Program’s marketing methods spark doubts

By Allison Bosselmann

Some controversy has been raised about a group that traveled from class to class last week to share information about a foreign exchange program. The group did not have the university’s permission to enter the classrooms.

The program is called Youth in Action’s University Cultural Exchange, and it gives students the opportunity to spend five weeks in Australia or Europe. Three weeks are spent living with foreign students and two weeks are spent traveling. The cost ranges anywhere from $1,295-$1,695.

It sounds like a trip any adventurous college student would be interested in taking, but some students have expressed concern about the validity of the program.

The foreign students who spoke to the classes asked professors for a few moments of class time, gave a brief description of the program and handed out an information sheet that explained the program in more detail.

Jennifer Monaghan, a history junior, said she felt a little hesitant about the way the program was presented in one of her classes. She attended a meeting which was held in room 219 in the University Union last Thursday.

“I went to a meeting and all they did was give us a hard sales pitch on taking the trip,” Monaghan said.

She said she felt uncomfortable with the fact that the group asked for $5 from each interested student. Monaghan said she wanted to know where the $5 went.

She said she was told by the foreign students that they had spoken to 200 students during Thursday’s meeting. “They are making at least $1,000 from the students that just attend the meetings,” she said, adding that she is concerned because she is afraid the program is a scam.

Randy Sykes, director of the Youth in Action exchange program, said, “The $5 pays for the materials and the postage fees of the applications.” Sykes said every interested student must go through an interview and application process. And

Modern facility to help alleviate child care woes

By Minka Parsons

The new Children’s Center being built at Cal Poly will have room to accommodate more children and will help to alleviate the big demand for child care on campus.

“This new Children’s Center at Cal Poly will have room to accommodate more children and will help to alleviate the big demand for child care on campus,” said event chairman Tim Mitchell.

“Right now we only have room for 68 children,” said Haila Hafley, Cal Poly Children’s Center coordinator.

Although 89 children are enrolled in the current program, only 68 are allowed to be cared for at one time, 49 on campus and 22 at nearby Pacheco School. Added to that are about 200 children waiting on a list to get into the program.

The new center will solve some of those problems with its 132-child capacity.

Hafley said that child care is in big demand at Cal Poly, and although a new center is being built, there will still be a need for more centers in the future.

BEIJING (AP) — McDonnell Douglas Corp. is wrapping up negotiations to build 150 new jumbo jets for use in China and hopes to soon begin constructing another new passenger plane in that country for international markets.

The announcement, made in Shanghai over the weekend, was reported Monday by the China Daily newspaper. The newspaper quoted the Chinese partner, Shanghai Aviation Industrial Corp., as saying negotiations were in the final stage.

McDonnell Douglas and Shanghai Aviation just completed the last of 25 MD-82 airliners under a licensing agreement that took effect in 1985. The key to the last plane was delivered Saturday to China Northern Airlines in a ceremony. McDonnell Douglas provided most of the components, and the Chinese partner assembled them. Work has begun on a second order of five MD-80s for domestic use and five MD-80s for sale to U.S. airlines.

American Muslims set free from Pakistan jail

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Two American Muslim brothers were set free Monday after the Supreme Court overturned their robbery convictions and an order to cut off their right hands and left feet.

American Muslim brothers were set free Monday after the Supreme Court overturned their robbery convictions and an order to cut off their right hands and left feet.

The court's ruling comes after the Boyds, both 21, were convicted of robbery in a successful attempt to free from Pakistan jail and Islamic scholars said the punishment "fearful, not entirely lucid," Nassau County Police Deputy Chief Edward Doughty said one shot was fired at the house, shattering windows.

Wilson vetoes power of train commission

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. Pete Wilson has vetoed legislation that would have extended for one year the authority of a two-state commission formed to promote a high-speed "super-train" between Las Vegas and Southern California.

In a veto message issued last week, the Republican governor said that he was not extending the life of the California-Nevada Super Speed Ground Transportation Commission since it had been unable to line up the necessary funds for the $5 billion rail line between Las Vegas and Anaheim, about 30 miles south of Los Angeles.

In August of 1990, the 15-member, two-state commission granted the San Francisco-based Bechtel Corp. an exclusive franchise to build the proposed 270-mile-long magnetic levitation rail line.

But six months later, Bechtel announced that it was putting the Las Vegas-Southern California project on hold, citing a lack of investor interest.

Man dies after killing father, three people

GREAT NECK, N.Y. (AP) — A man described as "the out of the block" was found dead today inside an older couple's house that he took over after killing his father and three neighbors in New York City, police said.

Police said Andrew Brooks Jr., 47, was found in an upstairs bedroom in this Long Is­land suburb, dead from an apparent self-inflicted wound. That ended a rampage that lasted more than a day.

The discovery occurred hours after police fired rubber bullets at the house, shattering windows in an attempt to "reap his atten­tion," Nassau County Police Deputy Chief Edward Doughty said one shot was fired at about 9 a.m. and since that time there had been repeated attempts to contact the suspect.

Earlier, police had described the man as "fearful, not entirely lucid."
Poly group dedicated to community service

By Cindy Lee

Student Community Services is a non-profit campus organization devoted to the promotion of community service.

More than 1,000 students participate each year in SCS activities, with nearly 450 of those volunteering on a regular basis.

The organization is sponsored by ASI and Student Life and Activities and is completely made up of student volunteers.

"The board of directors is a real mix of people from all majors," said Sam Lutrin, SCS adviser. "All schools are covered on the board and in the student volunteer programs."

For the last 22 years, SCS has helped students find various volunteer opportunities on campus and in the San Luis Obispo area.

Michelle Kosko has been involved with SCS for three years and said she gains a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction from helping someone else out.

She said she believes SCS enables students to interact with other students from various backgrounds or of different majors.

Another benefit expressed by SCS volunteers is the opportunity to increase one's interactive skills through participating with a variety of individuals from throughout the community.

SCS offers 11 service projects, which allow the student volunteers to get to know the local community and its members.

SCS hopes to recruit new volunteers for various projects this year including:

• Outreach — A project where volunteers help the developmentally disabled. The volunteers work with Casa de Vida, a home for disabled adults, and Special Olympics, with their annual regional Olympic games. Activities include throwing parties, chaperoning ski trips and helping with various regional sports competitions.

• Environmental Council — This new project brings different groups together to connect with each other and find out how to help each other and the environment. The project will coordinate with Earth Day to work with Poly Canyon's botanical gardens and trails and on various awareness and educational programs.

• Poly Pals — Also known as Big Friends to Little People, Poly Pals is a big brother, big sister program that works with troubled children and children from single-parent families.

• Beyond Shelter — This project works with People's Kitchen by preparing and serving meals to SLO County's homeless. Volunteers may also participate in the Night on the Streets program in which students meet homeless people and develop a greater understanding of how the homeless live.

Break the rules: tell the armed forces you're gay
By Peter Hartlaub

Some of the most intelligent, respected people I have ever met are homosexual. I would sooner believe that Warren Baker is really Elvis than believe that Warren Baker is anti-gay. I have to say that an important body in our government classifies these people as "sick," I have to suggest a new perspective.

Think of us as being on one, big, sexual team. Just like any team, rules will often have to be adjusted so that everyone can play. When one player is not comfortable in his or her role, he or she should find another so that they can play their best.

While the rules have been changing over the last several years, there is still one group of players that insists on committing the same old penalties, and they should get called for it.

The armed forces is not being a team player.

The armed forces calls homosexuality a mental illness—a state of mind. Since states of mind can change, I urge you all to assume a homosexual state of mind next time the armed forces calls them they are gay.

If they don't have to play by the rules, we shouldn't have to either.

HART ATTACKS STROKES

"...I woke up this morning and I got myself a beer. I said I woke up this morning and I got myself a beer. The future's uncertain and the end is always near..."

-The Doors

Cal Poly football games need beer.

With Cal Poly athletics in financial mayhem, Mustang football is looking at two possibilities. One, the referendum passes and suddenly we will need lots of lots of money to build a new Division I football facility, or two, the referendum fails and we will need a way to drown our arrows as "pseudo" tradition comes to an end.

Either way we need beer.

A common misconception among Cal Poly fans is that the campus is completely dry.

Wrong.

Alcohol is allowed in the parking lot during tailgating parties of the Homecoming game.

2. Warren Baker has an extensive collection of fine wines in his campus home.

3. Cases of wine are frequently bought by the campus food warehouse.

Exception has been made, so let's make another.

Cal Poly football games need beer.

We are in financial straits athletically, and any way to raise funds should be considered. Other schools make up to $200 a bag selling beer. Just think how many more public relations guys (or editorial) will be able to buy!

Speaking of the P.R. guy, I'm completely in favor of continued athletics at Cal Poly, but $10,000 does not need to be spent on an "unbiased observer to promote" the referendum. I believe the P.R. guy will be more unbiased as a WWP wrestling announcer.

Yes, we at Mustang Daily occasionally make the stray mistake, but we educate the campus sufficiently with topics such as this. Perhaps this is the "unbiased attitude," but paying for a public the student body could be nothing but a mistake. Can we educate the student body sufficiently with topics such as this?

Cal Poly football games need beer. Is-T quote of the week:

"...The world's insane with you and champagne and I'm living in black rain and I'm going to hang. I've got ten of them stashed with a case of hand grenades..."

Students respond to "Coming Out Day"

When I was walking through the U.U. on Friday, reading Jan E. Perez's letter to the Editor in Mustang Daily (Friday, Oct. 11), I almost lost my breakfast. It was National Coming Out Day for gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

You say you want equality and you want to be a part of mainstream society. Then why isolate yourselves by having a "National Coming Out Day," and why demand special treatment from the government and the mainstream society that you are so desperate to be a part of, with quotas and settings? This all seems counter-productive to me.

Making a spectacle of yourselves in the U.U. only alienates you more. When I meet someone, I don't say "Hi, I'm Theresa and I'm heterosexual." I like people for who they are not what they are. Sexual orientation and race are not an issue with me. Why are people continually making this one issue? What you do in your private life is your own business. Why do you want to make it everyone else's as well?

Being a part of mainstream society does not involve violent protests, like the one at the State Capitol on Friday, and it does not include special interest groups and clubs that set cultural and social differences apart. Supporting legislation, like Assembly Bill 101, that would require quotas on the basis of sexual orientation don't create equality, it creates inequality! How can it be equal if it's artificial?

I often wonder how the world will be in 20 years. In my world, as it stands now my children won't have a chance unless they're female, minority and gay.

Sports editor gives views on referendum by Neil Pascale

I mean BUCKS, money, for example, to heal our wounded pride. buggy and a word of encouragement. I mean a POLICY! That's not just criticizing Poly and its athletic program. At least in the minds of Poly fans, the athletic department was given a little victory for the Mustangs.

And, it's a good plan. No doubt about it. Asking students to vote for a fee increase that at least half of them will have to pay little or nothing for is simply brilliant. Public relations majors take note.

And, fortunately for the athletic department, the referendum will pass. Only 5,000 students will be asked to renew the referendum and sign a ballot in the community. At least a fifth of those ballot box stuffers will be athletes or friends of athletes. And the remaining 4,000 voters will split among themselves giving a nice little victory for the Mustangs.

And, a happy day in Mustangville. No strikeouts. No disappointments. A nice little victory among themselves giving a nice little victory for the Mustangs.

And I don't mean a nice little plug on Channel 4. Or a fruit outlet and a word of encouragement to the press.

Alpha set down to address those problems, and the fraternity came up with some proposals. Lambda Chi Alpha now sends out pre-event publicity to skaters stating no alcohol or illegal parking is allowed on campus, Schumacher said.

Also, the event has changed its schedule to have the event run from 7 a.m. to midnight on a 24-hour-a-day basis. "We'll give it a try," Schumacher said, adding that Public Safety will periodically walk through the U.U. during the three-day event to make sure that everything is running smoothly.

Affiliate Information/Reserve Supervisor Steve Cedillo said Lambda Chi Alpha must fill out an activity form each year and sign the form for liability purposes.

Student Life and Activities reviews this form for potential conflicts in scheduling. The form must be completed before the fraternity can hold the Thrash-A-Thon.

Cedillo said he feels confident that everything will run smoothly this year. He said he doesn't see any problems ahead.

Looking back at past events, he said, "(The Thrash-A-Thon) seems to work out well." Lambda Chi Alpha hopes to make at least $2,500 to benefit the American Cancer Society.

For its effort, Lambda Chi Alpha has earned numerous awards in connection with the yearly Thrash-A-Thon.

The fraternity has won the General Motor Spirit Award, the International Public Affairs Award and the Cal Poly President's Award for community service.

The President's Award honors the "group that provides the best community service project" each year, Mitchell said.

The Thrash-A-Thon began eight years ago when fraternity member Eric Horn wanted to have a skateboard event at Cal Poly, Mitchell said.

He also said that Horn felt the fraternity should hold the event for a worthy cause.

He said that money is generated from sponsors such as local businesses and skateboard companies. The fraternity also receives money from T-shirt sales.

"We are very appreciative of what Lambda Chi Alpha does every year, with money going to the Colleen Wheeler, a representative from the American Cancer Society.

The money the association receives is spent on research, education and patient and community services.

Sticks and stones may break your bones, but words cause permanent damage.

The program cares for children between the ages of 6 months and 4 years. About 95 percent of the kids are children of students. The rest are the children of staff and faculty, Hafley said.

"A survey was done that showed the need for staff and faculty child care as well," Hafley said.

When the program gets going at the new building, there will be a lot more room for the children of staff and faculty members, she added.

Because there will be more children in the program, the center will likewise be hiring more staff.

The program currently has five head teachers and one food service/office manager. About 54 students are on staff as teaching assistants, kitchen aides and office aides.

For the new center, Hafley said they plan to hire one teacher and a few more aides, whose wages will be paid for out of the extra money that will come in from having more kids.

The center will be located across the street from the Alhambra House on the former site of parking lot C. A date for the completion of the center has not been officially announced, but Hafley said she hopes to see it completed in the spring of 1992.

"It would be easier to make the move in the spring because it could be done during the break," Hafley said. "It would be nice to be licensed and fully enrolled by the summer."

Evelyn Ruehr, food service coordinator and office manager, said she is excited about the new program because it will make the food program easier to operate.

The children in the program now are divided between the two sites, but the food for all of them is prepared at the Cal Poly Children's Center. The food for those at Pacheco School is then taken there.

"It's a hard way to run a kitchen," Ruehr said. "The new center will also have a kitchen as "apartments sized."

The new building will enable the program when you have to go from one place to another," Ruehr said.

The new building will be located in the new fully operational kitchen, enabling workers to serve 300 meals a day.

"It will be set up like a restaurant kitchen," Hafley said. "It's a hard way to run a kitchen." Ruehr described the current center's kitchen as "apartment sized."

The new center will also have enough rooms to separate age groups.

Infants, toddlers and preschool children will have their own separate rooms.

"Teachers will have their own offices, which they don't have now, so they can have private meetings with parents," Hafley said.

Proper storage facilities and a reception area with an office are being built into the new center as well.

ASI and state funding for child care for low-income families are paying for the new building. Included in each student's quarterly registration fees is $5 which goes to the ASI fund for the Children's Center.

Because there will be more teachers, Hafley said the program cares for children of staff and faculty members will grow.
