Police are cracking down on alcohol control

By MICHAEL STUMP
Staff Writer

Picture this: It is a Friday afternoon about 4:00. A student is at a T.G.I.F. party drinking a beer and socializing with friends, minding his own business, doing no harm. Out of nowhere, rumors of the ABC (Alcoholic Beverage Control) showing up become reality as the students are politely asked to leave. Sound familiar?

What probably happened was a youthful looking undercover reserve officer, or even someone who does not work for the police department, walked into the party, bought a beer without being carded and then called in the police or the ABC who were waiting behind the scenes.

Students who are twenty-one or older are probably mad because they spent $3 and had only one beer. Minors are mad too. But, they should consider themselves lucky. Even if on the property of the party, minors can be cited for possession of alcohol. This usually means a fine of $120 for the first offense, according to Jim English, San Luis Obispo juvenile detective.

For the fraternity or other organization hosting the party, the usual procedure is to confiscate the alcohol. But, they could be arrested for a misdemeanor for selling alcohol to a minor. This is also usually a $120 fine, but carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail, said English.

"If they serve alcohol to minors and someone ends up getting killed, they are going to wind up getting sued," English said.

The ABC is a state police organization, but works in coordination with local police. Jon Lichty is one of two senior special investigators responsible for covering all of San Luis Obispo County and Northern Santa Barbara County.

Lichty said that he does not have to go out looking to disrupt parties. In fact he is too busy for that; minor related offenses entail about 10 percent of his duties. Most of his information about parties comes from people at Cal Poly. Lichty declined to state exactly from whom, but did say some of it is anonymous.

"We find them out (parties) mainly through fliers and advertisements in the Mustang Daily," he said.

After locating what they believe to be an exceptionally large party, the first step is to find a person who will go in unnoticed and buy alcohol. English said they usually use 19-year-olds.

"We don't want to be accused of trickery," said English. "That's why we usually use 19-year-olds or youthful looking 20-year-olds."

"These people are strictly volunteer — they do not get paid," he said. "They may be friends of police officers, part-time reserve officers or anyone who wants to help." English said the son of the chief of police has volunteered before.

One such volunteer, who was a field service technician at the time (someone who assists an officer in taking reports) and is now a reserve officer, said he did it for the experience and because there are serious problems associated with big parties.

He cited instances of people urinating on neighborhood lawns, throwing rocks at police cars, vandalism and noise.

"I don't do it because I like to go around busting people," the reserve officer said. "It's something that is very hard to do. The police department is caught in the middle. We try to do our job, but the students get angry. Then again, we have to respond to the calls."

English said another reason the ABC invades parties is because "it's not fair to the people who have to go through the red tape of buying a liquor license."

He said on any given call the usual procedure is to go into the party, buy the alcohol, take it out to ABC officers who are waiting on the outskirts and then confiscate the kegs. He said the ABC usually takes care of it because it is easier for them to handle the administrative actions.

If there are police around, which there usually are, the reserve officer said it is wise for minors not to walk around with alcoholic beverages.

"If a minor lies about their age, they will get a ticket," he said. "In one instance a girl lied about her name and gave my partner a fake name. When the officer started to call in to the computer she confessed. We should of taken her to jail, but there were too many other calls."

The reserve officer said the end result is this: "If we are dealt with hostilely, we will not be so

New training track for equine program

By GREG R. SCHROEDER
Staff Writer

A new horse training track at Cal Poly was dedicated on Friday before an audience of students, faculty and representatives of the Oak Tree Racing Association.

The dedication of the Oak Tree Training Track was planned to be held at the track, between the Aeronautical Engineering Hangar and the horse unit on campus, but rain forced the ceremonies indoors, relocating them to the Alumni House.

Lark Carter, dean of the School of Agriculture and Natural Resources, told those at the dedication the new training track is an excellent example of the positive results that can come from the combined efforts of the university and the private sector.

The Oak Tree Racing Association, a thoroughbred racing group, leads fund-raising efforts to get money for the training facility and other planned improvements for the university equine program.

"It will be a great and continuing asset to the equine program," Carter said. "The first of our students to benefit from (the track) will be those in the Thoroughbred Enterprise project, who will now be able to complete the training of their yearlings on campus."

Students in the Thoroughbred Enterprise project are each assigned a yearling and are responsible for its conditioning, care, maintenance and training.

In the past, students had to spend up to two months training their horses at the Hollywood Park Race Track in Inglewood.

The directors of the Oak Tree Racing Association, which holds its race meeting at Santa Anita Race Track in Arcadia each fall, opened the campaign to raise funds for new facilities for the Cal Poly program last November with their announcement of a $200,000 gift to the university. The association also provided design and construction consultants to help with the project.

The training track, 778 miles at its inside rail and 28 feet wide, is surfaced with almost 200 truck loads of sand brought in from Atascadero, and is lined with fiberglass rails. The center will be planted as pasture and the rest of the area will be land-

Aiming for peace

Candlelight vigil tonight

Students for Social Responsibility will be holding a candlelight vigil for world peace tonight from 7 to 7:30 p.m. in the University Union Plaza.

"The idea behind the vigil is to get different clubs together that are concerned about peace," said Melanie Gruhn, president of the club. "It's a way to meet people and at the same time make a statement."

Gruhn said some of the other clubs that will be present at the vigil are the Bahai club, the Hunger Coalition and several groups from San Luis Obispo.

Gruhn explained that Students for Social Responsibility is a non partisan club for all students interested in finding alternatives to war and pursuing a path to end the arms race world wide.

"We basically educate other people about the problem of nuclear war and how to prevent it," said Gruhn. She added that members actively work for peace.

Students for Social Responsibility meets every Tuesday at 11 a.m. in Room E-29 of the Science Building.

Centering on health

Students need assurance that they will continue to receive readily available medical services for their dollar.

The Health Center needs the freedom to best manage its resources and money.

To these ends, the Mustang Daily editorial board supports discontinuing after-hours medical care at the Health Center, as Dr. James Nash, the center's director, suggested in a Thursday Daily story.

But, the board urges Health Center officials to find new avenues of after-hours health care for Health Card holders.

Nash said although students are given necessary equipment and medicine when they use after-hours services, many times they will be asked to return to the center the next day or they will be referred to a local hospital for additional services. This raises the question of whether after-hours services are crucial to students' welfare.

It is certain the Health Center's regular-hour services, as well as infirmary care, are vital, as the number of students who use the Center yearly attest. The services are also extremely economical to Health Card holders who, as Nash points out, would have to pay considerably more for the same services in the city.

But students still need care for injury or ailment after hours. We agree that keeping the Center open 24 hours — funded by Health Card sales — is costly, and offer as a possible solution establishing an emergency care program with area hospitals and doctors, with costs paid wholly or partially by Health Card purchases.

Should it prove feasible, such a cooperative effort would decrease Health Center costs and maintain care to students.

The Health Center's services must remain strong. A student's health care must be assured. Solutions must be found to benefit both.

Money and greed criticized, idealistic outlook praised

Editor:

In the age of enlightenment there came a notion that whatever a man could get was good. There were doubters, of course, but they were ridiculed as hopeless dreamers and idealists, and being in a minority could easily be squashed. For the majority was always right, and for the majority the intent in life was to get as much for one's self as possible.

Ah, the joy of money and the lust for power! To have and to have more until our coffers are overflowing with personal wealth! This is the only true purpose in life. The cackling minority might call this greed, but we call it self-actualization. Some may call us callous or hard-hearted, but we call it "looking out for number one." For the majority is always right, just as everybody knows that there are more people living high on our bountiful creativity today than there are struggling to survive or — technology forbid! — starving. The world, after all, is only that half of North America called "The United States." The rest is merely a vast resource to fuel our gaping maws of "self-actualization."

On our currency we place the words "In God We Trust." This is most certainly true, for the god of our society is money, and money is unchanging. We have created gods of our possessions and we worship them faithfully. We judge others by their possessions, and religiously keep up with all the latest things to worship. And yes, sometimes in our spare time we even worship God.

It is a shame, but some fail to see the happiness that wealth has given us. They claim that there is more to life than wealth, that perhaps our bountiful creativity could better be used to improve the lot of others. Some of the most radical ones even want us to save something for future generations. It's a good thing there aren't more of them, or something noble might be done.

Abortion reasoning and logic incorrect, says pro-lifer

Editor:

What do you think of the idea that it would be more compassionate for us to drown all the non-swimmers in this world in bathtubs, because they would drown anyway if they fell into the ocean? Such reasoning is totally absurd and illogical, wouldn't you say? Yet this is the same reasoning that is held so high when people argue for abortion, claiming that all unplanned pregnancies lead to unwanted and battered children.

Such individuals don the cap of fortune-telling and stereotype the whole world with their logic, not realizing that they are including themselves in doing so. Would they abuse and batter their child if they became pregnant at an undesirable time in their life — would you?

It might interest you to know that in a study done by Dr. Edward Lenoski, professor of pediatrics at U.S.C., it was shown that of 674 battered children, 91 percent were planned pregnancies and 90 percent were legitimate. Obviously, abortion is not the answer to ridding our country of child abuse since it is the planned and wanted children who are being battered the most.

It is claimed that abortion is the most compassionate way to deal with these unplanned children. I ask you, which would be more compassionate: allowing the child to be adopted by one of the thousands of couples who long to hold and infant in their arms or killing the child by abortion?

To help you answer this, you should know that an embryo's brainwaves can be recorded at six weeks and feels pain at eight weeks of age. From eight weeks on is when most abortions are performed, removing the child from the womb by shredding the child into pieces with suction, cutting it up with a steel knife, burning it to death with a concentrated saline solution — or removing the child by a Caesarean Section and leaving it to die unattended in a bucket.

Again I ask you, which is more compassionate?

Student claims afterlife bad reason to believe in God

Editor:

In response to the letter concerning the acceptance of "God" in the Oct. 29 issue of the Mustang Daily, I have these comments:

First of all, I do not believe in "God" as most Christians do, but Mr. McAndrews' logic concerning why people should believe raises serious questions in my mind. His main reason for the acceptance of "God" was to ensure a fulfilling after-life. Not out of the wonderful things that heaven has to offer, but because of the fear that hell would be unbearable. I am not going to commit my life toward "God" if I am not sincerely devoted to this being. I am not going to submit my energy to "God" just because I don't want to go to hell to live a horribly miserable after-life.

As far as the "game of chance" is concerned, believers are taking just as much of a chance as the non-believers do. And as I see it, the believers are making these decisions from an emotional standpoint rather than from a logical, objective and factual viewpoint. Should I change my actions and direction of my life just because of the potential after-life? This is blind faith! This is not accepting "God" because of what "He" ("She?") stands for, but because of the fear of what this "God" may do if you don't believe.

If there is a "God" as Mr. McAndrews perceives it (and I don't think it's fair to ignore the other possibilities of the existence of "God," i.e. Buddha or Bruce Springsteen), and if my acceptance of it is "meant to be," then I will believe when that time comes. But I'm not going to alter my life because I fear going to a hell that might not even exist.

What about the born-again Bible Belters? Are they going to heaven for the eternally fulfilling after-life? What makes their life before they found "God" any different than my life now?

Absolutely nothing!

So, set your hearts and souls at ease. There's still a chance for me to meet St. Peter at these alleged pearly gates, but I'm not counting on it.

I don't support the government blindly.

I wouldn't buy a car from a used car salesman blindly.

And along the same time, I don't believe in blind faith concerning "God" and religion.

Religious leaders are correct in condemning gays, says student

Editor:

I would like to respond to the "concerned student's" letter of Nov. 7 who encourages acceptance of gays into society and also complains of gays not being accepted into Christianity. The reason gays are not accepted in any of the major religions: Judaism, Christianity or Islam is because of God's laws. God's laws are perfect, from a perfect creator, and cannot be improved upon by men and women.

I do not agree with the view of a human being as a "silly little speck of dust." We were put on earth for a purpose, and no creation of God's is "silly." As God's creation and vicegerent, we must strive to purify ourselves so that we may understand God and His purpose for us.

This process of purification begins internally for each individual, but it does not end there. We must also struggle to purify our environment and society. This has been done by all the prophets including Moses, Jesus and Mohammad (Peace Be Upon Them), and we must continue in this struggle. Our religious leaders are not "preaching hate against gays" in order to gain strength. Rather they are preaching purification of the individual and society as the prophets have done.

A society can remain strong and good only as long as its fundamental building blocks are good. The building blocks of society are families. Families, from the first creation of Adam and Eve are a man and a woman, a father and a mother, and their children. As all the religions say, God created men and women for each other. A society can only grow based on this organizational unit. It's true God has created much diversity on this planet. From this diversity there is much we can learn and it is very good. However, diversity to the extent of deviation and transgressing the limits given to us by God does not benefit the society, but rather destroys it. As God has revealed in the Holy Quran (Chapter 7, Verse 80-81), "We also sent Lut: he said to his people: 'Do ye commit lewdness such as no people in creation ever committed before you? For ye practice your lusts on men in preference to women: ye are indeed a people transgressing beyond bounds.'" — The end result of this society due to their transgression is given in Verse 84, — "And we rained down on them a shower of brimstone; then see what was the end of those who indulged in sin and crime!"

A refusal to accept gays as a part of society is not an "ignorant decision," but rather a decision designed to preserve the society. An acceptance of gays into society is a step towards the destruction of the society. Better than the acceptance of the gays into society is the acceptance of God's will lenient and we will shut the party down."

ABC Officer Lichty said that if the problem continues to get worse, there are going to be more citations and added enforcement.

"I feel if the people involved are not willing to comply, we will have to do something different."

To avoid alcohol confrontations with the law for both the consumer and supplier, there are a few myths which ought to be dispelled. For instance, charging money at a party to pay for the band or use of the premises is not legal.

"If the charge and serve alcohol, they can be cited even if it's only a donation," said Detective English.

Another myth is that going into a party uninvited can be considered entrapment.

Wrong again, said English. "Entrapment means that you plant the idea in someone's head."

Also if the police or the ABC catch a minor drinking at a party, the minor can be cited, even if on the premises of the party. Although that is rare.

Main characters, effects enhance 'Macbeth'

By DONALD MUNRO

Staff Writer

Can misguided ambition get a person into a lot of trouble?

According to William Shakespeare it can, and when he wove this theme into the tragic drama "Macbeth," he created a play that was irresistible for the audience.

The Cal Poly Theatre took advantage of one of The Bard's most enduring tragedies by staging a fine production of "Macbeth" last weekend.

Complete with three witches, ghosts and apparitions, sword fights and plenty of blood, there was more than enough action to keep the audience awake. Along with impressive technical effects and three outstanding acting performances, the eloquent words of Shakespeare were allowed to shine through.

Special effects did much to add to the mood of the play. In the first scene the audience was introduced to the three "Weird Sisters"—nine foot high puppets with gruesome faces who towered over the other characters.

Designed by Technical Director Howard Gee, the puppets were operated by rods that connected to the arms of the actresses. Shauna Cancilla, Tracey Walker and Catherine Salio, who played the witches, wore helmets with rods connected to the head of their puppet. When they moved, the puppet heads moved, and the result was an eerie realism.

Watching from the audience, it was more like viewing the latest Steven Spielberg movie than watching a centuries old play.

"Fair is foul and foul is fair," intoned the witches as thunder and lightning set the mood. All three witches sounded like supernatural beings, and having their voices amplified through the sound system added the extra touch.

The main character in the play is, of course, Macbeth. V Craig Heidenreich's portrayal of the man who lets ambition eventually destroy his life added a touch of professionalism to a Cal Poly production.

In the play, the witches give Macbeth a startling prophecy—someday he will be king of Scotland.

The prophecy, along with encouragement from Lady Macbeth (Ann Ross) gives Macbeth the incentive to murder King Duncan (Aaron Elmore).

After the murder, Macbeth becomes king, but the killing doesn't stop there. Guilt and paranoia become the driving force in his life as he tries to eliminate his enemies and consolidate his position.

Heidenreich and Ross, in their scenes as Macbeth and Lady Macbeth, exhibited an intense energy that was captivating to watch. Ross was also impressive in the famous sleepwalking scene, where Lady Macbeth tries to wash her hands of the imaginary blood from the murder of Duncan—to no avail.

Aaron Elmore exhibited an air of professionalism in his dual portrayal of Duncan and Macduff, the Scottish nobleman who eventually kills Macbeth.

As far as the acting performances, however, there seemed to be a distinction between the lead performers and the supporting players.

Some of the crowd scenes appeared flat, with some of the performers exhibiting a tightness or nervousness.

For example, Duncan's sons Malcolm (James Powers) and Donalbain (Kevin Swanson) lacked dramatic impact in the scene where they find out their father has been murdered, although Malcolm warmed up in the second act.

Likewise, Banquo (Laurence W. Seaton) lacked impact in his performance, although when he came back as a ghost to haunt Macbeth he was chillingly effective.

Perhaps one of the problems was that the lead actors spoke in a dramatic accent that "made it sound like Shakespeare," while most of the supporting performers used something closer to everyday speech.

It might not be a legitimate complaint, but it did have an effect on the performance.

Another disappointment was the play's almost anti-climactic ending, strengthened by the fact that Macduff, after killing Macbeth, didn't come on stage with Macbeth's head. For a play that stresses blood, especially in the first act, it ended rather tamely.

Apart from this, however, the production was entertaining and impressive in its scope. Director Michael Malkin kept the play going at a fast pace and kept the audience on the edge of their seats through most of the production, and through his use of technical effects gave a 20th century look to an old classic.

Gee was able to transform the Cal Poly stage into another time and place through lighting and sound effects. The use of a heartbeat thumping in the background, for example, in a scene involving Macbeth's paranoia added to the tension the audience felt while watching the action.

The scenes on the heath, with the three witches, were the masterpiece of the play. When two apparitions and the ghost of Banquo appeared in the second act, a fog machine, along with expert lighting, made the scene almost frightening.

Likewise, make-up effects by Scott Wheeler added to the play's impact.

The Cal Poly Theatre and Dance Department should be proud of bringing one of Shakespeare's classics to campus and making it come to life.

Kingsmen trampled by Mustang stampede

Seniors play in last game as Poly racks up 48 points

by John Bachman
Sports Editor

All the King's horses and all the Kingsmen, couldn't stop Poly from scoring again, and again, and again....

The Mustangs scored 35 points in the second half Saturday night at Mustang Stadium, and the defense held Cal Lutheran to a minus six yards rushing to beat the Kingsmen 48-0 in the last game of the season.

After struggling in earlier games this year, it was a relief to have the offense explode against a team that had never given up more than 19 points, said head coach Jim Sanderson. "It was a great way for our offensive football team to end the season."

"We played very well, especially in the second half. Seniors played a majority of the game. I wish we could have saved some of those points and dispersed them over some other games."

The Poly offense was led by Clarence Martin who scored two touchdowns and hauled in five receptions for 115 yards as the offense racked up 434 yards to help the Mustangs improve their record to 6-4 on the year.

The defense allowed just 75 yards in passing offense, giving up total 69 yards on the night. "The defense was awesome," said Sanderson. The lopsided score resulted from Poly playing extremely well, he said, and Cal Lutheran playing p

While Poly has suffered four losses this year, Sanderson said his team could have gone 9-1. "It was very frustrating, but not disappointing."

The crowd of 2,573 saw Poly score once in the first quarter as the team's leading rusher on the night, Vernell Brothers, rambled for 14 of his 71 yards on a touchdown run.

The Mustangs not only played all their seniors, but most players got a chance to play. "Everybody played an equal amount," said Sanderson. "It was a special night for us...We are very positive about the way we ended the season."

The Mustangs are a fairly young team and Sanderson said he will now devote his time to recruiting for next season. "We look forward to next year."

The quarterback duties were split between Jeff Byars and Yale Keckin. "Both of them played well," said Sanderson. Byars completed six of 13 passes for 85 yards with one interception, Keckin completed six of eight for 118 yards.

Besides Martin's five receptions, Damone Johnson caught three passes for 52 yards. After Brothers scored in the first period, Martin caught a 19-yard pass for the touchdown, giving Poly a 13-0 halftime lead.

The Mustang defense put a strangle hold on the Kingsmen all night, holding them to a minus six yards rushing.

Jeff Byars scored the third touchdown on a six-yard run and the two-point conversion gave the Mustangs a 20-0 advantage. The defense then got into the scoring act as defensive back Keenan Stanley picked off a Kingsman pass and returned it 12 yards for the score.

Joey Kolina then scored on a five-yard run and Poly added more points in the fourth when Nick Frost faked the punt and carried the ball 42 yards for a touchdown.

Martin then closed the scoring with a 64-yard pass completion from Yale Keckin.

Brothers was the only Mustang with over 50 yards rushing, Joey Kolina scampered for 36 yards on nine carries.

Cal Poly livestock judging team earns fifth place in nationals

By BRENDA BIELKE
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly Livestock Judging Team placed in the top ten and several members took top honors individually last week at the National Collegiate Livestock competition in Louisville, Ky.

The team placed fifth out of 44 universities and Tom Wulff, an Ag Science major, was high individual in beef cattle and third highest overall in individual scoring. Under the guidance of its new coach, Max Hawkins, the team also placed second in sheep judging. Jeff Plumm's score put him in the tenth slot in individual sheep judging at the competition, which was hosted by the North American International Livestock Exposition. Other team members are Jeff Parker, Clifford Munson and Jill Smith.

The team went into the competition with four consecutive wins behind them. "So far as I know, that's a record," said Hawkins. The team had hoped to win last weekend's competition. "We made a couple of mistakes and ended up fifth. "But the kids did a really good job," the coach said.

Hawkins, who also teaches animal science, livestock judging and production courses at Poly, formerly taught and coached at Morehead State University and the University of Tennessee. "(Cal Poly's) is the strongest overall program I've worked with. The students here are really enthusiastic," he said.

"I am really enjoying (coaching at Cal Poly). This is a good program and I hope I can add to it," said Hawkins.

Santa Cruz prof defines power

By Stacey Myers
Special to the Daily

In a Nov. 15 speech entitled "Power and Fascination: The Difficulties of Imagining Power in America," William Domhoff said that "the reason Americans deal so badly with the concept of power is because they refuse to acknowledge it even exists."

"Power is a vague and slippery concept," said the UC Santa Cruz psychology and sociology professor, "but that doesn't mean it shouldn't be dealt with."

He defined group power as "a group has power to the extent that (it) can get another group to do something it wouldn't normally do."

He said a power elite exists in America. He cited the following three criteria:

— "Who benefits." This refers to people in our society who hold the bulk of the wealth.

— "Who sits." Domhoff believes the power elite are math-

"We've been brainwashed to believe that in America, the power belongs to the people."

ematically over-represented on executive boards across the country, thus, "who sits" is an indicator of power.

— "Who wins." This final criteria is to see who consistently wins where tax breaks and other restrictive loopholes are concerned.

"The reason people are so reluctant to accept the idea that there is indeed a ruling class in our society," said Domhoff, "is because we've been brainwashed to believe that in America, the power belongs to the people. This simply isn't true."

As proof of the existence of a ruling class in America, Domhoff cited figures showing the top one percent of families in America hold 60 percent of America's wealth.

"These figures are evidence that someone in our society is indeed winning," he said.

The lecture was the final presentation in the 1984-85 Arts and Humanities Lecture Series.

Poly Foundation to help
'Skip A Meal' program

By Thomas D. Williams
Special to the Daily

By skipping dinner on Dec. 5, Cal Poly students with meal cards can help the fight against world hunger.

The Campus Hunger Coalition has organized "Skip A Meal," an event designed to raise money for underprivileged people in South Africa and Ethiopia. For all meal cards that aren't used to by dinners on Dec. 5, the University Foundation will donate the food value of those dinners to Oxfam America, a non-profit, parent organization of the coalition.

The money that Oxfam raises will be used to supply South Africa and Ethiopia with seeds, pumps and hoses for agricultural purposes.

Members of the coalition will be in the University Union and other locations on campus through Nov. 30 soliciting signatures of students interested in participating.

Serge Madikians, president of the coalition, said the coalition's main goal is not to make students feel ignorant or guilty about the hunger problem, but to make them aware of it.

"Guilt will not solve the problem," Madikians said. "We need to appreciate our full stomachs in order to help those who aren't so fortunate."

The theft occurred between 5 and 5:30 p.m.

A student left the blue nylon backpack on a study table unattended, and when he returned it was gone, said Investigator Wayne Carmack. A TI-35 calculator and books were in the backpack when it was stolen. Total value was $130.

Baby Fae autopsy is underway

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — It may be weeks before results are in from a battery of autopsy tests performed on Baby Fae, who died three weeks after becoming the first human infant to receive a heart transplant from a baboon, an official said Sunday.

That assessment came from Ed Winds, a vice president of Loma Linda University Medical Center, just one day after more than 2,000 persons attended a memorial service for the infant who died Thursday.

Preliminary findings of the autopsy indicated that Baby Fae, whose real name has been kept secret at the family's request, died after her kidneys failed and then her new heart gave out.

Despite the infant's death, she still had lived about 2 1/2 weeks longer than any animal-to-human heart transplant. The surgery was performed Oct. 26.

The surgeon who headed the pioneering surgical team, Dr. Leonard Bailey, says he plans to try again, but not until after analyzing all the data from the Baby Fae effort.

"The last thing the (baby's) mom said to me was to carry this on — to not let this experience be wasted," Bailey told a news conference a day after the baby's death.

Winds said Sunday he did not know how long it would take to analyze the information, determine what more could have been mine.

Americans and Soviets unite to relieve starving Ethiopians

At first, officials shooed reporters away from the four Mi-8 Soviet transport helicopters at this military base 165 miles north of Addis Ababa in the eastern edge of Ethiopia's central highlands.

But then the Russian chief of the 20-member Soviet crew at Kembolcha allowed the journalists to take photographs of the helicopters, painted in shades of camouflage green and bearing the name of the Soviet airline Aeroflot, as the American wheat was being loaded.

The Russian, wearing running shoes and a red and white baseball cap, gave only his first name, Kolya, a diminutive of Nikolai.

Kolya, who said he is based in Moscow with Aeroflot, said the four Soviet helicopters arrived in days later began flying food to parts of the highlands so remote they are difficult to reach by truck.

"We start at 6 in the morning and fly to 5 in the evening," Kolya told two Russian-speaking reporters, an American and a foreigner nations to Ethiopia.

At a news conference on Friday, Ethiopian leader Mengistu Haile Mariam said Soviet helicopters and aircraft were distributing three-quarters of the food and relief supplies sent by foreign nations to Ethiopia.

The four transport helicopters at Kembolcha are part of 24 sent by Moscow, with 300 trucks and a dozen Antonov-12 transport planes to carry food and relief supplies to the 6.4 million people said by the Ethiopian government to be suffering from prolonged drought and famine.

Lady Mustangs take bite out of No. 1 Tigers

Poly drops UOP before 2,859 fans

By JILL PERRY
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly women's volleyball team upset No. 1-ranked University of the Pacific in more ways than one Saturday night.

With one win each in previous meetings this season, Pacific and Poly were hungry for that deciding victory. Poly, however, had more incentive: it was the spikers' last home game, they had the largest home crowd of the season (2,859) and a win over UOP would mean a move up in the national polls for the 5th-ranked Mustangs.

After a literal tromping on the Lions of Loyola Marymount, Friday night, 15-4, 15-6 and 15-7, the Mustangs were hoping to remain on the crest of a much-needed winning streak and did. The Poly spikers persevered through one of their most aggressive matches of the season to win in four games, 16-14, 9-15, 15-13 and 15-4, giving them a 32-6 season record.

Exciting, action-packed and unpredictable all describe Saturday's match. The Mustangs want to make it to the final four and they proved it.

However, UOP coach Taras Liskevych didn't share in the excitement.

In fact, Liskevych was so displeased with the logistics of the match that he filed a formal protest.

According to Liskevych, who will leave his post at UOP in January to begin coaching the U.S. women's Olympic volleyball team, "The match was supposed to be at 7:30, but three weeks ago (head coach Mike) Wilton called me and asked if we'd play at 9. I really didn't want to, but did it as a friendship thing to

DARYL SHOPYAUGH/Mustang Daily

Lynn Kessler dives for the ball against the University of the Pacific. The Mustangs defeated the Tigers who were rated No. 1

Mike. I don't want the match to start at 9:40 like it did, so that's why we're protesting the match. The league office will hear about it and they're going to decide on the match. Another thing that affected our playing is that was the worst officiating we've had this year."

However, Liskevych admitted that he knew Wilton had no control over the scheduling. Wilton said, "He told me that the late start (because of a wrestling meet that went longer than planned) was beyond my control, but that he was going to protest anyway. He can't understand the de-emphasis that our campus puts on sports and I guess this is his response to it."

Concerning the officiating, Wilton added, "The officiating had nothing to do with the match, it was decided by the players as it always is."

The protest notwithstanding,

Wilton commended all the Mustang players for their superb performance Saturday night and said the team met his pre-game goal. "My personal goal for this match tonight was to feel real good about our effort. Well, win or lose I felt real good about our effort. It's just frosting on the cake for us to just come on like gangbusters and win that thing.

"We've been coming out of our slump in the last two matches, but it took a match like tonight for us to really hit our stride and really get in high gear to wind down the season and go into the playoffs," he said.

He also noted the performance of senior middle hitter Terri Willis, who, along with senior setter Linda Bohm, played her last home game Saturday. Both were awarded with plaques and carnation leis before the match.

"Terri Willis had her best match ever as a Mustang and what a time to do it," he said.

Willis, who recorded eight kills on 22 attempts and one service ace, credited the crowd with her performance. "When I was out there on the court and I'd get tired or something wasn't going right, I'd say 'Hey, look at all these people sitting around, they're all cheering for you and this is the last time you're going to be on this home court,' so it made me push a lot harder. It was a real fun match," she said.

Liskevych also acknowledged the Mustangs' impressive playing. "Cal Poly played great. They were outstanding, that's for sure," he said.

Hitters from both teams spiked the ball with such power that when hit off an opposing player, several balls went into the stands, two hit the basketball hoops and one even made a reverse basket.

The leader of the Mustang hit squad Saturday night was sophomore middle hitter Carol Tschasar who logged in 16 kills on 34 attempts for the highest attack percentage among the Mustang hitters at .353.

Wilton recognized setter Dede Bodnar's good thinking throughout the match. "Dede's location was superb, she just set a very intelligent game," he said.

The Lady Mustangs finish up the regular season with two matches this week. The first will be against the 18th-ranked Pepperdine Waves, who were ridden out by Poly in three games in October. That match will be in Malibu Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

The last match before the playoffs will be against No. 3-ranked UCLA in Los Angeles Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Wilton is looking forward to the matches with optimism. "We've gotta be on a roll now. Those will be tough matches. Pepperdine's a great team and they just beat Santa Barbara in five and we're going to have a tough time with them. We've got two tough challenges, but that's good-you want to play tough teams at the end because it gets you ready for the playoffs.
