Dorm Congress asks for change in present outmoded living policy

The newly formed Dorm Congress, consisting of members of Inter-Hall Council (IHC), representatives from the dorms, and members of Student Tenants Association (STA), met Saturday afternoon.

The group drew up five proposals that they eventually hope will become dorm policy.

The main body, headed by Jim Abernethy, chairman of STA, split up into several small groups, with each group discussing issues such as co-ed dorms, room checks, and IHC code revisions.

The groups proposed five resolutions to be approved by members of the congress.

A 24-hour visitation policy was asked to be instituted as soon as possible. IHC codes were asked to be changed to improve the functioning of the organization. Co-educational living facilities were asked to be established.

Room checks were asked to be made by appointments and the sign in/signout policy be dropped altogether. Quarterly contracts were requested for students staying only one or two quarters paying more than a student staying the entire year.

Voting members, DMC members and anyone who got a petition signed by members of a dorm, passed all resolutions unanimously.

These resolutions will now be taken to Student Affairs Council and IHC with hopes of both groups adding their approval.

The dorm congress will ask that the resolutions be sent to President Robert E. Kennedy, Everett Chandler, dean of students, and Robert Bostrom, director of students. The congress is asking for a reply from each by May 10.

"We (STA) have gone through every legal channel and gotten zero. Hopefully these resolutions will bring about some changes," Abernethy said. "Even if the administration turns us down, at least there should be some concrete reasons. After knowing these reasons we can work from there."

Common sense is rally's goal

Common sense in government is the proposed goal of a political rally tonight, according to Gene McClure, one of the organizers of the Cal Poly Common Sense Rally.

The rally will take place in the campus Beef Pavillion at 7 p.m. McClure, Steve Prevel and Joe Pauley, the rally organizers, said it is to be held on behalf of Robin Baggett and Denny Johnson, candidates for ASI offices, although other candidates will be allowed to speak.

The rally comes one week after a Students Rights Alliance Convention that nominated candidates for offices and agreed to platform stands.

Apollo's paint causes worry

by EDWARD K. DeLONG

Space Center, Houston (UPI) — Engineers who worked all night on the problem flashed the word to the speeding Apollo 16 astronauts Monday that the mysterious flaking of paint off their moonship would not keep them from attempting a landing in the moon's mountains.

The spacemen got the word about the time they passed the halfway mark en route to the moon and just after they awoke from a fitful first night's rest on the 12-day, $445 million mission.

After mission commander John W. Young and his two space-rookie companions, Thomas K. Mattingly and Charles M. Duke, breakfasted on orange juice and sandwiches, capsule communicator Anthony W. England relayed the engineers' conclusions and asked them to look out the window.

"We don't really anticipate a problem there," England said. "It turns out, looking back, there was a history of one batch of bad paint and they sort of think it's just the paint blistering up."

Young, making his fourth space flight, peered out the hatch of the command ship Casper at the side of the moon lander Orion and reported that the flakes were continuing to fly off, but had thinned out since Sunday night. He described the side of the aluminum lander as looking like "Somebody glued a bunch of strips of grass to that thermal shield."

Eight hours after launch from Cape Kennedy Sunday, Young had described the peeling paint as resembling "shredded wheat." For a time the mystery of what was causing the flaking cast doubt over whether the spacemen would be given a "go" for a landing Thursday afternoon in the Descartes region of the moon's mountains.

Their mission, next to last in the Apollo series, is the only flight to try for a landing in the mountainous areas that cover 70 per cent of the lunar surface.

If they succeed in landing, Young and Duke will spend 72 hours on the surface, using an electric-powered lunar rover for three excursions over the pocked terrain of up to seven hours each, and gather up to 100 pounds of rocks before heading back to earth and an April 28 splashdown.

The astronauts and the engineers on the ground were so concerned about the peeling paint when they first discovered it Sunday night that Young and Duke crawled into the Orion 24 hours ahead of schedule to check it out.

They didn't find what they feared most, a leak in some of the moonship's fuel or oxygen lines.

Their flight plan called for another check of Orion late Monday but Apollo mission director Chester M. Lee told UPI that the initial examination removed any doubts about the airworthiness of Orion.

"The question now is why did it happen," Lee said. He said two panels identical to the ones on Orion had been flown from Cape Kennedy to Grumman Aerospace Corp. in New York, where the lander was built, for tests to try to answer the question.

Budget group appointed

BY STEVE EVERETT

A special Associated Students Incorporated committee to investigate alternatives for determining budget priorities has been established by ASI Pres. Pete Evans.

"This committee is the result of failure of Student Affairs Council and Finance Committee members to do anything," said Evans. "SAC members come to the Wednesday night meetings, but don't do a thing outside of the meeting. Important issues meant for student consumption are sent to SAC and from there it should be disseminated down through the links of student government, but it's not."

In a memorandum to Robin Baggett, Chairman of Finance Committee, Evans wrote, "I am feeling a little pessimistic about the direction finance committee is taking. All the 10 new members made commitments at the time of their appointment, yet few of those have materialized."

Baggett is in support of the new committee but said if it would have been done earlier it would have been great, but now it might be too late to serve its purpose to accomplish anything, due to the fact that the budget composition has already begun.

"We need the input from the student in order to function as a representative body," said Baggett.

The input might come as a result of actions taken by Evans' appointed chairman for the new committee, Ray Righetti. According to Righetti the committee wants to find out the student view on budget priorities.

"Instead of laying all the priorities on Finance Committee decisions, we want the students to express where they think the budgeted money should go," Righetti said.

"We'll receive our input from a very general student poll. A computer will pick at random five per cent of the student body making sure there is a proper percentage from each school. These people will be approached on a personal basis and asked to co-operate with the poll," he added. "Results will probably be

Young encountered a problem with the surface paint of their Apollo spacecraft, but have been given the go-ahead for an attempted landing in the moon's mountains.

'Lies' cause infuriation

Editor:

In reply to Student Rights Alliance advocates Cheryl Ruffler, Dave Pollock, Steve Leger:

I am infuriated by the blatant lies and unfounded implications you are prevaricating to influence the student body. A quick examination of the facts will clear up any question about the mysterious SRA convention hoax.

FACT ONE: The SRA announced its convention in Mustang Daily, stating that the proceedings would be held to select and endorse candidates for the ASI elections, and to for-

Students seek air war's end

The CU Plaza will be the site today for a meeting to discuss the Air War Initiative effort in this area. The meeting is scheduled for 10 a.m. with a teach-in to follow.

The purpose of the initiative is to allow the people of California a voice in the matter of escalated air warfare in Vietnam.

Should the initiative be entered on the November ballot it would mean the people of this state would have a choice as to whether or not they wish funds from this state to support the aerial assault of Vietnam. Some 600,000 signatures are required to enter the initiative.

All interested persons are invited to attend and lend support to this initiative program.

mulate a platform. The entire student body was urged to participate. The people would speak.

FACT TWO: Approximately

300 plus students turned out. The majority (majority—that's the key word) favored one particular candidate for president. They were told that a representative of their position couldn't speak—SRA technically suddenly uncovered in anticipation of situation. They were handed a platform stating the SRA's views. Although the majority disagreed

'Be open-minded, but skeptical of all who talk'

Editor:

In response to Joe Pauley and his "left-wing love" article of April 18, I sincerely hope that Mr. Pauley and the rest of the people at Cal Poly who subscribe to his philosophy read my message carefully. Hopefully, you are at Cal Poly to get a full education. To be fully educated is much more than just knowing where the pig's anus is located or how to design another "sturdy" college union. One of the most important factors in education is acquiring the ability to objectively form an opinion based on truth, (it's not easy). To do this, it is necessary to destroy misconceptions, peel off labels, out through meaningless rhetoric, move beyond politics and get on down to gut level analysis of the facts. Common sense alone does not always get to the truth. Smarten up Mr. Pauley, and look at men with various aspects of this platform, they were told by the SRA gods that it couldn't be changed.

FACT THREE: Rather than participate in this political farce, the majority chose to maintain its convictions and leave the proceedings.

FACT FOUR: (and this is the big one, folks) Why didn't the SRA adhere to the wishes of the majority? Because they weren't the right people! Very simple... very un-democratic... extremely outrageous.

The majority is silent no longer! We have spoken and were denied.

Georgiana Hayes

like Bobby Seale and other so-called "left-wing radicals" as just men with messages. Be open-minded, but skeptical of all who talk; instructors, media representatives, politicians, police, and you may be surprised to discover how many lies you have been living.

Your type of mentality, which is prevalent throughout Cal Poly and America, has put our country where she is today. You probably don't catch what I mean so take the message and get a real education.

Boycott advocated as a way to aid TG matter

Editor:

Concerning the ban of TG's by the city council, if the students of San Luis Obispo have no say with the local government, then they must get the businessmen to speak for them. If San Luis doesn't want the students to drink, then the students should buy their liquor outside of town. Even with only a 75 per cent boycott, the liquor stores would soon feel the pressure. Perhaps then the city council would listen.

I am not condoning the action of any students at the TGs, but merely pointing out that if a person's driveway is blocked the car can be towed away. If a police car is egged then the police have an obligation to find and arrest the guilty parties. Conversely, the government has no right to restrict assembly of

Petition to save shrinking coast

by WARNER CHABOT

Norway has stopped all construction on her coastline. Oregon's entire coast is in public ownership. Why? Because their respective governments have realized the irreplaceable value of this natural heritage.

And what of California's coastline? In the past hundred years, our magnificent coast has shrunk from 1,062 miles to less than 200 miles of open land accessible to the public. In this same period of time, we have destroyed over 63 per cent of our estuaries. These estuaries, such as the one at Morro Bay, are the primary feeding grounds for the thousands of species of birds that make yearly migrations down the coast.

Why has this happened?....because among the corporate powers that dominate our state, this land is looked upon as one thing—real estate (perhaps the most valuable real estate in the world). To many a realtor and developer, it represents an irresistible opportunity to fatten up the bank account; its destiny is to be carved up and sold off for building sites.

On the Big Sur coast, new houses appear every month and further up the coast big ranches are being purchased by ambitious developers, precursors of the kind of urbanization that long ago overtook the southern coast. And what about our local coast? Well for starters, there are plans for a Knott's Berry Farm—type development near Cambria and plans have already been drawn up for a city of 60,000 near Hearst Castle. And now that Vandenberg Air Force base has been given the Mars shuttle contract you can be sure that the great land rush will be on to make secondary homes for those 30,000 people that must be brought in.

However, it is not only promoters who have enjoyed driving or hiking down Highway one. Californians by the thousands have realized the consequences of losing our fantastic coast. The result is a grass-roots campaign organized by the same people that saved San Francisco Bay from massive development a few years ago.

This campaign is the result of a coalition of over 300 organizations ranging from the Sierra Club to the Western Surfing Association. The name is the California Coastal Alliance.

The Alliance demonstrated their faith in our governmental system by introducing coastal protective legislation for the past three years in our State Legislature. And for three years in a row, our legislature has shown that they are more responsive to the highly paid lobbyists of PG&E and Standard Oil than to the people of California. For the reasons, just get a copy of Ralph Nadar's study on "Land Use and Power in California". It gives documented evidence of how the major land owners (Boise Cascade, Tenneco, Standard Oil, etc.), have consistently dominated major decisions made in Sacramento.

The Coastal Alliance has seen these powers block their attempts in the past and feel they will continue to block meaningful legislation in the future. That is why they are now taking their plea directly to the people with the initiative. By collecting 500,000 signatures statewide, we can place our coastal legislation on the November ballot for the People of California to decide. In San Luis Obispo County alone, we must collect 12,000 signatures within a month to meet our quota before the deadline. If you are interested in helping circulate petitions contact me at the Mustang Daily office or call Carole Bodine at 544-3731. Petitions are also available in CU 103.

Our opponents (the California Real Estate Association) has claimed that our legislation would be "tantamount to a new form of government". I agree, it would buy a type of government that California has not seen for a long time....it's called government by the people!

people as long as the people are law abiding. Only when things get out of hand should the police be called and then they should only arrest the person responsible.

If the students feel that their rights are being violated then they have no recourse but to hit back where it hurts the most, in the businessman's pocket. Boycott San Luis Obispo liquor stores.

Teachers have lives too

State colleges have link to legislative processes

by BILL MATTOS

The stereotyped teacher many years ago would probably wear thick glasses, stand tall, walk erect, and would literally live his life in the classroom.

Today's instructor is not just involved with teaching. Hiking, wrestling, traveling, and hunting are only a few of the extracurricular activities of many instructors and administrators on campus.

The Interhall Council (IHC) is making it possible for students living in dorms to meet with these people outside of the classroom in order to learn about the many facets of their lives and adventures.

The Residence Hall Student Faculty Forum Committee is forming within IHC and one administrator has already spoken in Sequoia Hall.

In order to see how the students living in the dorms would respond to these speakers, IHC asked Everett Chandler, dean of students, to be the first speaker.

He spoke to an alert and interested crowd of about 30 students. Chandler had back-packed up and down the Sierra Mountains. He related his experiences through beautiful slides, according to Brad Bettler, IHC member and coordinator of this speakers series.

When asked about the speaker series idea Chandler said, "It gives the students a chance to meet a lot of people who have done all kinds of things."

Within the next three weeks, the committee plans to send letters to the faculty and administrators on campus to get their reaction to the whole speakers series approach.

Bettler said they will be asked if they are interested to speak on a subject of their choice.

A filing system will be implemented and will include the names of every available speaker and the subject he is interested in speaking about.

"We are trying to expedite a system whereby the halls that want speakers will be able to get them faster through the filing system," Bettler said.

Dorm speakers are nothing new. Many halls have had people speak on a variety of subjects. An example is Vaughan Hitchcock, the wrestling coach. Recently, he and some of his wrestlers went to Muir Hall and demonstrated various wrestling techniques.

The new speakers series idea will make the whole approach much simpler.

The State College Trustees have effectively left the students out of any decision making process concerning the state college educational system.

This is the view of ASI Pres. Pete Evans. There is one link between student body officers and the legislature, Joe Hay, the legislative advocate for the California State College system.

"The reason we have Joe in Sacramento," said Evans, "is because we don't have any other direct line of communication with the legislators."

Hay relays information to student body presidents of all state colleges, concerning bills before the legislature, and assists in introducing bills initiated by the student body presidents.

"I'm very happy with his work," said Evans.

"Joe helped kill a tuition bill intended for graduate students and is presently working on bills affecting appropriations for the Educational Opportunity Program, use of parking fine money, and non-resident student fees."

Hay is supporting a bill giving pay raises to faculty and opposing the tuition bill for state college students.

Practically working out of his car, Hay is funded for his services by a treasury of dues paid by each state college. "Hay would welcome some help," said Evans, "and we are trying to establish internship programs where students could go to Sacramento and work with him and the legislators."

That is the picture drawn by Guy Thomas of the Graphic Communications Department during College Hour Thursday in a talk about the use of computers in the graphic arts industry.

Thomas related the history of computerized typography, starting around 1960 when the process was first used in the newspaper business to justify lines of type produced by a linotype.

As linotype was phased out, Thomas said, photocomposition

Ford recalls '72 autos

Detroit (UPI)—Ford Motor Co. Monday recalled virtually every 1972 Ford Torino and Mercury Montego to attach retainer plates to keep rear wheels from falling off if the bearings wear out.

A total of 396,000 cars were involved in the recall "dating back to job one of the 1972 models," a spokesman said.

Gordon H. Robertson, service engineering manager, said the company received reports of Torino-Montego rear axle bearings deterioration caused by a combination of factors affecting bearing life. Under extreme conditions, he said, an axle shaft might become disengaged from the rear axle housing, possible without adequate warning.

A spokesman said there had been five reports of wheels falling off the car and causing some vehicle damage when the car fell down on the suspension. He said, however, there had been no collisions with other vehicles or other objects.

Ford said owners of the affected vehicles would be notified to take their cars to a dealership for installation of a set of auxiliary retainer plates that would insure audible warning in event of failure, and prevent the wheel from falling off.
