

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This edition of The Forum would not be possible without the massive effort of so many individuals here at Cal Poly. Though far from complete, the following is a list of some of the people that have made this year a success for us.

First, we want to thank our faculty advisers Dr. Thomas Trice and Dr. Lewis Call. Their guidance and suggestions have been absolutely paramount to the publication of this journal. Beyond helping at the organization level, their work in contacting fellow professors for student paper recommendations was crucial in finding quality content.

This leads me to the next group I would like to thank: our History Department professors. Without your instruction, students would not be able to produce writing of such high quality and sophistication. In addition to this, it is your recommendations that keep this journal alive. We at The Forum hope that you will support us by continuing to recommend student work for publication, as you have done so willingly for the past six years.

Our journal would be nothing without the work of our student authors. The staff of The Forum and the entire History Department is very proud of you all. Being published in an academic journal is no small task, and we all know you have many more great things ahead of you.

Unfortunately, not all papers can be published. We would like to thank those students whose work was not chosen for publication this year for their interest, and hope that they will continue to write history and submit to The Forum in the future.

The journal in your hands would not exist without the hard work of Annie Priestley of Cal Poly's Graphic Communication department. Her masterful work in formatting is a compliment to her department and Cal Poly as a whole. Additionally, her patience with us, the Executive Editors, made the production process a pleasure.

Finally, we would like to thank the staff of The Forum. You all have done a great job in scoring and processing submissions in a timely and effective manner. I know that each of you will be great contributors to whatever fields you decide to enter following your graduation.
