ASI drops insurance for club events

Esmeralda Cisneros

Associated Students Inc. dropped its liability insurance for club events on campus, and Cal Poly clubs are taking it hard.

The only way ASI would provide limited coverage for a club is if the club is participating in an activity where an ASI agent is supervising. Other activities that clubs do on their own are not covered by ASI, director of business services for ASI Dwayne Brummett said.

This came as a surprise to the Polycon club, which was denied an insurance certificate for its yearly video game convention in July. The event takes place on campus in one of the resident halls.

Club adviser Troy Wepert, a technology support specialist, went to ASI at the beginning of June to file for insurance.

After a couple of weeks without a response, he contacted Brummett. Wepert said Brummett called him back and told him he would take care of it. Nine days prior to the event Brummett contacted him saying that he was not going to be able to get him insurance. Brummett told Wepert that the insurance they had only covered ASI and not other groups.

Weipert said, when he was looking for insurance, he went to risk management and they told him that he could get it through ASI.

The insurance coverage Polycon got from ASI in the past was a certificate that covered everyone who attended the convention, Wepert said. Brummett denies that ASI gave Polycon that type of coverage.

"ASI did not provide that kind of liability insurance for Polycon," Brummett said.

Weipert said Polycon needed special event insurance, which ASI does not provide.

The Cal Poly Sailing Club was also notified by ASI that their boats would no longer be insured. If the club cannot find insurance, by the end of November, they will not be able to sail.

"ASI used to pay for (the boats') insurance," said Beth Kenworthy, sailing club commodore and architecture engineering junior.

ASI owned the boats, which made them liable for those operating them, Brummett said. Maintaining ownership was a significant risk for ASI since they had no knowledge of how the boats were maintained.

One option was to have the club see insurance, page 2

Lonely days ahead for the Poly 'P'

The recent theft of 300 feet of light rope has led to the decision to close the Poly 'P' till June 2005.

The Poly 'P' is now off limits to Cal Poly clubs, fraternities and sororities that want to decorate it.

"We got a call on Wednesday regarding the petty theft of 300 feet of continuous rope light," said University Police Department Commander Bill Barton.

The light rope is used around the 'P' by the members of Mustang Maniacs, formerly known as Running Thunder, as a tradition. Homecoming on Friday said. The tradition of lighting the 'P' has been ongoing since 1994. In 1999, Mustang Maniacs took over the decoration of the 'P' and became keepers of the 'P'.

The plan is to keep the Poly 'P' lit until June 2005, unless the person or group of people who stole the lights decides to return them without damage. The rope lights were funded by the Mustang Maniacs.

The Maniacs are an on-campus club in charge of school spirit at a variety of sporting events. They work with the Cal Poly Pep Band and the cheer squad to create hype throughout the crowds. They are also in charge of the maintaining the Poly 'P'.

In the past, the 'P' has been painted to convey different messages. Forty year during Gay Pride Week when the Gay, Lesbians, Bisexuals United paint the 'P' into a rainbow.

This last summer, the Central Pacific Ski Club made a video of the members sliding down the 'P' with their skin on, and recently an unknown group of people painted the 'P' with grenades and hearts," said Scott Barton, 'P' keeper and industrial technology junior. "We are tired of cleaning up after students vandalizing the 'P' so the club has decided to shut it down."

"I really think we are doing so well because all of us are very consistent, and we spend a lot of time together," Dibble said. "We see cows a lot alike."

The team members include dairy science senior Jenna Dibble, dairy science senior Matthew Evangelio, dairy science junior Rebekah Matt and dairy science and agricultural business senior Michelle Nelson.

The contest began around 8 a.m. and lasted until 5 p.m. The team members began their morning by judging see Dairy, page 2 12 classes of cows. A class is a group of four cows or heifers, which are young cows who have not had calves.

In addition to placing the four cows, the team members must each come up with reasons as to why they placed the cows in a specific order.

"It's really boring to watch it all," Dibble said. "It is 200 kids staring at cows, but it is extremely intense. I take it really seriously.

After the cows are judged, all the teams eat lunch together in silence.

"It's a very long day," Dibble said. "Being in a room eating lunch with 200 silent students can be funny.

"We're the only school out West that's really competitive," Henderson said.

From 1996 to 2003, Cal Poly ranked fourth overall out of 63 schools.

This undefeated group cannot compete again in any of the competitions they won.

"We're all so close in points that the low score could be two points lower than the other kids' on the team," Dibble said.

This undefeated group cannot compete again in any of the competitions they won. The new season starts in November, and the junior team will take over to become this season's senior team.

Henderson, who has coached the team for about seven years, was on a team in college. He keeps the team practicing at least twice a week with C'al Poly's cows. He said it is hard to get a team together in California because dairy cattle judging is neither big nor commercialized in the state.

"This was a really big win for us," Henderson said.

"This was a really big win for us," Henderson said. "This is one of the biggest national competitions."

SAN DIEGO — An air ambulance crashed in the mountains near the Mexican border early Sunday, shortly after taking off from a small air field in San Diego. Two pilots, two paramedics and a nurse aboard the Lear jet bound for Albuquerque, N.M., were killed in the crash, said Larry Levy, CEO and medical director of Albuquerque-based Med Flight Air Ambulance, which owned the jet.

Authorities located three of the bodies and were continuing their search for the other two, said Capt. Glenn Revel of the San Diego Sheriff's Department.

STANFORD — U.S. Supreme Court Justice Stephen Breyer said Saturday that he wasn't sure he was being truly impartial when the CIA, at least some of that individual's reporting no longer is seen as credible, said an unnamed U.S. intelligence official.

DETROIT — A judge's order requiring some provisional ballots in Michigan to be counted even if they are cast in the wrong precinct was put on hold Sunday, the second time in as many days that a federal appeals court dealt a setback to Democrats who wanted to ease voting restrictions. A 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel in Cincinnati issued a stay of a lower court ruling that had reversed Michigan's policy for counting provisional ballots, saying it will hear an appeal of the issue quickly. On Saturday, the same three-judge panel had rejected a similar ruling out of Ohio.

WASHINGTON — FBI investigators have made new arrests and developed leads that reinforce concerns that terrorists plan to strike around the presidential election, officials said Saturday, even though the CIA has dismissed a report of an imminent attack with the goal of affecting the election.

CIA officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said leads were culled from interviews with thousands of individuals in the Muslim community. The official would not be more specific, but said the FBI continues to have misgivings about possible al-Qaeda intentions to launch an attack with the goal of affecting the elections. Where have all the women gone?

There is no shortage of women musicians on MTV or on the radio. A few of them play acoustic guitar or piano, but a majority of them are solely singers or rappers. I have a great respect for all of these musicians, but lately I've been yearning for a good, hard female rock band. The 1990s were a great time for women rock bands. Some played harder music than others, but bands like Hole, Veruca Salt and the Breeders dominated the music scene and didn't care about looking pretty or being thin (Hole being the exception later on). Now, Courtney Love is still around — in the news for less than flattering reasons and Melissa Auf der Maur (bassist for Hole) recently released a solo album.

A few of the women bands satisfied 5 percent of my hunger for good, thick rock. Many of her songs were rough and raw. However, her vocal ability dragged far behind the energy of the music. Her songs would build energy until the end, where I expected a scream or even a tirade of Robert Plant scenery, and I was just disappointed.

Thinking back to the 1990s again, two bands stick in my mind as having a don't-care-with-one-attitude while maintaining the pleasure of being female. Those bands are the Cranberries and Garbage. Of course, these are female-fronted bands, but I'm taking great caution in saying this (those girls WCRIE the band). The first time I saw The Cranberries live, Dolores O'Riordan came out and I realized how short she really is. But once she started singing, the energy and pure talent that she exuded was unparalleled.

Shirley Manson of Garbage has always stood out in my mind as being an ideal woman. I know, I know — wouldn't trust my judgment either, but I have enormous respect for her. Not only is she a great singer, but she has been strong, forward and yet graceful in every interview I've ever seen her give.

Times have definitely changed. I may be just having a mind blind, but I can't think of one hard rock group that is popular today that is fronted or composed completely of women. One that (unfortunately) does creep into my mind is The Distillers. I don't pretend to know much about them, but I know that the lead singer doesn't quite fit into my standard of a woman — it's harsh, but true.

The only way I'm going to find a good, solid hard rock band is to look at the longwave radio. That's how I knew Boyz to Men and I plan to search.

I've just recently been introduced to a fabulous singer/songwriter named Carina Round. Although she had a special on MTV and is now getting quite a bit of airplay, she is not what I would consider mainstream. Her album "The Disconnection" is a smorgasbord of funky rhythms, amazingly raw vocals and innovative songwriting. From the footage I've seen, Round is tough and dominant on stage. Enough!

But the trend hasn't even really started. With few exceptions, female artists are following in the footsteps of those who came before them, so what we need is an injection of diversity and a change in the curriculum and in the student body. We are following in the footsteps of those who came before us, so what we need is a women's rock revolution.

Student documentary highlights lack of campus diversity at Poly

Kimberly Masculine

Michael Hamilton wanted his senior project to mean more than just the course units that it counted for. But the social science senior didn't anticipate the importance of the completed project to the community.

"I always wanted to make a change," Hamilton said. "(My project) has gotten bigger than I ever could imagine."

"What Are You Gonna Do Today?" Hamilton's project is a documentary film about diversity and multicultural education on the Cal Poly campus. After sorting through over 3 hours of video footage, Hamilton put together a documentary that represents what students, faculty and staff think about the existence of diversity on campus, in the curriculum and in the student body.

"I think it's really admirable, especially given that he had to go to every big administrator on campus," history senior Karina dela Cruz said.

The video begins with a look through Hamilton's T-shirt collection, to show his colors and how he is involved on campus. Hamilton also wanted to show that getting involved on campus will help answer the film's title. The rest of the documentary is a compilation of interviewees answering Hamilton's question.

"There was a whole slew of questions I asked and they were catered to who spoke to," he said.

Hamilton walked around campus with his video camera and talked to students. He also sat down with staff and faculty members such as Vice President of Student Affairs Cornell Morton, ethnic studies professor Zhulic and Multicultural Center coordinator Mark Baker.

Hamilton was unable to get Cal Poly President Warren Baker to speak to him during the filming of the documentary. After several attempts to reach Baker, Hamilton spoke with his Executive Assistant Dan Howard Greene. At the end of the interview with Greene, Hamilton was told his project lacked academic merit. Hamilton again informed Baker of his project and what was said during his interview with Greene.

Hamilton got no response and decided it was important to let students know about the situation. Though he avoided making it the center issue, once the film was finished, Hamilton gave a copy to Baker, who has since watched it and spoke to Hamilton.

"I took a shot at Baker and he has every right to defend himself," Hamilton said. "There is stuff that he is doing at the school that is good. I think he is a little out of touch about students' needs. I think he knows that to a certain extent."

The message of the Cal Poly's Statement on Diversity is that diversity in the curriculum is needed to create a well-rounded education. Hamilton said the statement says all the right stuff, but many students, as emphasized in the video, do not feel the university is making an effort to make it a reality.

"On the one hand, diversity is being addressed but on the other hand, some students and faculty don't care enough about it," dela Cruz said.

Hamilton hopes the video will be used in all classrooms on campus to create discussion and make people think.

"This video is just as important as a chalk and a classroom," he said. "It's a learning tool."

The video is available at Immaculate U in the University Union and Immaculate Video on Broad Street, and it is being implemented in some student and staff meetings on campus.

Although Hamilton's senior project is completed, he is not finished. The video is being shown in Chumash Auditorium today at 7pm.

There will be a panel discussion and a question and answer period to follow. Panelists include Baker, Morton, ASI President Blake Bowers, Academic Advisor Don Cobb, sociology professor and co-writer of the Statement on Diversity Don Rogers, professor of ethnic studies Zhulic and Vice President of Academic Programs and Undergraduate Education David Coon.

"These are the people that have the ability to make a change," Hamilton said.

He said he hopes people watch the film, take it seriously and start dialogue because, as Hamilton puts it in his last lines of the movie, "It's about what you're going to do today, tomorrow and the next day."

Everyone's vote counts in America, even Christians!

By Daniel Milhous

Morgan Evan, I would like to assure you were simply trying to present a view, not an offensive view, about the voting rights of Christians, but in case you were actually being serious, I'd like to explain some things to you. First of all, next time you try to reduce a group of college-educated people about the downward of letting the seemingly ignorant residents of southern states vote, you probably shouldn't end your argument by ignoring the voting rights of a group of equally-educated peers. Second, to assume that members of Campus Crusade vote uniformly, to me, is irrational as assuming the College of Engineering will all be voting the same ticket this November. I go to Campus Crusade, so by nature, I cannot be Republican, isn't that what you're implying? And since I'm obviously Republican, I shouldn't be allowed to vote? People of certain minority groups might not vote your ticket either, maybe they shouldn't be allowed to vote.

And the homosexual community, we can't guarantee they'll all vote Democrat, so you probably shouldn't let them vote either. Actually, maybe only people exactly like YOU should be allowed to vote... that would save us the trouble of trying to maintain the integrity of our constitution. My point is, the next time you want to abuse the shift-F7 function to fill a page with big words, make sure your core argument doesn't make you look unintelligent anymore.

What a candidate believes is important in the decision I am amphibious at what Morgan Evan is proposing in his letter because I'm seriously suggesting that I shouldn't be able to vote because I am a Christian and go to Campus Crusade! Simply because I believe in something different than you does not mean that my vote is less important or valid than yours. That, my friend, is religious persecution.

While it should not be the only thing we look at when electing leaders, what a candidate believes should be very important in the decision. I am extremely interested to vote for a candidate that supports acts and laws that I think are wrong and important. What if I was voting for someone who thought that my religion convictions were stupid and idiotic? The best way I can think of to avoid having someone like this in power is to make sure they agree with my convictions. I will admit that voting solely based on the candidate's religious professions is probably not the best way to go. Many candidates say that they are Christians anyway even if they support things that directly contradict their supposed religion. For example, John Kerry, claims to be a Catholic and yet supports Roe vs. Wade. We should also take into account their capabilities as a leader, but please don't dismiss a Christian voter as "this idio..."

It's simply not true and definitely not fair.

Iverson developed. Q. — What part of your career at Cal Poly are you most proud of? A. — Probably just to be a part of the team and to be around such quality players and football coaches. It's just as honourable to be a part of the program. Q. — Where do you see yourself in the future? A. — Coaching, don't know exactly. I'm certainly not looking to leave. I love it here. As long as things keep going well, I don't see any reason I'd be going somewhere else. What are some of your other interests outside of football? A. — Family, it's definitely a big interest. I have four kids. Madeline is the oldest. She kind of takes charge where she's got three younger brothers. Q. — Anything else? A. — We've got a great season going. They deserve everything they're achieving right now. It's an exciting time for the Cal Poly community; it doesn't happen very often that you have such a good season.

Football's in seventh heaven

Karl Ivory has now made two crucial plays to preserve win this year, the first against Southern Utah in the final drive and again this Saturday.

The 7-0 start to the season equals the start the 1997 team achieved, granted the Mustangs are now at the D1-1AA level and are, coupled with UC Davis' loss this weekend, first in the Great West Conference.

Cal Poly evened its series record against the Bison at 2-2 and won in Fargo for the first time. In school history, the Mustangs have started five seasons 7-0. The 1933 squad went 7-0, the 1953 club was 9-0, the 1973 team was 8-0 before finishing 9-1 and the 1997 squad started 7-0 and finished 10-1.

North Dakota State had the first score on a 20-yard run by Kyle Stevens halfway through the first quarter. Cal Poly was held scoreless until late in the second quarter when quarterback Anthony Garrett scored on a one-yard quarterback sneak. The score capped a 63-yard, 10-play drive.

Byungwoo Yoon missed the PAT kick for the first time in 25 tries, leaving the Bison with a 7-6 lead.

Ivy's fifth interception of the season followed three minutes later as he stepped in front of Marques Johnson for the theft and raced 73 yards down the right sideline for the score. Yoon's kick gave Cal Poly a 13-7 advantage.

The only score of the second half was a 19-yard field goal by Wilcox with 2:07 left in the third quarter as North Dakota State trimmed Cal Poly's lead to 13-10.

Cal Poly's defense rose to the occasion in the fourth quarter, stopping four North Dakota State drives.

Bison quarterback Tony Stauss overthrew Travis White on fourth down at the Cal Poly 24 and, on the second drive, North Dakota State punched from its own 49-yard line.

Kenney Chiccone earned his fourth interception of the season at the North Dakota State 32 to stop the third drive with Cal Poly up 2-1 to play and Kevin Williams sealed the Bison's fate with his second interception of the game with 27 seconds to go. North Dakota State had a 368-299 edge in total offense but Cal Poly had a 13-11 margin in first downs. The Mustangs turned the ball over four times and lost the turnover battle 4-3.

Garnett completed eight of 19 passes for 95 yards with two interceptions while Stauss connected on 20 of 37 passes for 187 yards and was intercepted three times. Both quarterbacks were sacked twice.

Jason Holmes caught three passes for Cal Poly while Jonath Russell and Darrell Jones each caught a pair. Travis White caught eight passes for 96 yards for North Dakota State.

Cal Poly's top ground gainer was Geno Randle with 48 yards on 12 carries. Kyle Stevens gained 67 yards on 10 carries for the Bison. Cal Poly has not allowed any opposing running back to gain 100 or more yards this season.

Five-game rally provides volleyball its first Big West win

Mustangs remain undefeated at 7-0 and move into sole possession of first place in the Great West Conference.

The Mustangs had previously lost in three games Friday to UC Riverside, 30-17, 30-27 and 30-27. In Saturday's win, the Mustangs came out strong in the first game. Emily Doris and Kayla Mulder each collected five kills in the game and Cal Poly hit .263.

The Titans struggled hitting .064 and provided the Mustangs seven total blocks led by Margaret Donoghue's four assisted blocks. But both teams struggled in the second game.

CSU Fullerton hit .071, while Cal Poly was only slightly better at hitting .087. Alyssa Opekka and Sarah Morrison each tallied four kills in the win.

The Titans fixed the hitting problems and took control of game three hitting .359 as two players had seven kills each.

The fourth game came down to the final points as Cal Poly tallied 12 kills on 50 swings with only six hitting errors. CSU Fullerton had 18 kills on 52 swings with nine hitting errors.

But the biggest statistic was Cal Poly's advantage in blocks 8-3.

Donoghue led the way with five assisted blocks.

In the deciding game, Cal State Fullerton jumped to an early lead before the Mustangs fought back to take an 8-6 lead and never looked back.

Overall Cal Poly hit .206 for the final game, led by Mulder's 18 kills. Doris added 16 while Courtesy Holman and Nicole Bertoni had 14 and 11 respectively.

In Friday's loss, Doris led Cal Poly with 10 kills. Bertoni helped out with nine kills. UC Riverside hit .259 for the match to Cal Poly's .145 and held a 64-51 advantage in digs.

Kym Murphy had 42 assists for UCIR and Adeluna Paperny had 33 for the Mustangs.

Cal Poly returns to action Thursday when the team travels to Pacific for a Big West Conference match.
