Cal Poly reacts to reported sexual assaults

Catherine Borgeson

The three recently reported sexual assaults triggered quick responses throughout Cal Poly.

President Jeffrey Armstrong assembled a task force to develop a set of recommendations to promote a campus community that does not tolerate sexual assault. Campus-wide emails were sent reminding students to be respectful, responsible and safe. The most recent email — sent on behalf of the task force and signed by Cal Poly Vice President for Student Affairs Cornel Morton — informed students of the anonymous tip-line and asked students to "look out for each other."

The Sexual Assault-Free Environment Resource (SAFER) and Sexual Assault Recovery and Prevention (SARP) programs held several forums throughout campus involving students, faculty and staff, Greek life, members of the Week of Welcome (WOW) program and University Housing.

Christina Kaviani, coordinator of the Gender Equity Center, said the forums facilitated dialogue to break down victim blaming, encourage bystander intervention and provide risk prevention tips.

"The Gender Equity Center has been trying to think about the ways we can use these horrible incidents to have positive program development and more education come out of it," Kaviani said.

60% of sexual assaults are unreported.

The SARP Center saw 312 sexual assault survivors in 2010. Of these cases, 60 pieces of evidence were collected by police who reported to law enforcement in San Luis Obispo. This in the opposite of the national average where cent of the survivors do not report the assault.

"It is not unusual that three rapes happened," McCray said. "Rape is one of the most underreported crimes. What is surprising is that three rapes were reported to law enforcement. By the first young woman stepping forward and talking to law enforcement, it probably allowed the opportunity for other women to come forward and have a voice."

In the immediate aftermath of the reported rapes, Kaviani saw an increase in sexual assault survivors coming to the Gender Equity Center. She said approximately 15 people affected by the reports came to the center to talk about their concerns and questions.

Heather Kinsky, executive director of the SARP Center and the sexual assault survivor, talked about being physically afraid of him. But the fear came from the fact that someone could come in her home to come forward and speak about her own experience.

Approximately 73% of sexual assaults are by a non-stranger.

Surviving sexual assault

Thomas is a sexual assault survivor. Ten years ago, while she was a student at Cal Poly, a friend of her roommate who was staying the night at their apartment, came into Thomas' room while she was asleep and raped her.

"He figured since I was sleeping, he would try his luck," Thomas said. "That was his idiotic attitude. When I woke up and we were having sex, I was so angry and shocked I didn't think about being physically afraid of him. But the fear came from the fact that someone could come into my room and know nothing about me."

"Something at (the) SARP Center that we combat all the time is that San Luis Obispo is so safe, rape doesn't happen here," McCray said. "Rape happens everywhere, to all people of all ages, across all races and sexual orientations. It's happening here, we're just not talking about it."

But as a result of the reported sexual assaults, people are talking.

Associated Students Inc. (ASI) President Sarah Sterrelli said she has heard classmates and people around campus talking more about sexual assault.

"Sexual assault is not usually the first thing you think of when you come to SLO," Sterrelli said. "But the facts are, one in four college women are sexually assaulted. These crimes directly affected our peers. We know these people; we go to classes with them. I feel it really hit home for people to actually talk about it."

The task force commissioned by Cal Poly President Jeffrey Armstrong consists of Vice President for Student Affairs Cornel Morton, ASI President Sarah Sterrelli and Academic Senate Chair Rachel Fernholz.

room and take something so important from me.”

Over the course of that night, Thomas consumed approximately four beers in five hours. But that should not matter, Thomas said.

“Guys don’t think twice about having four beers and crashing on a friend’s apartment floor, why should we?” Thomas said. “We’re being told to live more oppressed lives so we can avoid being raped — that’s not solving the issue. Cautionary measures aren’t good enough because the majority of rapes are acquaintance rapes or date rapes. How can you live in a way where those poor girls,” she said. “I feel like they are heroes because they were so proud of him. I didn’t want to look her in the eye and have to do that to her.”

Thomas said she applauds the three women who decided to report the alleged rape, though, because it brought the issue to the public’s attention.

“There are reasons to press charges but more, probably, for the benefit of society than those poor girls,” she said. “I feel like they are heroes for holding these men accountable when really the reat to them is scant. We as a society do not demands to this is inspiring.”

The campus perspective
Much of that attention was brought to Poly Canyon Village (PCV), where two of the three reported rapes occurred.

Preston Allen, associate vice president for Student Affairs and executive director of University Housing Student Affairs division, said University Housing sent out communications with the 6,500 residents immediately after the crime alert.

“We send a lot of information out to the students,” Allen said. “There’s a synergy in their community that always serves us well in responding quickly to these kinds of things. My job is to get the answers out there, and since I’m not getting phone calls, at least to some degree both parents and students are feeling confident and understanding in exactly what we are doing.”

University Housing and SAFER hosted an “Open Conversation” at the community center of PCV to discuss sexual assault risk reduction and prevention measures.

Allen said he is encourage.

“University Housing has students 24/7,” Allen said. “It’s where students live, it’s where they operate, it’s their social network and it’s all tied into one. We’re always excited when those outside of housing look to see what they can do to improve and support our students. We want to bring that right to the residence halls.”

leading the programs. We’ll talk to the students, we’ll talk to the faculty and then we’ll go to all the other groups and individuals who are offering their ideas and who are applauding efforts beginning to change the climate.”

The first retreat, happening this week, is geared toward programs that are already Cal Poly affiliated and deal with sexual assault and alcohol consumption. They will perform a self-assessment of their programs.

The second retreat next week will host student leaders, including soror-yty and fraternity representatives.

“We will be involving greek life in the retreat — they really need to be part of the solution,” Fernflorcs said. “Fraternities could be so much a part of the solution and culture change.”

When Sigma Phi Epsilon president Rick Collette was asked if he saw fraternities being part of the “solution,” he could not comment.

The last of the three retreats will take place during finals week for facsity and staff to assess strengths and weaknesses of the programs.

Over the summer, the task force will continue to work by asking the community for input. The task force will then compile a set of recommendations.

“We are the president’s task force, we have to answer to him, so ultinately at the end of the day he needs a list of recommendations based off of our 360 degree evaluation,” Fernflorcs said. “He’ll decide what is reasonable, possible and implementable.”

SACRAMENTO (MCT) — More than a half-dozen inmate weapons were recovered after a riot Friday morning at one of the two state prisons in Folsom, Calif., officials said. The riot involved about 150 inmates in Folsom, Calif., officials said.

The riot took place in the exercise yard of B-Facility, a maximum-security unit in the prison, said LeVance Quinn, a spokesman for the CDCR. Various groups were involved, but no specifics were available, Quinn said. Although rival organizations or ethnic groups, it was not immediately clear what caused this fight.

IRVINE (MCT) — Sullivan Solar Power, a San Diego-based solar system provider, opened a new location at 18 Technology Drive last month with a ribbon-cutting ceremony and electric car demonstrations. The business chose to expand into Irvine as its second location because of the city′s reputation as an up-and-coming business hub, said company founder Danid Sullivan.

The opening come a couple weeks after the City Council′s May 10 decision to waive fees on solar installations and solar water heaters for commercial and residential buildings. Eventually, Sullivan said he would like to see an infrastructure of electric vehicle charging stations built in Irvine and the surrounding region.

NEW YORK (MCT) — Dominique Strauss-Kahn is out of jail, but instead of living under house arrest in a ritzy Manhattan apartment building that his wife had secured for him, the embattled former head of the International Monetary Fund will stay downtown, while he faces charges of sexually assaulting a chambermaid.

Neighbors on the Upper East Side didn′t want Strauss-Kahn in the building, so he′ll stay temporarily in a corporate suite near the World Trade Center site owned by the security company he has hired, at $7,000 a day, to guard him.

State Supreme Court Judge Michael Ornbs signed off Friday on a $6 million bail package that paved the way for Strauss-Kahn to leave jail as long as he wore an electronic monitoring device, remained under constant guard, regularly checked in with prosecutors and showed up for all his court dates. He left the Rikers Island jail last Friday afternoon.

MICHIGAN (MCT) — Two parents were arrested Friday for allegedly beating up several students, teachers and the principal at a Detroit school, a school district official confirmed.

The mother and father of a student at Parker Elementary on the city′s west side arrived at the school Friday to follow up on an alleged fight involving their child, according to Jennifer Mrozowski, a spokesperson for Detroit Public Schools.

"The parents grew upset, the situation escalated and the parents allegedly assaulted the principal, teachers and some students," she said.

The mother and father were arrested on disorderly charges and an investigation is continuing. No serious physical injuries were reported.

International

IRAN (MCT) — Iran declared Saturday it had uncovered and dismantled what it called a U.S. "espionage and sabotage network" and arrested 30 people allegedly spying for the CIA.

Tehran claimed that it also had identified and exposed 42 others in connection with the alleged U.S. spy network, according to a statement by the Ministry of Intelligence and Security. The statement alleged that the network was run by CIA agents via U.S. embassies in the United Arab Emirates, Turkey and Malaysia and sought to "gather information from scientific, research and academic centers — especially in terms of nuclear energy, aerospace and defense industries and biotechnology" as well as on oil and gas pipelines, telecommunications and electricity networks, and border controls. There was no immediate response from U.S. officials.

The spy network allegedly operated under the cover of recruitment offices. The statement claimed that Iranian intelligence officers working as double agents managed to infiltrate the network and make arrests both inside and outside the country, "through numerous intelligence and counterintelligence operations."

IRAQ (MCT) — At least 13 people were killed and more than 70 were wounded in a string of explosions that shook the Iraqi capital on Sunday, police said. Seven of the dead were policemen, police said.

The assault on targets around the Iraqi capital, presumably the work of al-Qa′ida′s Iraqi affiliate, took place over two hours and employed 12 improvised explosive devices, three car bombs and one suicide attacker.

The attacks again raised the question of whether a complete withdrawal of U.S. troops at the end of 2011 would lead to more extremist violence.

Yemen's political crisis took a dramatic turn Sunday when an armed mob loyal to embattled President Ali Abdullah Saleh surrounded an embassy, trapping the American and other ambassadors inside for hours until they apparently were flown out in a Yemeni military helicopter.

The tense episode — a deep front to Washington and Yemen's Gulf Arab allies — means the end of a U.S.-backed plan for peaceful transition from Saleh's 32 years in power, and raises grave concerns for what comes next in the bloody uprising that's raged for more than three months.

On Sunday, Saleh again balked at signing the agreement drawn by Yemen's political crisis committee, and the crowds outside the embassy were meeting the G ulf Cooperation Council, as Saudi diplomat told the Associated Press before the apparent helicopter rescue.

After nightfall, according to news reports, Yemeni military helicopters landed in the compound, news agencies reported. Mobs surrounded other foreign embassies, and the Chinese ambassador's convoy also came under attack, according to news reports.

"Everybody is worried. We can't leave the embassy," an unnamed Saudi diplomat told the Associated Press before the apparent helicopter rescue.

Even with a deal with Saleh, the American official said, a transition period is likely to be tumultuous, with Yemeni officials less focused on making public statements on the matter, spoke on the condition of anonymity.

After the latest collapse Sunday, which coincided with Yemeni National Day, U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton reiterated the president's insistence that Saleh step down.

"President Saleh is a cat with more than nine lives," said a Washington-based U.S. official who visited the region earlier this month. The official, who was not authorized to make public statements on the matter, spoke on the condition of anonymity.

On state television, he later said he refused an agreement signed "behind closed doors" and demanded that opposition leaders be present.

Representatives from the Joint Meeting Parties, a coalition of Yemen's establishment political parties, signed the deal Saturday. They have refused to enter the presidential palace while Saleh remains in control.

"If they don't comply, they are dragging us into a civil war, and they will have to take responsibility for the bloodshed in the past and the blood which will be spilled later on because of their stupidity," Saleh said in an address carried by state television.

The Obama administration has at times reluctant to press too hard for Saleh to go, Yemeni activists complain. Obama barely mentioned Yemen in his speech Thursday on the rebellions spreading through the Middle East.

The Obama administration backed the plan put forward by the GCC, a consortium of Arab Gulf nations, which calls for Saleh to resign and transfer power to his vice president within 30 days. In exchange, Saleh would receive immunity from prosecution. At least three times, Saleh has agreed to sign the accord, only to back out at the last minute.

Obama pushes for new No Child Left Behind law

Michael A. Memoli
TRIBUNE WASHINGTON BUREAU

President Barack Obama used his weekly address to make a fresh push for an overlooked democratic priority, urging Congress to act on his proposed overhaul of the No Child Left Behind education law.

In calling on lawmakers to give local schools greater flexibility, the president highlighted progress made at Booker T. Washington High School in Memphis, Tenn., where he delivered a commencement address Monday.

"We need to reward the reforms that are driven not by Washington, but by principals and teachers and parents. That's how we'll make progress in education — not from the top down, but from the bottom up," he said.

Obama last called on Congress to act in March, citing a Department of Education report that found that 82 percent of the nation's public schools could fail to meet federal standards under the 2002 education overhaul pushed by President George W. Bush. Obama said Congress should authorize the legislation before the start of the 2011-12 school year.

"The goals of No Child Left Behind were the right goals. But what hasn't worked is denying teachers, schools and states what they need to meet these goals," Obama said at the time.

Democrats and Republicans widely agree that No Child Left Behind needs an overhaul, but differ on the approach. Many Democrats, and allies in the teachers unions, think schools need more federal money. They support standards of achievement but don't want teachers judged solely by student test scores.

Conservatives generally endorse tough standards but think state and local governments should have more responsibility. They also support vouchers that would allow parents to use public funds to pay for private school tuition, which they say would promote competition among the public schools.

The Obama administration has said that No Child Left Behind is inadequately funded and seeks to replace it with a revamping system that leaves more day-to-day decisions to states and school districts.

Although members of Congress and administration officials have continued to meet on education reform, it has been a low priority amid fierce debates on fiscal issues and the economy.

Republicans used their weekly address to discuss energy prices. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison of Texas accused Obama of "seeking to impose more regulations and taxes on oil and gas companies," which she said could further raise prices at the pump.

"It is not enough for the president to talk about producing energy in America. We call on him to put policies in place that cut the bureaucratic red tape and put Americans to work doing it," Hutchison said.

Obama recently outlined plans for expanding petroleum exploration in Alaska and extending leases in the Gulf of Mexico and the Arctic Ocean. Competing plans were introduced in Congress in the late 1970s, much of that Sac­ramento land stood unused or un­developed.

The vote on the legislation will not come before Congress adjourns for Memorial Day recess. Although members of Congress and administration officials have continued to meet on education reform, it has been a low priority amid fiscal issues and the economy.

Brown to sell state property to pay off debt

Pares S Dave
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

But by Jerry Brown's first term in the late 1970s, much of that Sac­ramento land stood unused or un­developed. Brown signed off on allowing a joint authority of the state and the city of Sacramento to preserve or develop the property until the state had a need for it.

The Capitol Area Development Authority has been credited in the years since with acquiring more than 800 new residential units and raising downtown property values by stop­ping state land from going to waste.

Now Brown wants to sell the Cap­itol-area residential, commercial, re­tail and other undeveloped property not used for state operations to help pay state bond debt.

CADA portfolios of about 75 downtown properties was valued at as much as $50 million before the recession. Experts say the state may be unable to recover fair values in a depressed market.

"Only if you lower the prices deep enough will you find takers," said Jaime R. Alavya, head of Sac­ramento State's Real Estate & Land Use Institute.

Sacramento Mayor Kevin John­son is backing Brown's plan because it would return land to the property tax roll, providing more revenue for local governments and schools.

"The governor's proposal is wel­come and long overdue," Johnson said in a statement. "I share his sense of urgency to make progress.

But former CADA executives, board members and the assemblyman who represents the area have expressed concern about how future revitaliza­tion could be affected if the properties revert fully to private hands.

Since 1996, the state has sold a small portion — about 6.5 blocks — of the original area to homeown­ers or to CADA to flip to developers, earning about $8 million. At least five projects on formerly state-owned land slowed during the recession with de­velopers unable to secure financing.

"Not a lot of urban infill projects are being built right now," said John Dangberg, a Sacramento assistant city manager and former CADA ex­ecutive director.

CADA receives no state funding, but reinvests rental revenues into its operation. State law requires a quarter of its nearly 1,400 residen­tial units to be affordable housing. Preserving the threshold through new legislation would likely be one of the complex issues involved in a sale. It's also expected to lower the potential sales price.

"Our whole business model would have to change," CADA Exec­utive Director Paul Schmidt said.

Some of the properties were first tagged as state surplus in 1995. Brown plans for the Department of General Services to spend the rest of this year studying how individual sales could be arranged. Estimates of how much those sales could bring the state may come next January when the governor releases his budget pro­posal for the 2012-13 fiscal year.

CADA is credited with ensuring that projects fit into a comprehen­sive, orderly and mixed-use develop­ment plan.

"CADA represents a positive force," said Democratic Assemblymen Roger Dickinson. "We need to move cautiously in reducing that force."

Developer John Hodgson, a for­mer chair of CADA's board of direc­tors, urged weighing the financial benefits to the state against any neg­ative impacts on the Capitol area.

H.D. Palmer, spokesman for Brown's finance department, said state officials will "be looking to make sure both the state and the city stand to benefit" if the sale proceeds.

Sacramento-based developer Sotiris Kolokotronis, who recently completed a project for CADA in 2001, called it a "golden opportu­nity" to give downtown redevelopment a shot in the arm.

"I would hope," Dangberg said, "any new owner does as good a job as CADA has done over the past three decades as a landlord and in reinvesting in this community."

Brown also wants to dispense of any other state-owned prop­erties that serve no immediate government function, such as the Los Angeles Memorial Coli­seum, the Ramona Canyon prop­erty in Southern California and the Caltrans-owned Montclair Golf Course in Oakland.

Bromance
Taking your friendship to the next level

J.J. Jenkins is a journalism freshman and Mustang Daily freshman columnist.

"Bromance — Describes the complicated love and affection shared by two straight males." — Urban Dictionary

In my time as the Mustang Daily freshman columnist, I’ve written about romance and co-mance, but as my time winds down, I cannot forget to mention the most important "mance": bromance.

Bromances are unique because they are not searched for, they are realized. This was certainly what happened in my case.

My bromance started during Week of Welcome (WOW) when our group first gathered together and awkwardly introduced ourselves by saying our name and an adjective that started with the first letter of our name to describe ourselves. Because "J" adjectives eluded me (there are not that many to start with), I went to my default, "Jolly J.J." To my right, a guy stepped forward when his time came — "I’m Naughty Nick."

Naughty Nick and I did not seem like natural friends. I was a nerdy cross-country runner who could not complete a sentence in front of a cute girl. He was a natural athlete with an effortless flow of game around his many suitors. But there was something about our back-and-forth banter throughout the week, about everything from sports to eating habits, that clicked.

On the last day of the week, our WOW leaders gave us each a poster of the group that everyone signed for each other. Nick’s tagline on my poster read, "Homic for life, son. Don’t be too much of a heartbreaker."

I suspected that would be the extent of our relationship, but we never got rid of each other. We started by going to lunch during the week and then hanging out on weekends.

Our bromance has reached Vince Vaughn/Owen Wilson status from "Wedding Crashers" (I will not tell you who is who). Even as the year progressed (crushes changed and I managed to find co-mance and romance), our relationship did not falter. Our group of friends even joke that I cheat on Naughty Nick with my girlfriend because jeal-

easily often abound. She just learned to accept that she is No. 2.

But the bromance is more than just a friendship between two guys who talk about girls and wear matching “bro tanks” (for the record, we do not do that). It is the type of relationship where a simple word, look or eye movement can convey a whole range of thought. Most importantly, bromances often flourish when opposites really do attract.

However, some women are baffled by bromances, as they do not understand the origins of this unique relationship. Considering this misunderstanding, I thought I'd take a moment to explain.

Since we were young, girls have had a natural tendency to move in packs, a sort of natural defense mechanism against older guys. The relationships within the pack vary between animosity and friendship and disgust and admiration. The only certainty is that guys can seldom pierce the pack.

On the other hand, guys try to be alpha males in pursuit of the girl or girls. That breeds solidarity. Rarely do you find “The Hangover-like wolf packs in the wild. Yet when that special guy comes around, like when you find the girl of your dreams, men just click no matter their differences.

Thankfully, bromances do not have to be exclusive. This weekend I got the opportunity to exploit that fact in Cal Poly’s very own version of the Amazing Race.

Naughty Nick signed himself up with another friend (a girl — the ultimate bromance: betropped) and challenged me to a duel, scavenger hunt style. Since bromances thrive off competitiveness, I could not back down and enlisted the support of my roommate, with whom I am also involved in a bromance (there are no limits to guy love).

Our team name? “Team Bromance.”

We made the most of our opposition qualities, demonstrating the power of the bromance to combine and make an unstoppable opponent. While he solved Sudoko, I used my powers as a journalist (aka Google on an iPhone) to find the remaining clues. Combine that with a little cardio, and my fellow bro and I finished the race in first, placing second overall.

MD Hiring Staff Writers

The Mustang Daily is looking for staff writers for the 2011-2012 school year. All majors are welcome who want to produce content for a student-run newspaper and gain experience in the reporting field. If you are interested in the position, please send a resume and at least 3 clips to kayliynishi@gmail.com or drop off in the Mustang Daily newsroom, Graphic Arts Building 26 room 226.

Bromance is more than just a friendship. It is more than just two guys who talk about girls and wear matching ‘bro tanks.’

HOROSCOPES

MONDAY, MAY 23

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You may think that your humor is completely appropriate to a current situation, but take care that someone isn’t rubbed the wrong way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You may feel as though the program is slow, but in fact you’re using the time well and making efficient choices that move things forward.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You are likely to respond far more emotionally than expected to a situation that, for others, is nothing more than routine. Keep it together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You may not be able to provide the support a friend or loved one really needs, but you can make it up in other ways when the time comes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The social aspects of your current endeavors are likely to prove more important to you right now than any pragmatic impact they may carry.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You’ll be able to mix with all kinds of people, no matter what side of the issues you ultimately fall on. You can get along.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You may have to do a little doctoring in order to have things fall out according to the vision you had when you began.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Share your ideas with someone not directly involved in your current project and you’ll come up with a new idea of getting what you want.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You’ll have a chance to make amends, but don’t before you engage your talents and accomplish something that makes a mark.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — What you have to offer is more than worth the effort it will take to deliver the goods in the time you have to get the work done.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A meeting may be scheduled in which an offer is made that takes you back — and propel you forward into a future of many opportunities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Remember to let others know the routine of a mission you have scheduled for what may prove the busiest part of the day. Stay in touch.
Elephants or donkeys: it doesn't matter

Andrew NeNow is a wine and viticulture sophomore and Mustang Daily conservative columnist.

The majority of the articles that come out of this column come from current political issues and pertain to those that most well-informed Americans are aware of.

This week, I chose to talk about an issue that has been on my mind ever since I was a kid. This issue, which became apparent to me through watching the news, seeing countless debates and elections and even through watching my family, is what I feel is one of the greatest threats to this nation.

The sad truth about today's society is that people take their politics, opinions and political affiliations too seriously. This is a truth that I could never prove to you with statistics, but it is something I have struggled to deal with my entire political-entrenched life.

Obviously you should not allow yourself to be passive with your beliefs, but it has gotten to the point that people tend to put their political ideals in front of more important aspects of life. I have experienced this fact first hand.

I have one of the most loving and tight-knit families a person could have, and I am very grateful for that. I have more than 20 cousins, and family gatherings of 50 or more people are quite common. We enjoy laughs and are always excited to see each other.

In the midst of this great family love lies a sort of tension that became apparent as I grow up. My family is split down the middle in political ideals; one side is Conservative, while the other is Liberal.

As a result, a lot of trash talking occurs on each side. Some of which comes to a forefront at family gatherings.

The point is that even my family experiences a divide due to a difference of opinion.

This same divide appears to be forming in the fabric of American society. I have seen people express hateful feelings toward others and myself because they simply see the world differently.

To this American here lies the problem: It appears that people are forgetting the meaning of an opinion and letting their egos get in the way of reality. It's called an opinion for a reason.

The reality of the universe is that no one is ever going to completely agree on how the world came to be or on whether or not atoms can be broken down any further. This is because there is no way of absolutely determining the answers to these questions, and this can be said about many of the political issues people argue about on a daily basis.

The German philosopher Immanuel Kant called these undeterminable battles antinomies. He and I both believe these antinomies are meant to prove the limits we as human beings are. They are meant to show us that certain truths that will always have two sides. Two sides, that although completely contradict each other, stand to reason.

So why is there so much hate surrounding politics just for believing in something? Are our egos so large that we can't even let someone believe something beyond what we believe?

As new political issues arise and new discoveries are made, this rift in society will only widen. It is important that people begin to respect the opinions of others and not take it so personally when someone disagrees personally with you. It's time to stop pointing ourselves under the elephant or donkey banner and come together under the red, white and blue.

I have seen people express hateful feelings toward others and myself because they simply see the world differently.

Pacific tied the game in the second inning with first baseman Brian Martin taking a lead-off walk to start the inning and right fielder Allen Riley brought him home on a double to centerfield.

Cal Poly regained the lead in the seventh, with a walk to Crocker and a sacrifice bunt from Denver Chavez, advancing Crocker to second. After a wild pitch sent him to third, Crocker beat the throw home as Mike Miller grounded to shortstop Josh Simms.

In the eighth inning, Mitch Hahniger padded Cal Poly's lead with a solo home run. The homer was Hahniger's fifth in the last nine games.

Pacific rallied back in the bottom of the eighth with a pair of singles, and runners in scoring position with no outs. But the Tigers were only able to score one in the eighth before pitcher Jeff Johnson came in and struck out three to earn his fifth save.

The Mustangs will play out the last week of their schedule on the road, facing non-conference opponents Stanford and Cal State Bakersfield. Cal Poly takes on Stanford May 24 at 5:30 p.m. and will finish the season with a three-game series against Cal State Bakersfield starting May 27 at 6 p.m.

Gonzalez has earned All-Big West Conference first-team honors three times. The Mustang golfer from Monte Vista High School in Danville, Calif., won three tournaments in his four-year Mustang career and competed in his third NCAA regional this week.

Gonzalez averaged 72.8 strokes per round as a senior during the regular season, with five top-10 finishes and 12 rounds of par or better, including four rounds in the 60s. He won the Folino Invitational hosted by Cal State Fullerton in Irvine on March 22 for his third career collegiate title.

Gonzalez now has 19 career rounds in the 60s and 53 rounds of par or better thus far, finishing in the top 10 a total of 17 times. Gonzalez's career average of 72.59 strokes per round is second to Mustang career record-holder Travis Bertoni (71.700).
Mustangs ignite offensively, overpower Pacific in finale

Mustang Daily Staff Report

The Cal Poly men’s baseball team clinched its fifth Big West series of the season, after taking two of three from Pacific this weekend to finish out the conference schedule. The Mustangs finished the season 15-9 in the Big West.

After splitting the first two games, the Mustangs defeated Pacific 21-0 in Game 3, earning season highs with 21 runs and 22 hits.

Sophomore pitcher Joey Wageman earned the win, improving to 4-2 on the season, after throwing seven shutout innings and giving up two singles.

The Mustangs scored eight runs in the first six innings, and added another nine in the seventh inning — their highest scoring inning of the season.

As a team, Cal Poly hit six home runs, four coming in the seventh, including two from center fielder Bobby Ciocker, one from freshman left fielder Jimmy Allen, one from catcher Jordan Hadlock and two three-run home runs from first baseman Tim Wise. Allen has earned 11 hits in his last 18 at-bats.

Twelve Cal Poly batters earned hits on route to the team’s largest margin of victory in more than three years. The last time the Mustangs scored more than 20 runs in a game was in their last game of the 2010 season, with a 25-8 victory over Cal State Bakersfield.

Cal Poly dropped Game 1 of the series with a rare loss from starting pitcher Mason Radeke. Radeke gave up nine hits and four walks as Pacific scored in four of the first five innings. Radeke’s ERA is now 3.11 and he fell to 8-3 this season.

Cal Poly’s lone run came in the third inning when Allen, who reached second on a double to center field, was driven home on a single by Mike Miller.

But Pacific answered with a run in the fourth and two in the fifth as the Tigers cruised to a 6-1 victory.

The Mustangs evened the series behind starting pitcher Steven Fischbach, who earned five wins and two no-decisions in his last seven starts. Fischbach gave up just one run and struck out seven in a narrow 3-2 Cal Poly victory.

The Mustangs jumped out to an early 1-0 lead in the first, before earning two hits and no runs over the next five innings.

Men’s golf standout Geoff Gonzalez made history this weekend.

Gonzalez finished tied for fourth in the NCAA Colorado Regional at the Colorado National Golf Club on Saturday — becoming Cal Poly’s first NCAA Division I National Championship qualifier.

He almost aced his last tee shot, landing the ball within a half-inch of the cup and sinking the putt for his fourth consecutive birdie and a final-round of 66.

“I’m real proud of myself and our program,” Gonzalez said in a release. “This is a great day for Cal Poly golf.”

Gonzalez, who parred the par-72 course on Thursday and Friday, began the final round in 26th place and had an up-and-down day Saturday with four bogeys and 10 birdies.

Starting on the back nine, Gonzalez bogeyed three of the last five holes and made the turn at one under par. He also bogeyed the No. 5 hole on the front nine, his 14th hole of the day, and was at two under par with four holes to play.

“Aafter I bogeyed the fifth and walked up to the sixth tee, Coach said I just might as well birdie the last four,” Gonzalez said. “So we decided to go for broke, and I did.”

Gonzalez hit one within three feet of the cup on the sixth hole and made the putt for a birdie.

On the seventh hole, Gonzalez’s second shot landed pin high on the fringe. He chipped to within four feet and made another birdie.

On the eighth hole, Gonzalez hit a wedge shot to within three feet of the cup en route to his third straight birdie.

On the ninth and final hole of the round, Gonzalez struck a ball into the wind and it stopped a half-inch from the hole. He completed his tee-under-par 66 with his fourth consecutive birdie, his 10th birdie.
