament was plagiarized from two articles and a September 2002 memo from a graduate student. So glaring was the theft of intellectual property that the official British documents were altered by Blair to make them more inflammatory.

In a world that is slowly beginning to feel the pressure of and admit the reality of dwindling global oil supplies, the fallout from the story may actually accelerate hostilities. Blair is facing monumental challenges in his Parliament and from a British public that may actually accelerate hostilities. Blair is facing monumental challenges in his Parliament and from a British public that is merely the first stop on a sequential plan for control of the last remaining oil reserves on the planet.

The northern half of Belgium speaks Flemish, while the southern half speaks French. Flemish is like Dutch, but a bit different. An analogy would be: Flemish is to Dutch as American English is to English.

Marijuana ads miss the real issue

Editor,

This letter is in response to Erik Miller's letter "Anti-drug ads talk to vulnerable, younger generation," Feb. 19. The issue surrounding marijuana is whether the campaign or influence of marijuana's language, symbols and culture is subjected to the marijuana culture, and they will be at some point, they will be exposed to the inadequacies of the governments campaign. Thus, rendering the campaign, as well as future campaigns, worthless.

In fact, there are enough problems that accompany marijuana abuse that the campaign would be far more effective by focusing on the real issue rather than presenting a false perception of what truly happens. Chris Carlson is a mechanical engineering senior.

Pol Christian Fellowship prays for justice in eging

Editor,

On behalf of the leadership team of Pol Christian Fellowship, I would like to say that the oomber of the GLBU was appealing. It's hard to believe that students on this campus would have the audacity to actually throw eggs at fellow students. It would be great to be able to believe that the campus of a major university is the kind of place where any student group could assemble a booth in a free speech area and not have to worry about being subjected to an act of hate and violence.

As a student leader in a Christian group on campus, I believe that all students must be protected of the inherent dignity with which they have been created.

Hate crimes, such as egging, are an obvious attempt to devalue that dignity. I am sorry to say that the students of the GLBU were subjected to this kind of behavior.

We are praying for justice in this situation, and are hopeful that this event will help Cal Poly students begin to address the magnitude of hate and injustice that exists on our campus.

Parking lot lurks the problem

Editor,

Every person that drives on campus agrees that parking is an issue that needs to be improved. There are likely several options that could be discussed. We believe that Cal Poly is analying to remedy the parking problems. However, the fact is that cars waiting for spots is not the great problem described in Laura Newman's article "Parking lot lurks boredom" (Feb. 19). One of my problems with her article was the one-sided portrayal of students simply trying to get to class or evil stalkers. Sometimes, all of the lots in the library/Campus Market area are completely full. This problem makes waiting for someone to leave as the only option. So Mr. Burdon's suggestion of going "up the hill" is not reasonable, and it is people like him that make us wary of the police department ticketing students who are simply trying to get to class. Cal Poly and their Fuzz should look to maximize existing lots and develop new ones — profit from overcrowding. Are the waiting cars really a hassle to pedestrians and other cars? If it is, cut those trees down and make a waiting list. To limit the number of cars on campus, Cal Poly should remove parking restrictions from areas serving permits. Parking on campus must be improved, but a money-making effort will not be the solution.

Left-hander says fellow lefties should suck it up

Editor,

I'm left-handed, and I still get over here. Put your notebook on your knee and suck it up. The strongest blow we can strike against the dearest masses is stumped by grinning and bearing it. Count every time somebody says in surprise, "You're left-handed?" as a victory. We don't need special treatment, and we don't need unification. We're smarter than they are anyway.

By the way, it's "throne," not "thrown." "Must've been a right-handed copy editor."

Acceptance by others is overrated

Editor,

I was saddened by the protests camped out in front of the administration building. I thought that the messages being sent were comforting with the way they chose to live their lives, why do they care if other people accept them or not? They don't care what other people think about me, as long as I am at peace within myself. Throughout life we will always encounter people who have different views or don't like us for one reason or another. But I've learned to turn the other cheek. If someone is talking to me, at least they are leaving someone else alone.

I've learned not to take things so personal. It's an important lesson and the younger we learn these things, the more wisdom we will gain and the less stress we will feel in life.

So, to the GLBU club members and every other student and faculty member on campus, be comfortable for yourself and the fact that you're left-handed will make you a better person. When you feel when judged by someone, then maybe you should reevaluate your life, ask yourself why that person's opinion bothers you. The chances are that true reaction isn't even really about them, it's something you are already battling within.

The only opinions that really matter are yours and God's. And he accepts you no matter what.

Truby Barton is an agriculture communications senior.

Camp-in was ineffective, kept students awake all night

Editor,

I, a minority, am far from diversity, equality and desegregation of the bunch system. I thought that the oomber of the GLBU booth was reprehensible. But the camp-in for "social change" put by the GLBU and other clubs, was probably one of the most ineffective protests I've ever seen, and I kept me up into the late hours of the night.

The "message" was so ambitious as to be meaningless. The biggest signs, the one that was legible to motorists, read "book 4 social change." But what does that mean? Social change? What I could have done was the NAACP; the Black Panthers or the Ku Klux Klan. Anybody could have honked at that sign, even people who egged the GLBU booth.

Hearing a song in a room where a baseball game does not affect social change. It does not increase awareness about diversity or militate against the unequal treatment of women. I was completely without action the demonstration, and I had to read the Mustang Daily to find out what the message of the camp-in actually was. And about living across from the protest - I have an 8 a.m. class, and I was kept awake by the constant honking of horns and yelling. After that was over, I heard what sounded suspiciously like music coming from the tent. I thought I was hallucinating in my fatigue, until I confirmed it the campus. This demonstration could have been better organized and executed.

Fred Ghanash is a business freshman who is for "social change."

War is better than an unjust peace

Editor,

So there was a walkthrough last Thursday. "Concerned students will walk out of class in protest to an invasion of Iraq," declared PSA's Web site. I myself am a concerned student, but I did not walk out of any classes.

Are these concerned students aware that there is a growing movement of Iraqi people, wanting to be free from the clutches of dictatorship? That they wait only for someone with the will and courage to be their leader and their hero? Are these concerned students aware that sometimes force is a legitimate and definable action? Or ask the fact that Afghan women can walk freely in the streets of Kabul, without fear of being hung or shot for wearing makeup? Will they ignore the fact that force helped to save the lives of Muslims in Kosovo? Will they ignore the fact that force saved European Jews from complete genocide? Yes, war is a horrible thing. But it is better than an unjust peace.

The event is open to the public. The registration fee is $10 per person until March 21, when it will be raised to $15. All proceeds go to multiple sclerosis research and local programs in Ventura, Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo counties. "The funds raised will benefit more than 2,500 people living with MS in the tri-county area," Harrington said.

Volunteer coordinator Christina Foulk said she is looking forward to the race.

"It is a great event that raises funds and awareness for multiple sclerosis," Foulk said. "It could be good for team building, and even just for fun." Foulk suggested that it would be a good experience for groups desiring to grow as a team while participating in a community service event.

Groups of five can get together and register for $40. From there, they are challenged to raise money for the National MS Society on their own. Whoever earns the most money will win live five tickets to Hearst Castle, Harrington said.

After sweep, rally with UCLA awaits

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF REPORT

The Cal Poly women's lacrosse team swept through the state of Arizona last weekend. The Mustangs went 4-0 on the trip, posting a pair of wins against both Arizona and Arizona State. The Mustangs' B team dismantled USD 11-8 Saturday.

The Mustangs host two opponents this weekend at the Sports Complex. Cal Poly faces Rhode Island on Friday and UCLA Saturday at 11:30 a.m.

The Bruins are the Mustangs' greatest rival, and figure to provide Cal Poly's best West Coast competition this season.

Berti, Dexheimer sweep Invitational

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF REPORT

BAKERSFIELD — The Cal Poly men's team finished in second place overall at the Family Motors Invitational hosted by Cal State Bakersfield at the Seven Oaks Country Club on Tuesday in Bakersfield.

The team scored totals of 275, 288 and 283 for a combined score of 846, 18 under par. Cal State Bakersfield finished first overall, shooting 23-under par and a combined score of 841.

Cal Poly broke their own low round records by shooting 275, 288 and 283.

They broke the low-18 by 7 strokes, low-56 by 9 and low-94 by 30.

Travis Berti was the top finisher in the tournament and broke the 54-hole tournament record with an 11-under 205. Berti shot the low round Tuesday with a 68 to share the lead.

Chris White, DE, 6-3, 245

Berti also credited his teammates who broke a single-season record with 1038 rounds under par.

Berti, a senior at Arroyo Grande High School, shot his final round of 69, and was 10-under par overall.

The Mustangs return to action when they travel to UC Riverside on March 3.

Cal Poly Rugby

The undefeated Mustangs are one win away from a guaranteed berth in the Sweet Sixteen Tournament. The team faces rival UCLA Saturday and UC Santa Barbara March 7.

Sweetness awaits

By Meghan Nowakowski

Cal Poly Sports Information Report

The Cal Poly rugby team is one step closer to the playoffs after stunning UC San Diego 60-3 in its last home game of the season Saturday at the sports complex.

The Mustangs remain undefeated, and one win away from a guaranteed spot in the Sweet Sixteen Tournament.

Team captain Nick Giacalone credited his teammates for their aggressive first half.

"I think we got a quicker start than we had in the last couple of games, which helped us get the early lead," Giacalone said.

Center Matt Gallagher agreed.

"The first half went well because one of the problems we have been having is we try to do too much stuff early and we don't score right away, and the other times that we do score right away we don't keep the intensity up, but that definitely didn't happen this time," Gallagher said.

Gallagher credited Matt Westmore and Rod Stinson for their hard work.

"They were two of the big factors for us pushing their forwards around," Gallagher said.

Scrumhalf Jimmy Hamlin, flanker Jeff Dunlap and fly-half John Ferrar also played key roles in the Mustangs victory.

"Hamlin plays scrumhalf, which is like the focal point of our offense," Gallagher said. "He is kind of like the quarterback of the team. He was really distributing the ball well, he was making great decisions on when to kick. He just played an all-around great game. Jeff Dunlap is one of our energy guys; he rallies the troops when we start to not play well."

Gallagher said that Kemnath was another player who teams up with Hamlin and works as the other quarterm back on the team. Kemnath calls the plays for the backs, and usually makes the decisions on their behalf.

"He did an excellent job Saturday," Gallagher said.

Giacalone also credited fullback Ed Frantz.

"Ed hit some holes really well with the ball, and had some good counter-attacks from the kicks," Giacalone said.

Both Gallagher and Giacalone were happy to see so many fans show up to the game.

"It was really a win-win situation," Giacalone said. "We loved seeing all of the fans out there supporting us, and we played a great, high-scoring game for them."

Cal Poly will face UCLA Saturday, and UC Santa Barbara March 7.

"We have heard that both teams are better than they were in the past, but we hope to win both and go unbeat en in league," Giacalone said.

Though it seems both teams have improved, Giacalone is not too worried.

"We have done extremely well so far, and I don't expect our momentum to stop now," Giacalone said.

Five more players sign letters of intent

By Nick Neumann

Cal Poly Sports Information Report

Five more football players, including four linemen, have signed national letters of intent to play at Cal Poly.

The latest list of signees brings the total for the current signing period to 17. Cal Poly also signed Monterey Peninsula College quarterback Anthony Gannett during the midwest community college transfer period.

The regular period for football signees runs through April 1.

The five new recruits are:

Daniel Bradley, OL, 6-5, 285

Chino Hills (Ayala HS)

Bradley was an honorable mention All-Olympic League offensive lineman. He also participated in track and field, competing in the shot put and discus.

Dylan Rodrick, OT, 6-5, 290

Carmel, CA (Carmel HS)

Rodrick twiced earned Mission Triath League Academic All-Star honors and earned all league honors as both an offensive and defensive tackle.

Billy Vinneedge, P/K, 6-1, 170

Arroyo Grande (AGHS HS)

An all-state, All-Northern League and All-San Luis Obispo County first-team kicker, Vinneedge was 10-for-12 on field goals with a long of 54 yards last season. He also averaged 48 yards on his 42 punts and 20 of his kickoffs reached the end zone. He was named state Kicker of the Year.

Chris White, DE, 6-3, 245

Bakersfield (Garees Memorial HS)

White earned all-league, all-area and all-state honors as a senior. He led the team in tackles, tackles for loss and sacks while also recovering three fumbles.

John Zillius, OL/DL, 6-3, 275

Daville, CA (Monte Vista HS)

Zillius, a team captain, was named defensive MVP of his team and twice earned all-league honors as a defensive tackle.
