NORTH AMERICAN ROCKWELL EXECUTIVE TO BE COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

John R. Moore, vice president of the North American Rockwell Corporation and president of its Aerospace and Systems Group, will deliver the address at Cal Poly's 62nd annual Commencement June 15. In announcing the guest speaker for the occasion, President Robert E. Kennedy disclosed that many changes and innovations will be made in this year's schedule of Commencement events.

The traditional Senior Breakfast will become a Senior Brunch starting at 11:00 a.m. and concluding about 1:00 p.m. Time for the Commencement exercises proper will be changed from early afternoon to 4:00 p.m. The change is being made to avoid the mid-day heat which has been particularly unpleasant for audiences seated in Mustang Stadium's metal bleachers for the traditional ceremonies. The Senior Ball, which for years has been held on the night before Commencement, this year will be held on Saturday night following the ceremony.

A major innovation will be the holding of an academic procession in which members of the college faculty and staff will participate in academic costume. This will be the first such procession at a Cal Poly Commencement and the second in the history of the college, the first having been at President Kennedy's inauguration in April.

Professor at Washington University

Moore joined North American Aviation in 1948 and directed development of its Autonetics Division from its establishment in 1955 to 1966. In 1960 he was named president of that division. Immediately prior to joining North American, Moore was associate professor of mechanics and director of the Dynamical Control Laboratory at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo. Previously, he had supervised development of gunfire computing and tracking devices for aircraft, servo-mechanisms, gyro-stabilized equipment, and simulators during nine years at the General Electric Company.

The North American Rockwell executive served from 1948 to 1956 as visiting associate professor of engineering at University of California at Los Angeles. A graduate of Washington University, he received that university's Outstanding Engineering Graduate award in 1960 and its Alumni Citation in 1964.

At the Autonetics Division Moore helped pioneer development of guidance and control equipment for today's intercontinental ballistic missiles and atomic-powered, missile-carrying submarines. He has the US Navy Meritorious Public Service Citation for his contributions to the Polaris program, and the 1962 Thurlow Award of the Institute of Navigation for "outstanding contribution to the science of navigation."

CAMPUS "DEMONSTRATION" RESULTS IN OUTDOOR AMPHITHEATER

A student "demonstration" contrasting with many reported in national news media in recent days has resulted in a campus amphitheater for Cal Poly. Developed near the Theater and Grand Avenue, the project has been financed and constructed by the college's Associated Students, Inc., with much of the impetus provided by students of the School of Architecture.

Actual work on the amphitheater was completed by members of the student body under the direction of Fred Hock, a senior architectural engineering major. Their efforts resulted in design and construction of a stage 56 feet wide and 20 feet deep which is surrounded by a surface of red brick. An expanse of grass lawn capable of accommodating audiences of up to 1,500 persons fronts the elevated redwood stage.

ASI President Rush Hill, himself a senior majoring in architecture, believes the new facility will be a valuable asset to cultural life of the college. Hill said last week a project such as this one could only happen at Cal Poly. "The degree of cooperation between students, administrators, faculty, and even businessmen in nearby communities has just been fantastic. Not many colleges could complete this kind of project. They simply can't develop this degree of cooperation," Hill continued.

Preliminary and final designs for the new amphitheater were developed by Ron Sakahara and Doug Danielsen and working drawings were developed by Ron Briggs. All three are architecture majors. Hock, whose responsibility on the project was the same as that of a contractor on any larger construction effort, credited Ron Shimamoto, Gordon Bassett, and Dick Nielsen, also architecture majors, with assisting him with supervision of the construction work. Members of the work force, which spent much of its free time during March and April on the job, were pledge members of SCARAB, an honorary society for architecture students; Blue Key national honorary service society; and Alpha Zeta national honorary society for students of agriculture.
