

Budget: bleak for education

by Frank Alderete

Promising that there will be no more "ruinous" tax increases, Ronald Reagan sent the State Legislature a bones bare $6.73 billion budget Tuesday. For the first time since the Depression in the 30's, the state government will run out of money, probably in the fall, and have to borrow from private lending institutions to pay its bills.

For this campus, the new budget seems to mean that there will be no salary increases, no new construction, and heavier teaching loads. Construction of residence halls and dining facilities will not be affected by this proposal because they are financed through revenue bonds.

Reagan's budget plan was $53 million less than what the State College Board of Trustees recommended as needed to maintain "the high standards established for the system over a period of ten years."

The Trustees also recommended $59.1 million for salary improvements, the budget calls for nothing.

The Trustees also asked for a capital outlay budget of $156 million. Again, they will receive nothing, according to the Governor's proposed budget.

State College Chancellor Glenn S. Dumke said that "major adjustments will be necessary" in order for the state college system to accept some 20,000 more students next year and face a "disproportionate small increase in the support budget."

This campus, under previous state policy requirements, has already stopped recruiting new faculty members, except for emergency situations, and has cut off new enrollments for next year.

Hoping to drop the cost per student in the state college system by $94 a head, Reagan also asked for a deletion of 250 faculty positions.

The University of California is to receive no increase in funds and is to face a reduction of about 100 faculty positions.

Although state employees are to receive no salary hikes in the proposed Reagan budget, civil servants will receive such new benefits as unemployment insurance, overtime pay and salary differentials.

"Just as in any family," Reagan said, "there are years in which it is simply not possible to do all that might be desired."

Reagan went to say that because unemployment is much higher than he would like, and that "thousands of Californians are vigorously seeking employment—many of them anxious to work at any job at any living wage—out state revenues out down."

Reagan dismissed education requests for funds by saying, "it is a tribute to our educators that they express their goals and aspirations as definite requests. However, in a time of acute revenue shortage, there is a great deal which educators can do to economize."

Dr. Archibald Hill spoke to students Tuesday night on linguistics in the United States.

Linguistics under fire

One of the foremost leaders in the development of linguistics in the United States spoke before an audience of approximately 80 members of the campus community Tuesday night in the college Theater.

Dr. Archibald Hill, the linguist who has done most to explore the intriguing field of linguistic stylistic-literary research, dissected and discussed the content and structure of three selected poems in his lecture entitled 'Sunflowers Over Two Centuries.' Under fire were William Blake's 'Ah Sun-Flower', Thomas Moore's 'Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms' and Allen Ginsberg's 'Sunflower Sutra.'

The didactic lecture topped off Dr. Hill's second day on campus as a guest lecturer. Sponsored by the Art, English, Foreign Language and Linguistics Departments and the Fine Arts Committee, the linguist will be a visitor on campus through Friday.

Judge passes 'drug sentence'

Fred Schenk, judge of the Morro Bay Justice Court spoke at Tuesday night's Project Number 9 series on some aspects of the courts as they relate to drug abuse.

Schenk feels that the drug problem is not a static one. The opinions of the courts and of the people who are dealing with the drug problem are changing.

The drug problem, according to Schenk, is not unmixed or simple. "We're encountering increasing numbers of people who have been experimenting with drugs, especially pills, and not coming back. They've become treatment problems as well as non-functional citizens."

In California, initial jurisdiction in drug cases depends on the category of the offense. In some cases, if a person is convicted of a misdemeanor, he may have to serve time in the county jail.

However, if a person is convicted of a felony, he may have to serve his sentence in a state institution.

In Schenk's opinion, marijuana hurts the user by denying him of his rights to obtain a license or a credential if he is convicted on a marijuana charge. "If there is an opening for a job, and one person with a drug problem, and one person without this problem apply, it's obvious who will get the job."

First offense cases, if they're of the "simple possession variety," may be filed as a misdemeanor or a felony, at the counsel's discretion. A felony conviction brings about a loss of civil rights, such as that of voting. "If someone has had a previous felony conviction of any kind, his sentence is always stiffer," Schenk said.

"The court's role in remedying the drug problem is to point out the impractical consequences involved if you're caught," Schenk stated.

Schenk feels there is a definite "loosening" trend towards marijuana, but he doubts complete legalization. "The alcohol problem is a bad one, but it's hard to sell legislators on the idea that since we tolerate the alcohol problem, we should tolerate the marijuana problem"

Schenk pointed out that one of the problems standing in the way of legalization is that of judging to what degree someone is under the influence of marijuana. "There are ways of showing the influence of alcohol, but it's more difficult to judge the degree of drug influence. Until there is a means of judging influence, there is little probability that marijuana will be legalized. We have to be able to control it through laws."

Weed cancer cure

WASHINGTON UPI—Eight patients dying of cancer in an unidentified medical center showed some temporary relief of symptoms while taking daily doses of peppermint-flavored marijuana extract, the National Institute of Mental Health NIMH said Wednesday.

The doctor who headed the study refuses to be identified, does not plan to publish it and was reluctant even for NIMH to describe his findings, said Dr. Jack D. Blaine of the Institute's center for studies of narcotic and drug abuse.

All the patients are still expected to die. But during the short time they drank the extract, in some cases their depression decreased, appetites picked up and smaller doses of pain killer were needed, Blaine said. The extract was similar to the substance in marijuana cigarettes that may cause "highs" among smokers.

Blaine referred briefly to the study in the government's first annual report to Congress Monday on marijuana and health. In a footnote, Blaine said the study was reported to him in a "personal communication, author's name withheld at his request."

Blaine said in an interview that he considered the research valid but preliminary. "I hope somebody will do something like it. I'm excited about it." But he said he knew of no plans for similar research.

"He didn't want to give us this study," Blaine said. "The place where he was didn't want any research of this kind being done. I can only guess it's because a lot of people would be morally opposed to using this kind of thing on patients." Blaine said all eight patients volunteered and signed consent forms.

The anonymous doctor, working under what Blaine called the "horrible pressures" of official and moral opposition, gave the marijuana extract to four men and four women, aged 20 to 78, every morning for four to 13 days. "Minimal ill effects were noted and potential therapeutic effects were demonstrated," Blaine said the investigator reported in a letter.

Girl suffers major injury

Major injuries were reported in an accident on California Blvd. Tuesday morning involving two students.

Deborah Whearty, 19, from San Luis Obispo, is in the Health Center with various cuts and bruises and a broken pelvis bone suffered when hit by a car driven by Holmer Chandler, 23, at the Campus Way-California Blvd. intersection. Chandler was traveling northbound about 18 mph and failed to observe Miss Whearty in the crosswalk, according to Officer Velvick of the California Highway patrol.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Atlas shrugs—too late?

Editor:

Once upon a time there was a rather small group of inhabitants on a rather large planet, with vast quantities of food, clean air, and potable water. Being quite busy luxuriating in this pleasant environment, the inhabitants never gave thought to the possibility that one day the planet might not seem so large.

The inhabitants decided that the sea, the sky, and the land were convenient disposal sites for all kinds of refuse, and since all three were vast and limitless and could absorb an infinite amount of filth, everything was just dandy. The inhabitants of this Utopia spent half their time polluting and half their time breeding. Because as everyone knows, lots of offspring are necessary for a full and happy life.

Eventually, though, their planet stated to seem not so large—in fact, quite small. People began to notice that there were just too many other people around, crowding and polluting the planet. They decided to spend another 50 years or so studying the problem while breeding themselves into a smaller sar-dine can. Only when hundreds of millions of people were starving like so many rats in a cage, did the survivors realize their mistake. And they had to "make do" with traffic jams, smog, a sky-high crime rate, wars, inflation, etc., with food getting more expensive and less available all the time.

Think about this when you decide to have lots of lovely kiddies, people. They, too, will enjoy the squeeze, and contribute to it. Not hundreds of years from now, but RIGHT NOW. Think.

Candidate gets things straight

Editor:

I must correct some of the statements made in regard to my candidacy for City Council.

I am third year architecture major, not a city planning major or fifth year architecture student as was previously mentioned.

Also, in regard to the 360-X class that is making a land use survey of the creeks—I am working with this class, but I am not enrolled. It is the goal of the class that their findings be submitted to the City Council for further action, and I am not in the position to take any credit for the deeds of the class. I can only voice my enthusiasm.

Fellow archies' letter is 'an insult to intelligence'

Editor:

In Monday's Mustang Daily I read a letter sent by a group of architecture students. In part they suggested that a fellow architecture major Jim King "get out of architecture", as his opinion about color use is "an insult to the intelligence of Cal Poly architecture students".

I take no sides here in the controversy about the colors of the Student Union. But I do take issue with the intolerance shown by these students. Design is a subjective thing, with no fast right or wrong, so naturally there is bound to be disagreement. But when that disagreement degenerates into a personal attack, as in the above letter, then all worthwhile discussion breaks down.

Jim King may be right or wrong in his opinion of the colors. In any case he shows a toleration more admirable than that of his detractors.

Prof wants orderly city

"I'm interested in some kind of orderly city plan for the future, which is adhered to, not varied, when it is felt to be inconvenient," was the reaction of Dr. Charles Dills when asked why he chose to run for the office of city councilman.

Dills, who is a faculty member from the Chemistry Department and a resident of San Luis Obispo for seven years, felt that the need for "a salaried homeowner" to represent the community is long over due. He cited the proposed gas station hassle as an example of the variant that the city plan has experienced.

Dills plans to seek information regarding gas stations in other cities and will compare the demand against the the demand in San Luis Obispo if elected to the council. "I only want to know whether we really need another gas station or not," he said. Dills proposes to re-evaluate the current city plan so that future needs would be encompassed in the plan and the variants would be held down to a minimum.

"I have been an advocate of ecology for the past six years," he said, and questions whether or not the creeks in the city are being used to their best advantage. "Pollution starts when man produces," and he would like to use students as a means to gather information. Dills feels that between the city council, the students and the information that he gathers himself, he will have broadened his knowledge of what the problems are and possible solutions to them.

"I have the same interests in ecology as most of the students do. I will accept the work and responsibility as a councilman."

Ideas aren't definite yet

by Mike Bohl

We are definitely going to have a Summer Quarter, but right now there is not a lot that can be said about it, according to George Beatie, associate dean of special programs.

Plans for Summer Quarter are already being formed, according to Beatie, although a lot of the ideas are still in the planning stages and cannot be classified as definite. Plans are currently being developed to determine the budget for Summer Quarter, allocation of faculty, coordination of payroll services, determining special over-time employment rules and determining which instructors will be allowed to teach.

There are two things that cause faculty limitations, said Beatie. First of all, the budget must be received from the state so we will know how many people we can hire and then, because of college regulations, we have to determine which teachers are eligible to instruct said Beatie. The current system allows a maximum of one-third the available faculty to instruct during Summer Quarter. According to Beatie, instructors can teach 10 of 12 quarters before they must take a quarter vacation and they can work a maximum of seven consecutive quarters before a mandatory vacation is taken.

This year the Summer Quarter will last from July 1 until Sept. 14. "At this time," said Beatie, "we don't know how much money the government will give us, but the summer quarter will be about the same size as it was last year." Summer Quarter 1970 had approximately 3,500 students.

Efforts are being made to make the coming Summer Quarter more like the other quarters in respect to course offerings. In the past, the curriculum has basically been limited to classes that fulfill general education requirements. "The scope of what will be offered depends on what the students want to take," said Beatie.

"We haven't decided if we are going to have a pre-quarter survey," said Beatie, "but I don't think it would be advisable to wait until after Spring Quarter registration in order to find student reactions toward the proposed summer curriculum." "Several people have asked why the Summer Quarter is starting so late this year, the reason is that no funds were budgeted last year in the 1970-71 budget for the Summer Quarter, so it is being budgeted in the 1971-72 budget, in other words, the 1971 Summer Quarter is being paid for by the 1971-72 budget," according to Beatie.

Architecture 'illuminated' topic Davis' presentation

Roger C. Davis, chairman of the Virginia Section of the Illuminating Engineering Society, will present his views on "Lighting and Architecture" in a public address scheduled for 8 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 4 in the Engineering Auditorium.

Davis' lecture is part of scheduled week-long visit on campus during which he will be holding informal seminars with architecture students. His talk on Thursday, however, will be geared for all members of the campus community.

An associate professor at the University of Virginia, Davis' experiences in the field of architecture are many and varied. He also maintains an active private architectural practice in Charlottesville, Va.

Davis' address on Thursday evening is being sponsored jointly by the School of Architecture and Environmental Design and the campus student chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

Persons wishing to attend the architect-illumination engineer's lecture in the Engineering Auditorium are invited to do so. Admission will be free.

Cagers scarf up nonconference enemies

Frosh quell Cuesta, set for Fresno

by Joan Corbett

The freshman basketball team tallied another victory Tuesday night over cross town opponent Cuesta JC in a fast moving game, 96-68. This leaves the Colts with an overall record of 13-1, as well as their second Cougar defeat of the season.

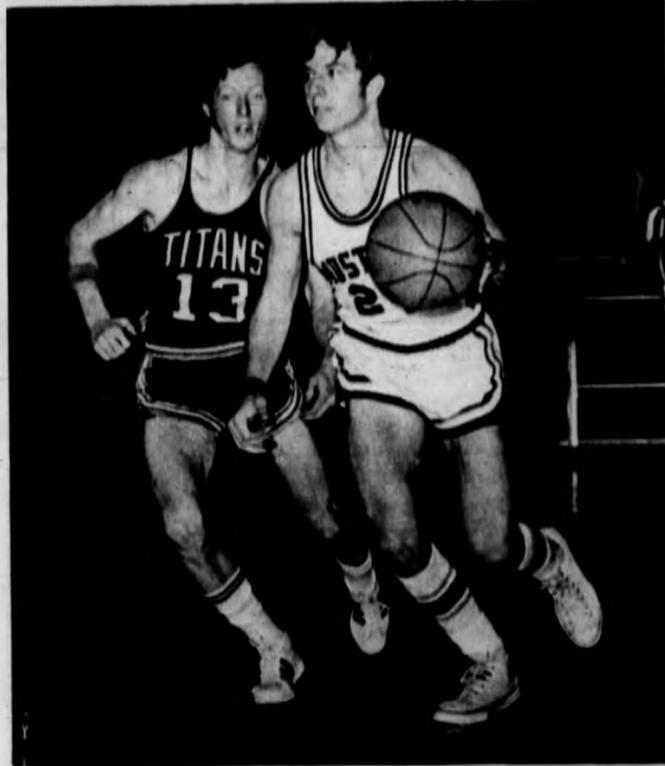

The Colts will see conference play tomorrow night against Fresno State at 8:45 in the Men's Gym.

Behind guard Horace Williams, the Colts established control during the first nine minutes of play with a 30 point lead. Cuesta was unable to attempt shots from the floor, despite having a higher field goal percentage. The Cougars pushed hard toward the end of the first half in an effort to gain on the Colts but were only able to narrow their losing margin to 59-33 when time ran out.

The second half of play found the Colts experimenting with their offense while substituting teams. Once again the Cougars tried to play this up to their advantage but were unsuccessful, thus ending 30 points behind as they had started.

Leading the scoring throughout the game for the Colts was Horace Williams with a total of 19 points. Other double figure scorers were Skip Williams with 17 points, John Parker added 16 points and Ralph Reese with 15. Impressive rebound figures were also acquired by both Skip Williams and John Parker.

Mustang center Robert Jennings holds third in the CCAA in rebounding (14.0) and Jackson is fifth. Dennis d'Autremont is third in field goal percentages and Lew Jackson is third from the free throw line.

Dominguez State falls, Fresno revenge ahead

by Bruce Albert

In a non-league encounter Tuesday night the Mustangs outshot Cal State Dominguez Hills, 107-90. The victory improved the locals record to 10-8 and extended a home floor winning skein to four.

Both statistics will be seriously threatened Thursday night when rival Fresno State makes an appearance in the Men's Gym. In a previous meeting the Mustangs succumbed to the northern power, 90-73.

Dominguez Hills, a late addition to the Mustang's schedule, proved to be a surprisingly competent opponent. Their starting five of three sophomores and two freshmen issued an admirable performance despite their inexperience. Forward Milton Mitchell was particularly impressive as he collected 24 first half points on jump shots from the 25 foot range.

The Mustangs assumed the lead with the game's first score and controlled the tempo throughout. Dennis d'Autremont dropped in 18 points while Billy Jackson added 15 to provide the first half energy. At the halftime buzzer the Mustangs commanded a 37-44 advantage.

The final period of action offered little in the way of new perspectives. The entire Mustang squad saw action as coach Neale Stoner adjusted his lineup.

Billy Jackson paced the second half and final statistics with 28 points and 11 rebounds. d'Autremont saw little action in the final half and finished with 22 tallies.

Mitchell, a 6-4 forward, totaled 33 points for Dominguez Hills. He was followed by Manuel Guerrero with 26.

Although entertaining, the game was poorly played. Turnovers and passive defense were distinct characteristics of this school's play. The contest was little more than a warmup, however, for a more severe test in Thursday's toss-up with Fresno State.

In that encounter the Mustangs will be seeking a revenge to the 90-73 setback the Bulldogs threw at them in Fresno a few weeks ago. In the series between the two schools Fresno has won 35 against the Mustangs' 16.

Leading the Bulldogs will be 6-2 high scoring forward Jerry Pender, who was last week's PCAA Player of the Week. The Mustangs will answer with Billy Jackson, Player of the Week in the CCAA.

Fresno averages 81.8 points a game, against the Mustang average of 81.1.
