VOTE Nov. 7

Proposition 1-D and Cal Poly

The upcoming November 7 ballot will include Proposition 1-D, a measure that allows the state to sell general obligation bonds for K-12 schools and higher education. The measure includes $3.1 billion to California's higher education systems to construct new buildings and related infrastructure, alter existing buildings, and purchase equipment for the buildings. It also allocates $1.5 billion to California Community Colleges, $890 million to the University of California, and $690 million to the California State University. The Governor and Legislature select the specific projects to be funded by the bond monies. Funds from Proposition 1-D will allow Cal Poly to provide state-of-the-art facilities to educate future engineers, scientists, architects and technicians to solve the challenges of the 21st century, as well as help meet California's workforce needs.
