It works sort of like the carrot before the horse; the orange before the landscape architecture student. Vicki Schmedding demonstrates the "personal energy conservation device" she constructed entirely out of plant material for Richard Zweifel's class for an appreciative crowd Wednesday.

Wear a plant, conserve energy

by Maria Casas
Staff Writer

Green is in! How about going to the beach looking sharp with a fishing pole and umbrella made of leaves and bamboo sticks? Or maybe a leafy scarf or hat for that special date?

Students in Advanced

Plant Composition constructed these devices to preserve personal energy with the use of plants.

Associate professors Richard Zweifel and Dale Sutliff of Landscape Architecture developed this exercise to break the ice in the class and lead students into awareness of the relationship between plant composition and landscape architecture.

The patio by the old library was filled by a chorus of laughs as students stopped to see the green contraptions and listen to their inventor's explanations of their energy use.

Lowell Kline invented a game he wore on his head. It consisted of plants that were woven together with flowers attached. When the time came to play he just took the hat off, removed the flowers and flattened the rest on the ground. Each person would get six Complaints about bicycles blocking access ramps at Cal Poly dropped last quarter as a result of the Bicycle Patrol's new policy on impounding illegally parked bikes.

Since last October, Bicycle Patrol members and the Public Safety Department have ordered maintenance workers to cut the locks and impound illegally parked bicycles. Cyclists must pay an $8 fine to recover their bikes.

Public Safety Investigator Wayne Hall said the department doesn't keep statistics on how many bicycles are impounded. "I'd estimate maybe six to a dozen (per quarter) have to be taken from ramps, buildings and walkways," he added.

While it is illegal to park bicycles in buildings and on lawns, bicycles chained to the railings on access ramps caused the most problems at the start of fall quarter.

"The problem is when you have a student in a non-motorized wheel chair and the student must grab a railing to pull himself up the incline," Hall said.

With bicycles blocking the ramps, some disabled students had to call for help, he explained.

A second problem rose when the Bicycle Patrol was cut to two members during fall quarter because of lack of funding. Hall said the patrol was unable to look for illegally parked bicycles in areas other than the handicapped access ramps and concentrated on clearing the ramps.

However, the Public Safety Department recently received a $5,022 grant from the Parking Committee specifically to increase the Bicycle Patrol program. Hall expects the department to hire new patrol members and begin policing other areas of the campus.

Student revives Women's Collective

by Mary Hennessy
Staff Writer

The Women's Collective, a once-defunct discussion group, is being revived on campus by a graduate student who feels women need a place to voice their opinions.

"My goal is to start and organize the collective so that women can discuss issues in a supportive environment," said Vivian Sudney, adding that "The women who attend the meetings will decide the direction" in which the group will move.

Sudney decided to create the collective when she discovered the previous Women's Collective had disbanded.

"When I came to California from Maryland three years ago there was a collective group at Cal Poly that I knew of because my sister went here," she said.

Sudney began publicizing for the collective's first meeting after Dr. Willie Coleman, Assistant Director of the Activities Planning Center agreed to help her find an advisor.

Support group helps cope with drinking problems

by Michael Weckler
Staff Writer

Alcohol is a problem for Cindy. She doesn't show it, but alcohol is affecting her life — not because she drinks, but because her husband Bob does.

Cal Poly's Alcohol Support Group is concerned with helping people such as Cindy, not a real person, cope with their problems.

"Until recently the family member was overlooked because the alcoholic has the obvious problem," said group co-leader Maureen Shea. The program is intended to give members a "better understanding of the disease of alcoholism" and how it can affect family members.

Shea, a Child Development major, supervised the Health Education Department's Alcohol Education team last year. She wanted to start a program for family members because of personal reasons. "My dad is a recovering alcoholic," she said.

Shea approached Dr. James Nash, Director of Health Services, with her idea. Nash suggested that she ask Joan Cirone, a nurse and counselor at the Health Center, for help. "I knew we'd need a trained counselor," Shea said. Cirone agreed to help.

The group works best with eight or nine members. Shea said, "but if we have 20 people come, we'll form two groups." Anyone with this type of problem is welcome.

"These people usually tend to not talk about their feelings," she said, adding loved ones of alcoholics don't trust their feelings. The thrust of the meeting is to provide a comfortable atmosphere where members can share their feelings in an unstructured way. All meetings and the members names are confidential, Shea said.

The loved ones of alcoholics sometimes take on certain behavior patterns to cope with their problem, Shea said, and this behavior is often harmful to the individual involved.

"How they relate to people is directly linked to the problem," she said, adding that sometimes these people become overachievers or even alcoholics themselves.

One type of behavior pattern is "enabling," usually assumed by a spouse, Shea said. Enablers will telephone the workplace for the alcoholic to make excuses for his absence.

Jazz society awards Poly dixieland musician

Architecture major Joe McHale receives a $500 scholarship from Central Coast Hot Jazz Society President O.P. Chase at a dixieland festival.

A junior architecture major won a $500 scholarship from the Central Coast Hot Jazz Society toward the improvement of his musical ability.

Joseph McHale won the Society's annual scholarship after the group reviewed a number of applications. He was given the award at the group's Dixieland Jubilee by the Sea, held at Pismo Beach each October.

McHale's interest in music began in elementary school, playing piano and trumpet. He has performed in many types of musical groups and has played trumpet with the Cal Poly Sticks, Strings, and Hot Air Dixieland Jazz Band.

"I feel that to be a complete musician and listener, one must be exposed to these forms to enjoy to the fullest any one of the many music forms," McHale said.

McHale's goals are to perform musically on a semi-professional basis after graduation and to obtain a minor degree in music. He will use his scholarship to purchase textbooks on music theory, tapes, records, and private music lessons.

The Society's music scholarships are open to anyone and further education and perpetuation of the traditional music art form (sometimes called dixieland) is a priority to the Society. The group stages monthly music sessions for the public and currently has a membership of over 1,200 persons.

CPR training to be given

Instructor training for CPR (Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation) is available through the American Red Cross. Registration is being accepted now for the next class, which begins Monday, Jan. 24 at Sierra Vista Hospital Auditorium.

Classes will be held from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m., for seven sessions, running January 24, 25, 26, 31, and February 1, 3, and 4. The instructor will be French Morgan.

Those who complete the course will be certified to teach the technique of com-binning mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and external cardiac compression to restore breathing and heart-beat in cardiac arrest victims.

This instruction is available to anyone holding a current CPR certificate from American Red Cross of American Heart Association.

There is a fee of $10.00 to cover the cost of text materials and use of equipment.

Register at the American Red Cross office, 1216 Morro Street, San Luis Obispo, between noon and 4 p.m.

Fellowship program funds minority graduate study

The CIC Minorities Fellowships Program will award more than 50 four-year fellowships in 1983 to minority students seeking doctorates in a wide variety of fields in the social sciences, humanities, and the sciences and engineering.

The fellowships provide full tuition and an annual stipend of at least $5,500 for each of four years. Sponsored by the Committee on Institutional Cooperation (CIC), the consortium of the Big Ten universities and the University of Chicago, the fellowships may be used at any one of the 11 CIC universities to which recipients have been admitted.

Students from underrepresented minority groups who intend to pursue studies leading to a Ph.D. in the social sciences, humanities, and science fields covered by the program are eligible to apply. A total of 25 fellowships are available in the social sciences with about a dozen each awarded in the humanities and the sciences programs.

The deadline for applications for Fall, 1983 is January 15, but students are urged to apply as early as possible. A unique one-step application procedure combines on a single form application both for the fellowship and for admission to any of the CIC Universities.

In operation since 1978, the CIC Minorities Fellowships Program has now become the largest privately-funded comprehensive minorities fellowship program in the nation. To date almost 200 students from all sections of the country have received fellowships to begin their graduate studies at the various CIC universities. Major funding for the program has been provided by the Lilly Endowment, Inc., The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, and the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation.

Detailed information about the program can be obtained by writing to the CIC Minorities Fellowships Program, 111 Kirkwood Hall, Indiana University, Bloomington, IN 47405. Prospective applicants from outside Indiana may also call toll-free at 800-475-4420.

The universities at which the fellowships may be used are the University of Chicago, the University of Illinois, Indiana University, the University of Iowa, the University of Michigan, Michigan State University, the University of Minnesota, Northwestern University, the Ohio State University, Purdue University, and the University of Wisconsin.

circles, with the object being to put rocks or berries in everyone else's circle. The game conserves energy because you can always carry it along and not have to run around wasting energy while looking for a game to play. When the game was over Kline folded it up and wore it.

There were a variety of hats and other dress apparel. Moss earmuffs could be used to conserve body heat and a scarf made of parts of a willow tree could also be used as a hat when raised above the forehead. A hiking hat consisted of antennas high enough to warn one of trees overhead, a back panel to keep flies off the neck and a long hanging tail so a pet dog can follow the hiker and not get lost.

One invention was big and flat with yellow flowers. Its uses were many: blanket, shade, luggage, tent, wedding veil, hammock, door mat, hang-glider and other suggestions from the crowd.

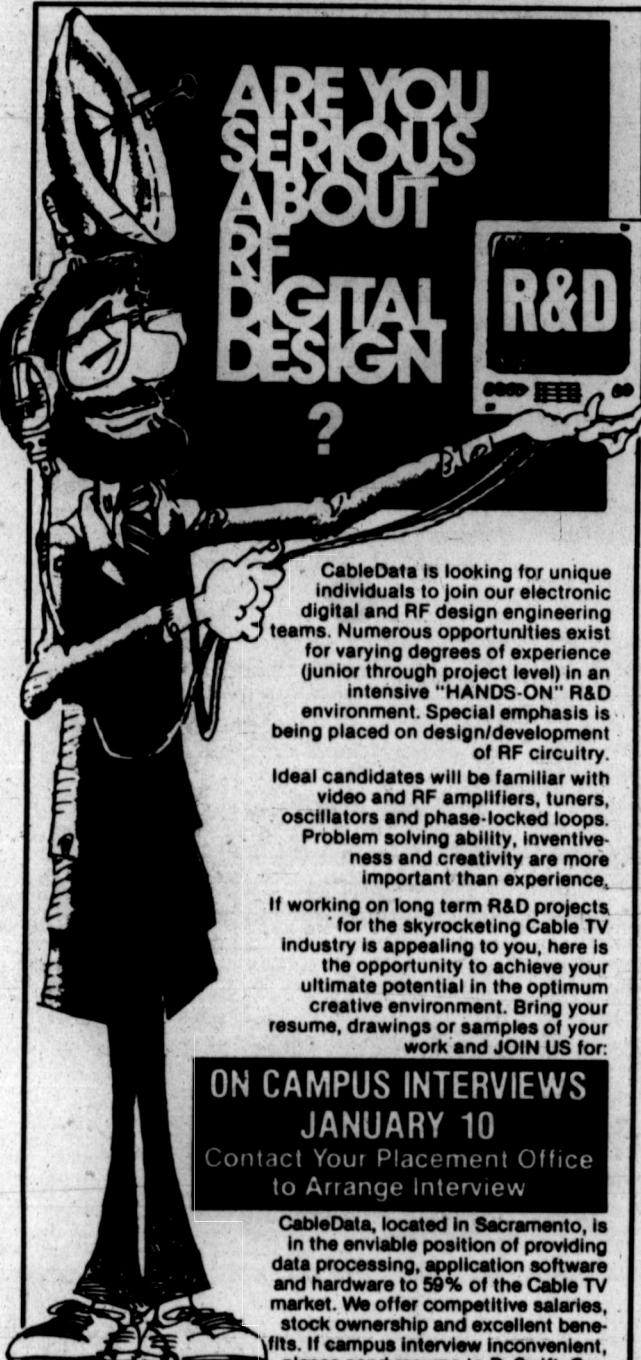

Two Cal Poly business school professors are the authors of a new book intended to give students and managers a systematic introduction to the design, structure, and management of organizations.

Authors Rolf E. Rogers and Robert H. McIntire are members of the Management Department, which McIntire heads. Their book, Organization and Management Theory, is designed for both undergraduate and graduate courses in management and organization theory. It is published by John Wiley and Sons, New York.

Rogers joined the Cal Poly faculty in 1975. This is his fifth book. A graduate of University of Washington, he became internationally known in the mid-1970's for his research into organizational and managerial stress.

McIntire, who came to Cal Poly in 1977, earned degrees at University of Washington, Oklahoma State University, and University of Colorado. He has lectured to government and private audiences on leadership, executive development, systems engineering, systems management, project management, organization design, and organization behavior.

New policy adds to ramp access

"You'll see some new innovations coming out," he said. "We'll be hiring two, three or four Bicycle Patrol members specifically to keep the bike lanes clear and the pedestrian lanes free of bikes."

Keeping the handicapped access ramps clear will continue to be the patrol's first priority this quarter, Hall stressed. Patrol members are not eager to cut locks and impound bicycles, but will authorize it if bicycles are blocking access for students.

"Usually it's the bike that's been tagged and warned again and again that gets impounded," Hall said.

Most students claiming an impounded bicycle aren't angry with patrol members, Hall said. "People feel pretty rotten when their bikes are taken from the handicapped racks anyway. When they think about it, they realize they were pretty selfish."

Collective returns

"I just started this thing so I don't know what the response will be or what to expect at the meeting," she said. "I was considering speakers and maybe comedians, but it will be entirely up to the group."

Sudney emphasized that the club is not solely for feminists.

"The group is open to all women whether they are feminist or not," she explained. "In the past, more feminists have come out, but (the collective) will support women's issues first and feminist issues second."

"If it doesn't exist when I leave, I at least hope that what I have done will encourage someone else to take the initiative and perhaps start another one," she said.

The Women's Collective will meet Tuesday, Jan. 11 at 8 p.m. in University Union Room 216.

Program aids loved ones of alcoholics

"They don't allow the alcoholic to face the consequences of his drinking," she added.

Another type of behavior is adopted by the "rescuer," Shea said. The "rescuer" is "someone who always tries to patch things up. They are always there when someone needs them," she added. Rescuers are the type of individual who always tries to get things under control.

As these people grow older, they often question the way they live their lives. The ways they had of relating to people and themselves no longer work.

unattended to," she said. Most of these people are not emotional cripples, Shea said, "but they can benefit from the group."

The main idea of the group is to help members get "a better understanding of themselves... help them get more in touch with their feelings, and help them express those feelings," she emphasized.

Meetings will be held every Tuesday from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Those interested may contact Joan Cirone at the Health Center, Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., or Maureen Shea, on Mondays from noon to 3 p.m. at the Health Center, Ex. 1211.

Cal Poly loses to No. 1 Hawaii

Oh, but what a try

Photos by David Middlecamp

Home 15, Visitor 5.

There it stood, in bright red lights on the scoreboard. And there also stood 1,156 fans showing their appreciation of the outcome in the first game of the Northwest Region NCAA Division I Volleyball Finals.

It was Cal Poly versus the No. 1 nationally ranked University of Hawaii in the Main Gymnasium. The Mustangs, who had lost miserably to the Rainbow-Wahines a month earlier, had a 1-0 lead in games. An upset? Well, there was hope.

But on the December 11, 1982 evening, Hawaii would not lose another game. The Rainbow-Wahines, led by returning All-America standout Deitre Collins, came back to win the ensuing three games 8-15, 12-15, 6-15 and the region title.

Please see page 7

The suspense of the Mustangs' Big Match against Hawaii is caught in a moment, Wendy Hooper (left), Lynn Kessler and Tina Taylor (right) watching a Rainbow-Wahine shot as if hoping the ball may disappear.

Any doubts that Cal Poly's season has indeed ended is dispelled as Equipment Technician Dick McMath takes down the net.

Women's basketball tonight

Dry spell ends as Poly hosts Fresno

by Mike Mathison
Staff Writer

The last time the Cal Poly women's basketball team played at home there were still 41 days left in 1982. We are now six days into 1983. You don't have to be a math major to realize that's a long time.

"I find it very difficult to schedule here," head coach Marilyn McNeil said. "I have to hassle with both men's basketball and wrestling. Three years ago I tried to schedule for the first weekend in December and I got kicked out for a high school wrestling tournament. I haven't been back since. The big northern swing is also for the families of the kids we recruit, so they can see them play. I started scheduling for next year, and I've done it again. I do find it easier."

The Mustangs are 4-9 entering tonight's 7 p.m. game with Fresno State. Poly is coming off an impressive 99-41 win over Hawaii Pacific in the Hawaii Invitational. The Mustangs were 1-2 in Hawaii, losing to Wayland Baptist (73-58) and Oklahoma City University (86-79).

Fresno State, under second-year coach Bob Spencer, is 8-2. The two teams played at the Cal State Hayward Tournament in early December. The Bulldogs prevailed 59-49.

Things are different this time around. The Mustangs have lost one player and Fresno State two since the December 4 meeting. The Bulldogs are without the services of 6-foot-1 senior starting center Patty DeLotto and 5-7 freshman guard Trish McNutt. DeLotto scored 12 points in the first meeting.

Senior Pat O'Donnell breaks down opponent Dale Krzmarzick of Oregon State on the way to a 6-3 win in the 150-pound weight class. O'Donnell better his record to 11-3, at least securing his no. 5 ranking in the nation. Cal Poly beat Oregon State 28-9 Tuesday and faces Oregon University tonight after the basketball game.

Volleyballers lose last match only to the best

Hawaii eventually beat the USC Trojans, 3-2, to win the National Championship.

In the third game of the match the Mustangs held an 11-8 advantage. Four points would give the hosts a 2-1 lead in games and one game away from the biggest win in Cal Poly history. But the Mustangs could not reach point No. 12 until the visitors had taken a 14-11 lead.

In game four, the Rainbow-Wahines jumped to a 7-1 lead. Poly closed it to 9-6, but it was as close as the Mustangs could get. Head coach Mike Wilton and his Lady Mustangs finished the year at 29-10, tying UCLA, Purdue University and Pacific for fifth in the nation.

Marching on

The political cartoon shows President Reagan walking down a street surrounded by secret servicemen, while saying to an aide, "If we keep on with the arms race, after a while the Russian economy will collapse." Behind him business store fronts crumble under the load of "Closed" signs while a group of protestors call for jobs.

The cartoon does not exaggerate. Reagan's obstinance in preserving his massive defense spending plan while destroying social programs borders on fanaticism. Now, with a possible deficit of over $200 billion dollars next year he wants another $30 billion cut from non-defense programs in order to keep the deficit that much lower.

The mark of a good society is that those who are financially comfortable support and help those who are less fortunate. Reagan, on the other hand, clings to an archaic notion of a society in which everyone is able to take care of themselves. He has not learned that a "free market" died in the late 1800's and thinks that by rewarding business with tax cuts, business will help society by hiring more people as it reinvests its savings.

Thus, he continues his quest for military superiority by disregarding the individual human and social costs, blind to the havoc and destruction his policies create. He ignores inequitable tax laws that allow rich taxpayers and corporations to escape a fair share of federal taxation. It appears that there are some people who can take care of themselves. Unfortunately they don't need the care, and the ones who do are being ignored in hopes they will go away.

No one wants a huge federal deficit. But Reagan's sacrificing social programs for a ballooning white elephant military budget does not serve the ends of a healthy society. Such extremes may cost Reagan his reelection in 1984, and assist the rise of a more realistic presidential administration. Reagan and his administration are discouraging the evolution of a society aware of its problems and the future but are instead intent on following policies that may hasten the destruction of the one that exists.

The Last Word:

Blaming Reagan

Ain't it funny how we blame all of our problems on the President?

We never mention what it is exactly that Reagan has done to bring on this recession, but he is the President, so it must be his fault.

Never mind the fact that for 20 out of the last 21 years Congress has spent more money than it had. Ignore the tremendous impact that this has had on our economy. Ignore the Constitution, which holds Congress responsible for taxing and spending bills. Ignore the role that foreign competition has played in ruining our economy. Ignore OPEC. Ignore the mistakes of past Congresses, which have been controlled by the Democrats for my entire lifetime. Then and only then can we blame today's problems on Reagan.

Ain't it funny how we blame all of our problems on the President? But has anybody given us an alternative to both of the last administrations' policies? Can anybody claim that he/she knows exactly what has brought on this near-depression and can unmistakably trace it back to Reagan?

Face it, getting into this recession was a team effort. It took 250 million Americans two decades of determined effort to get ourselves so screwed up. We also had a little help from OPEC, Japan, Taiwan, Vietnam, and others.

Furthermore, it will take a joint effort to get ourselves out of this mess, and it's going to take a long time. Instead of blindly blaming the President for our problems, we should search for the real causes and ask for presidential help on finding the cures. Complaining and finger pointing won't get us anywhere, we need solutions and teamwork.

Ain't it funny how we blame all our problems on the President? No, not really.

Generalizing Vietnam

Editor:

J. Zitti offers, as he admits, a series of "sweeping generalizations" in his Dec. 2 letter to the editor. There he equates self-interest with opposition to the war in Vietnam. Such "broad stroke" generalizations, however, obscure the crucial issues and realities of that era. One can always simplify, as does Zitti, complex motivations to a single source, but such reductionism invariably hides more than it reveals. For example, how would Zitti deal with the massive numbers of women — none of whom were eligible to be drafted — who participated in the protest movement? His logic would force him to see in their principled opposition to the war a spectre of self interest: they must have had sons, or boyfriends who were draftable, if not, then perhaps brothers, cousins, friends.

The argument that protests occurred only when draft calls were high is also problematic. Yes, there were relatively few massive protests early and late in the war but the reasons for the dearth of actions are multifold: problems in media coverage, splits within the radical movement, futile turns to electoral politics, and the simple diminution of energy in the face of sustained and powerful opposition.

In sum, Zitti blames the protestors for the failure of demonstrations against the war in Vietnam. Zitti would better serve the memory of that war and the individuals who fought against it by asking: Why did so many Americans ignore our calls to protest?

Finally, else my motivations be reduced to self interest, I possessed draft lottery number 366 which virtually eliminated me from the draft. Yet despite my mathematical safety, I and many others continued to oppose the war in Vietnam because it was immoral, illegal and imperialist.
