Women's group member attacks feminism, ERA

By NANCY ALLISON
Staff Writer

The ultimate consequence of the feminist movement would be a genderless society, according to a member of a conservative women's group who spoke in Chumash Auditorium Tuesday night.

Dee Ann McElhose, a spokeswoman of the Central California representative for Concerned Women for America (CWA), a pro-family organization with 500,000 members, talked to approximately 50 people about "Feminism vs. Femininity: Is There a Difference?"

McElhose's technique of lecturing entailed quoting various feminist and anti-feminist leaders and attacking the feminist philosophy.

She said feminist organizations such as National Organization of Women (NOW) do not represent the views of the majority of the women in America. "They have gained national media coverage because of their manipulation of the press."

McElhose attacked the feminist movement for being responsible for the dissolution of the nuclear family, among other things. She said the movement is dedicated to the cause of humanism and socialism, and criticized its philosophy on abortion, sex education, homosexuality, suicide and capitalism, as well as others.

The thrust of her argument against the feminist movement is its "attempt to make the role of mother and housewife somehow demeaning. Feminists are

Rec facility not supported by a student majority

By SUSAN EDMONDSON
Staff Writer

Students won't pay high fees for a new recreation facility unless they will be able to use it, a student survey has found.

The survey, designed to analyze the need for a recreation facility at Cal Poly, was conducted by senior business majors Jerry Morales and Jim Rossetto. At the beginning of Winter Quarter, they mailed surveys to 500 randomly selected students and 57 percent of the students responded, which Rossetto said is a high response rate for a mail survey.

"I'd say the most significant thing, and it isn't real surprising after last year's vote, is a lot of people don't want to pay a lot of money if they can't use the facility," Morales said.

Thirty percent of the students surveyed said they would support a $30 per quarter fee to construct a recreation/entertainment complex with a seating capacity for 5,000 people and facilities for volleyball, basketball, weight training, swimming, and special events such as concerts or dances.

Forty percent of the students said they would not support this fee and 29 percent responded "maybe." The most frequent complaints of students who said "no" or "maybe" was that they felt the fee was too high or that they would not benefit from the facility because they would graduate before its completion.

The survey showed that if a recreation/entertainment complex were to be built, a new weight room would be the most important concern for students. New racquetball courts and a swimming pool were also ranked as important to students.

Twenty percent of the students surveyed belong to a local health club and of those students, half of them said they joined because Cal Poly did not have the equipment they wanted.

Students receiving financial aid were less likely to support high fees. Students who participate in intramural sports did not tend to support the facility more than other students.

"There was a trend for certain schools to be against it," said Morales. The School of Engineering had the greatest percentage of students opposed to the plan. Students in the Agriculture School and the School of Professional Studies and Education were most likely to favor the facility.

The results of the survey were presented Tuesday to the executive committee of FORWARD, a group formed last fall to investigate the need for a recreation complex. FORWARD will meet next Tuesday at 3 p.m. in the University Union Room 220.

Free speech proposal passed

By JULIA PRODIS
Staff Writer

A freedom of speech proposal for the University Union which has been debated for over a quarter was finally approved last week to allow students to disseminate literature in the building.

"This proposal is an attempt to expand free speech in the U.U.," said Joe Willis, Assistant Director of Operations for the University Union. "The proposal is anything but a perfect document, but it is better than what we had before."

The proposal itself lists a number of conditions for groups or individuals wishing to use a table to pass out information in the U.U. The proposal allows for a maximum of two tables to be set up at any time across from the information desk. It does not allow for tables to be set up in front of any meeting rooms in the U.U. where a controversial speaker may be present.

Of this fact, the Chairperson of the U.U.A.B., Heather Carlson, said, "I'm sure there will be concerns about the limited number of tables at our meeting tomorrow."

Other conditions include:

- Individuals and/or groups disseminating written matter are prohibited from harassing or involuntarily detaining people utilizing any of the indoor or outdoor areas of the Union complex.

- Distribution activities must not obstruct the free flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic around the Union.

- Tables may be scheduled for a group no more than three (3) consecutive days in a given month. Additional days in that month may be scheduled only after the three day period the tables are not scheduled.

- There will be no charge for recognized campus organizations distributing materials.

- Outside organizations/individuals reserving space will be accessed a daily rental charge of $35.

- Individuals or groups wishing to distribute written or printed materials from tables... may reserve equipment... by filing

Concert deficit reaches $13,000

By JULIA PRODIS
Staff Writer

The ASI Concert Committee has a deficit of over $13,000, a concert scheduled for March featuring General Public has been cancelled and the possibility of contracting Madonna for a Poly Royal show has diminished.

"The Concert Committee really lost their shirts last quarter with the Charlie Daniels Band," said ASI Accountant Harvey Blatter. "The committee has a huge potential for loss and a huge potential for gain."

The committee, which is one of 12 committees under the umbrella of the ASI Program Board, has the largest expense budget of $277,031, with a subsidy of $1,206. The Program Board as a whole receives $44,000 in subsidy money from the ASI. This subsidy funding is money the ASI gives to the Program Board which they are budgeted to lose. The funds come from student fees.

"Concerts can really make or break the whole Program Board," said Blatter, "if they keep losing money, the Program Board will be in the red and will have to make it up in profits in later years."

Two years ago, Blatter explained, the Program Board, which has a subsidy of $44,000, incurred a deficit of $20,000 which the next year's board had to make up. "The board made back $15,000 so the ASI wrote off the remaining $5,000 for showing good faith."

The chairman of the Concert Committee, Paul Walsleben, attributed the deficit in part to the budget. "We're operating with a three year old budget. It's unrealistic."

The ASI Assistant Director, Stephen Adams, who approves all budgets for potential concerts, said the deficit was a "tough" issue. "The committee has wiped out its reserves."

As a possible deterrent to an increasing deficit, Adams suggests "they could either submit conservative budgets for concerts or make cuts in their existing budget."

Adams has alerted ASI President Kevin Creighton and Program Board Chairman Eugene Simor of the $13,198 actual deficit.

Creighton reported the deficit to the Student Senate at a February 13th meeting. No action has been taken there.

Simor has conducted budget and publicity workshops for the committees to help curb any future financial disasters.

"For the next show, it better look like it will break even or make money or we won't fund it," said Simor. "We've encouraged them to look into a Poly Royal show in the stadium with the services of an outside promoter so we can get a guaranteed income."

Concert Committee Chairman Walsleben is skeptical about a stadium show. "Generally, to break even we have to sell 68 percent capacity of the facility. I don't think there are over 5000 people who will go to one concert," he said, referring to the diverse musical tastes of Cal Poly students.

ASI Accountant Blatter said, "I don't know how students decide on these groups. Some of them sound really weird to me."

Let the students decide

Up until August, a serious encroachment on the public's right to freedom of speech was taking place inside the University Union building. No one was allowed to disseminate information of any kind inside the building. But thanks to an astute observation by President Warren J. Baker concerning the policy, a recommendation was made to the University Union Advisory Board that the rule be changed. The move was a quantum leap for freedom of speech in the University Union.

However, the advisory board a week ago passed a list of restrictions governing how individuals or groups may disseminate information from tables in the University Union.

To set up a table in the building, and distribute information from that table, groups must in effect apply for their rights by filling out a number of application forms and, in the case of non-student groups, pay a fee. Student groups have the priority for the paltry two tables available in the Union and non-student or university-related groups have sixth priority and must pay $35 per day for a maximum allowable three consecutive days if another group has applied for the use of the table.

In principle we disagree with the overly restrictive application process and feel it is an impediment to free speech inside the University Union. In addition, the priority system is, in effect, Cal Poly meddling with and interpreting the First Amendment by arbitrarily deciding what groups are more important to students than others.

If anything, a selection of outside, non-university related groups would be a more educational and broadening experience for students than would be Cal Poly student or faculty groups disseminating information generated on what is arguably an island of a campus.

We would like to see the University Union Advisory Board remove the priority system for allotting tables and let the students decide for themselves what information they deem to be beneficial to them. After all, they can only make a decision if they have the information in the first place.

A solution to parking problem

Editor:

There are numerous solutions to the parking dilemma, the most obvious being the elimination of the problem by creation of more spaces. However, every excuse in the book is being given to avoid this approach.

Equally viable would be a reduction in the staff and student populations until enough parking spaces are available. This would be distasteful for the administration, both because the reduced numbers reduce prestige and because such an action would be indicative of ineptness.

Besides, there are numerous indications that the administration is busy trying to expand the campus population; why else should we need to build more buildings?

So I resort to my own solution — certainly not the best, but very practical. If I can't find a parking space, I go home; skip school, one might say. I know that it's not my fault that there aren't enough spaces to go around, so why waste the time? Sometimes you just have to say:

"What the....!"

Perhaps if the staff were to follow the same guidelines, the administration would get a clue!

Now, if only there was enough housing to go around...

Something funny happened on the way to the Forum

Well, it isn't really funny and it didn't happen on the way to the Forum, but let me explain.

I was to be at a wedding in Manhattan Beach over the weekend and had arranged to pick up my date at the Airport Park Hotel, which is located next to the Fabulous Forum in Inglewood.

I was to pick up Holly sometime between 4 and 5 p.m. when she expected to arrive with her mom and sister, who was going to a Prince concert that evening.

In my haste to avoid L.A.'s infamous afternoon traffic, I exceeded the speed limit by a slight margin and arrived well before my scheduled time.

Having an hour to kill and not too sure of my way around Inglewood, I opted to have a beer in one of the several bars in the hotel.

I sat at the bar and ordered my drink and had the obligatory small talk with the bartender.

Using my keen sense of observation that I have learned through several quarters of journalism classes and practice, I noticed around me a colorful assortment of people. And I mean colorful.

There was an abundance of brightly colored velour sweat-suits worn by a vast array of personalities. Being a fledgling journalist, I thought to myself, I wonder who these bright people are?

The bartender was of no help, he seemed to be working on the principle of "one for me, one for you" and as it was almost closing time, he wanted to go home.

As the time approached for me to leave, I settled on leaving this assortment of people a mystery to be pondered until forgotten.

My curiosity would not let me be, though. I mustered up the nerve to approach one of the older characters, a gentleman who reminded me of one of those old boxing managers in an even older movie.

He was the kind of guy who looked like he used to be a fighter, back in the days before there were boxing commissions and rules. And not as successful as his memory would have him believe.

Anyway, you know the type. He told me he was some type of "special assistant" to the next champion of the world, Tony Ray.

Never heard of the guy and was now content to go on my way.

Here is where the funny part comes in.

I have long been the type of person who is not overly impressed with celebrities, after all, who are they anyway?

I boarded the elevator along with a chattering group of young women staying in the hotel for the Prince concert, and a few of the bright velour sweat-suits.

Well, the biggest of the bright guys starts to talk to the young ladies, a rare happening in elevators these days.

As I approached my floor, I overheard him asking the girls if they would be watching him box the next day at the Forum.

I think that this must be the next champion of the world, Tony Ray. So I ask.

Well, I was wrong. It turns out to be Larry Frazier, son of former heavyweight champion Joe Frazier.

He said he was preparing for a title bid in the near future and hoped to take care of this Tony Ray easily.

My normally composed self kind of fell apart and I tripped when I stepped out of the elevator. After wishing Larry good-luck, the last thing I saw was him laughing at me through the closing doors.

To say the least, I felt stupid and slightly embarrassed, and decided that I better not become a sports writer, they would all probably just laugh at me.

Of course this part of the story didn't make it into the conversation at the wedding, for all they know I was my usual calm cool self.

I have not seen today's paper yet, I wonder if he won his fight. Maybe I can get a little laugh out of it if he didn't.

Nine Poly swimmers head to national competition

Women second in conference, set school records

By Jeanette Roades
Special to the Daily

The Cal Poly women's swim team swam away with a second place in its first league championship, breaking two school records and grabbing seven first place finishes.

Nine swimmers also qualified for nationals during the California Collegiate Athletic Association championship.

Turning in solid performances were Kim Foster, Joan Mary Laubacher, and Nancy Stern. With a second place finish and a time of 54.36 in the 100 freestyle, Laubacher shattered the old school record of 54.67 set by coach Traci Serpa in 1980. In addition to her school record, Laubacher placed first in the 50 freestyle and fourth in the 200 freestyle.

Nancy Stern contributed to the Mustang rout by winning the 100 and 200 breaststroke in national qualifying times, placing second in the 200 Individual Medley and third in the 400 IM. Her time of 4:44.92 in the 400 was an NCAA qualifying mark.

Kim Foster racked up points for the Mustangs by winning the 100 backstroke and 200 IM in qualifying times, placing second in the 400 IM and for a third place finish in the 200 backstroke.

The final school record to fall was the women's 800 freestyle relay. Snapping the mark of 7:54.28 the team placed second with a time of 7:52.25

The following Mustang swimmers will attend the NCAA Division II Nationals in Orlando, Florida, March 13-16: Kim Foster 200 & 400 IM; Nancy Stern 100 & 200 breaststroke, 400 IM; Linda Tucker 200 butterfly and 400 IM; and Liz Hughbanks in the 1-meter diving.

Parents and students will no longer have to cram into Crandall Gym to watch the Poly Royal Gymnastics Exhibition. For the first time the show will take place in the main gym.

The gymnastics team and the gymnastics club are co-sponsoring the event, which will start at 1:00 p.m. on Friday and Saturday. There will be a $2.00 cover charge for guests and a $1.00 fee for students, primarily to help fund next year's gymnastics team.

In the past, the exhibition has been held in Crandall Gym, where the team's home meets were also held. But 1985 seems to be the year for expansion, with home meets also being held in the Main Gym for the first time.

Eric Haas receives a check for $225 from N.A.M.A. President Pat Baldwin as club members look on.

Student wins tuition in club fund-raiser

By TED LEWIS
Staff Writer

A check for one quarter's tuition was awarded by the National Agri-Marketing Association to a agricultural management student when his name was picked in a raffle sponsored by the organization.

Eric Haas was presented with a $225 check Wednesday morning in front of the ag building, by Pat Baldwin, president of the Cal Poly chapter of N.A.M.A.

"We decided to give the money as the grand prize because it was agreed upon that the essential need of the student was to pay for their schooling," said Baldwin.

Other prizes awarded as part of the fund raising raffle included three second place prizes of dinner for two, and four third place prizes of lunch for two people and movie passes for two to one person.

Ray Babb, agriculture business management major was awarded dinner for two for selling the winning ticket to Haas.

Karyn Scheuber, agriculture business management major was presented dinner for two for selling the most tickets in the raffle, she sold 132.

N.A.M.A. is a student club of the professional organization. There are 28 schools in the nation with chapters.

Graduates exhibit design works

By LESLEY GLEASON
Staff Writer

The professional work of some of the alumni of the Art Department is now on display in the University Union Galerie.

"In the Field" is part of "Selections '85" and will be shown until March 13.

"It's called 'In The Field' because these (former) students are literally working in the field right now," said Jeanne La Barbera, ASI Galerie coordinator.

The show features samples of the professional works of 30 graduates of the department's graphic design option.

"All the works you see have been accepted and printed, they're not just suggestions — they are actually accepted commercial works," said La Barbera.

Categories include corporate identities, logotype and trademark design, illustration, editorial design, packaging and advertising design.

This is the first campus exhibit by alumni of the graphic design option, which began graduating students in 1980.

"The packaging is kind of intriguing," said Katherine Phelps, interior design major.

"It's nice to see people actually get jobs, and do real things," said Phelps.

"The Art Department worked very hard to put it all together, and we're very pleased of the response we have gotten so far," said La Barbera.

Be a good neighbor, lend a helping hand

By LESLEY GLEASON
Staff Writer

"Won't you be my neighbor" is the theme for the 2nd annual ASI Good Neighbor Day.

Linda Eberl, committee chairman said that Good Neighbor Day, to be held April 13, is an "opportunity for the students to give back to the community."

ASI is soliciting projects from the community ranging from simply washing windows for those arthritically impaired, to moving furniture in houses for aged individuals who are unable to do it themselves, to cleaning up San Luis Creek.

Students will go out into the community and do these jobs. "It's a really good opportunity to improve relations between the students and the community," said Eberl.

"The community can see the students are not here just for an education, we are an asset," she added.

The city and county will be passing resolutions making April 13 Good Neighbor Day.

All students can participate in this event. "Hopefully we have a pretty large commitment from the Greek system but we don't just want it to be a Greek event," said Eberl.

"We are looking for clubs, dorms, individual students — whoever wants to participate," she added.

Kevin Creighton, ASI president, said, "As young able-bodied persons, a brief one-time effort to assist those near us who are less fortunate seems a fitting contribution to our community."

A free dance will be held following Good Neighbor Day for all volunteers.

Students interested in volunteering their services should sign up in the ASI office in the University Union.

Myths and realities of black history

By KEVIN CANNON
Staff Writer

African history is just being written, said a Fulbright scholar from Kenya Tuesday night.

Dr. Patrick Alila was one of two, who spoke to a crowd of 40 people in San Luis Lounge as a part of Black History Month.

Alila said, "We are still relying on history written by whites, which is often biased." The theme of the lecture was myths and realities of Afro-American and African History.

Dr. Quintard Taylor, associate professor of history, spoke with Alila and addressed several myths people have and showed the reality of them. Taylor talked about myths involving slavery, black business tradition, black families, black power and the invisibility of blacks in forming a nation.

Taylor also spoke of "white man's history" and said "history has no race."

Taylor showed that blacks were not invisible and were even at Valley Forge with George Washington. In addition, black slave families were not weak and owners kept families together to maintain order. Also, contrary to popular belief, black leaders shared political power with white leaders after the Civil War.

The crowd was responsive to the speakers and got involved by asking questions. When asked what to do to understand the myths, Taylor replied, "Don't make any assumptions, we need to study and analyze the differences of opinion of black history."

Former dean of students, Everett Chandler, attended the lecture and felt that it was a fine program. He commented, "I've accepted the myths, and it's time to get information and change our attitudes."

The lecture was sponsored by Pi Gamma Mu, Social Science Honor Society. President Karen Matcke said, "The reason we wanted to sponsor this event was to promote more racial intergration at Cal Poly."

Lawsuits filed to recover loans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The U.S. Attorney's Office sued 25 people, including seven attorneys and two physicians, to recover $106,222 they allegedly owe on federally insured student loans.

The lawsuits, filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court, is part of an increased government effort to recover $4.5 million in delinquent loans from 15,000 former students nationwide.

In the past four years, more than 1,000 similar suits have been filed in Los Angeles, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Hugh Blanchard.

Blanchard said for publicity reasons, Tuesday's lawsuits named many professionals.

U.S. Attorney Richard Bonner requires that letters demanding repayment be sent to those with delinquent loans before a lawsuit is filed.

Many debtors respond by proposing ways to repay the money, and lawsuits are filed when there is no response, Blanchard said.

THE KILLING FIELDS

By C. KAHN
Special to the Daily

Three years ago I was sitting in the Regent Theater in Westwood, waiting to view a new film all of Southern California had been talking about. It was a David Puttnam-produced Academy Award winner for Best Picture — "Chariots of Fire." I remember watching those fantastic opening credits where Vangelis' music thunders and the men are running in their pure, white splendor.

Yesterday, I sat in the Festival Cinema Theater prepared to see another David Puttnam-produced film, this one based on the novel Death and Life of Dith Pran by Sydney Schanberg, real-life columnist for the New York Times. The film was "The Killing Fields" and it has everybody in the industry talking. From the opening shot of a small Cambodian boy, seated on a water buffalo and wearing a GI's helmet (while eerie but flowing classical music sets the mood), to the moving reunion at its conclusion, this movie is one of the best if not the best movie of the year and perhaps one of the best movies of our generation.

To begin with, the film is another unpleasant look into American intervention in Southeast Asia during the Viet Nam War. The geniuses behind the brass in the American military were portrayed as foolish and unforgivably imperialistic. Nonetheless, the film does not hand us a war and say,

"Here, see how atrocious this is? Naughty, naughty." We know before this film even starts how "naughty" American mistakes were.

Instead, Roland Joffe — much like Peter Weir in "The Year of Living Dangerously" — hands the halo over to a reporter named Sydney Schanberg, a columnist for the ever-sacred New York Times. A second, and perhaps brighter halo belongs to Dith Pran, a Cambodian interpreter, close friend and consul to Schanberg. The two of these men and their compatriots run circuitously around a collapsing government (the Khmer Rouge) and the power pursuant, anti-western revolutionary forces. And Joffe takes the invasion of Cambodia, a calamitous and scurrilous American action, into the eyes and minds and hearts of the rest of the world. It isn't soon after these reporters decide to stay on that they are stripped of their means of communication and become, in essence, wanted men on the run.

Schanberg and his associates manage to find asylum in the French Embassy but are soon forced to evacuate the country leaving Pran, the Cambodian, behind. Schanberg tries everything within his means to bring his friend with him but fails. He returns to New York and receives tremendous honors for his work but remains a haunted man wondering of his friend's fate in "communist" Cambodia.

Pran has been imprisoned and victimized by the party for his educated status. He hides an identity that would surely bring him certain death. Eventually, Pran plots and enacts his escape from the work farm to freedom.

Dr. Haing S. Ngor, in his first and perhaps only (of his own admission) role, has insight beyond most any "real" actor. He himself was a doctor in Phnom Penh at the time of the revolution. His operating room was literally stormed in a massacre of the elite and educated. He confessed that he was only an assistant, was spared and fled the hospital with his fellows, leaving a man to bleed to death on his operating table. Ngor's experience feeds the vision through which the character Pran delivers a tribute to the free men like himself who died in the killing fields. The man lived the role then repainted the picture in a most human, most genuine light — a picture like the famed Chinese landscapes, so believable that one merely steps into it.

The strength of the caste cannot be denied. Sam Waterson, a stage heavy who's a relative unknown in film is superb. John Malkovich again brings his brash but dead accurate instinct to Al Rockoff, the New York Times photographer. Once again Craig T. Nelson ("Silkwood," "Call to Glory") shows his reliable versatility as the "no comment" U.S. military leader on top of the Cambodian invasion.

What sets the movie apart is the amazing scope of its quality. Editing through cinematography — no holds barred, no expense spared, brilliant from the water buffalo to the embrace.

Mike Olfield's contribution to "The Killing Fields" is not unlike the verve Vangelis brought to "Chariots of Fire." The score blends the best of classical, electronic and Eastern Orient — a homerun hodgepodge that rarely calls attention to itself but never lets one close-up, one transition, or one iota of drama fall by the wayside.

"The Killing Fields" had some of the most credible high points ever put to film. In the first stage evacuation, where all Americans and their associates flee the country, the tension mounts as Pran finds it difficult to get his family to the helicopters waiting to transport them. Schanberg, Pran, and his wife and children race through a field of a dozen choppers, blades whirring and blowing up dust, trying to find some room. The sound is pulverizing and the goodbye short. As the panicked, evacuation maelstrom hums away to safety, Pran and Schanberg sense the storm coming in a now unfriendly Cambodia.

Again, Joffe masters the tension when the reporters are arrested by the revolutionaries. Insurgents and citizens are being shot and tormented left and right, and one gets the feeling that only a sliver of composure saves the journalists from this malice-let-loose. Pran, the only one who speaks Cambodian, heroically pleads for all their lives, and eventually gets them off by providing the whereabouts of a Coca-Cola warehouse.

In a turnabout situation, Schanberg forges a passport for Pran to get him out as a non-Cambodian. The plan almost works save for a makeshift passport photo on photographic paper that fades. Pran is left to fend for himself and winds up a marked man in a prison camp.

Back home in New York, Schanberg (in a brilliant montage) views a series of videotapes that summarize what appears to be erroneous moves and blatant deceit by the Nixon Administration and their foreign policy. The pictures hit home, one after another, and the music — an unequivocal choice "Nessu Dorma" from Puccini's Opera Turnadot — comes to a crashing crescendo as Schanberg realized the utter destruction of Cambodia as an innocent pawn of the U.S. This coup de grace etched the emotions so firmly in mind that the film could have ended right there, and the story would have been complete, the Oscars still in sight. But it didn't.

The struggle went on. Schanberg searching for Pran; Pran wanting to escape. Nothing was lost in the duration. A different scene was being set — the effort to find a man lost underneath the repression of a "new Cambodia" with no room for the softness of the old way.

In the end, when Pran crests that last hill and spies the Red Cross tents and freedom, the knees shake, the heart pounds and the hard swallow comes. The same when Schanberg races through the newsroom of the Times with news of Pran. And of course, the reunion of two friends — men who've been loved, rallied and pleaded for, cried, laughed and burst with in relief.

Sitting in the dark theater watching history, watching the courage of men, if you are not moved and changed, then you have turned a blind eye to "The Killing Fields."

Men sending 14 to national meet

Swimmers third at league meet

By JEANETTE ROADES
Special to the Daily

Last weekend in the first California Collegiate Athletic Association championship, the Cal Poly men's swim team raced to a third place finish.

In the process, the team established one school record, two first place finishes and registered fourteen national qualifying times.

Breaking the men's 200 freestyle record of 1:42.73 set in 1982 was Rich Swoboda with a lightening fast time of 1:42.53. As it appeared, Swoboda was off to a fast start and having a great meet. He went on to win the 200 backstroke and place third in both the 500 and 200 freestyles.

Also swimming well were Brian Wilkerson, Neil Leary, and Mike Thomas. Two-time defending NCAA Division II champion in the 200 backstroke, Wilkerson placed second in both 100 and 200 backstrokes while adding a pair of national qualifying times of 53.88 and 1:56.89.

Helping finish off Poly's 1-2-3 sweep of the 200 backstroke, was Mike Thomas who posted national qualifying times of 54.16 and 1:51.16.

With a qualifying time of 1:55.39, Leary won the 200 butterfly easily.

The following Mustang swimmers will attend the NCAA Division II Nationals in Orlando, Florida, March 13-16: Bob Frappia, 1650 freestyle; Leary, 100 and 200 butterfly; Erik Rinde, 100 and 200 breaststroke, 200 and 400 IM; Kirk Simon, 100 butterfly and 50 freestyle; Rich Swoboda, 200 and 500 freestyle and 100 and 200 backstroke, 200 and 400 IM; Thomas, 100 and 200 backstroke; Wilkerson, 100 and 200 backstroke; and Kevin Winkler, 200 freestyle.

Players may get look at owners' finances

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's owners on Wednesday pleaded poverty in their negotiations with the union, clearing the way for the players' association to get its first look at the teams' financial ledgers.

"It's serious, and it appears as if it's getting worse. We felt we had an obligation to the union. They have to be as concerned about how healthy baseball is as the clubs do," MacPhail said.

Meeting for the ongoing labor talks, management representatives, led by Lee MacPhail, told the union that negotiations could not continue until "the grave economic concerns" of the game were discussed.

The owners held a meeting Tuesday in New York during which they discussed their financial problems. After the meeting, Commissioner Peter Ueberroth issued a statement empowering MacPhail and the PRC to ask owners to open their books to the union.

"We thought originally we would be able to conduct negotiations without getting into this, but things are just deteriorating really," said MacPhail, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee.

Under labor law, if the management side in negotiations uses inability to pay as a negotiating tool, it must prove the claim by providing the union with detailed financial information. Baseball has never allowed this.

Golfer plays where he wants and wins

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Bruce Lietzke is playing less and enjoying it more.

"I play where I really want to play and the result is that I tend to play more quality golf. I want to be anxious to play, ready to play, when I get to a tournament site," Lietzke said before opening defense of his title in the $500,000 Honda Classic.

The tournament, with a field of 144, begins today on the revamped Eagle Trace Club course, one of six Stadium Golf facilities now used on the PGA Tour.

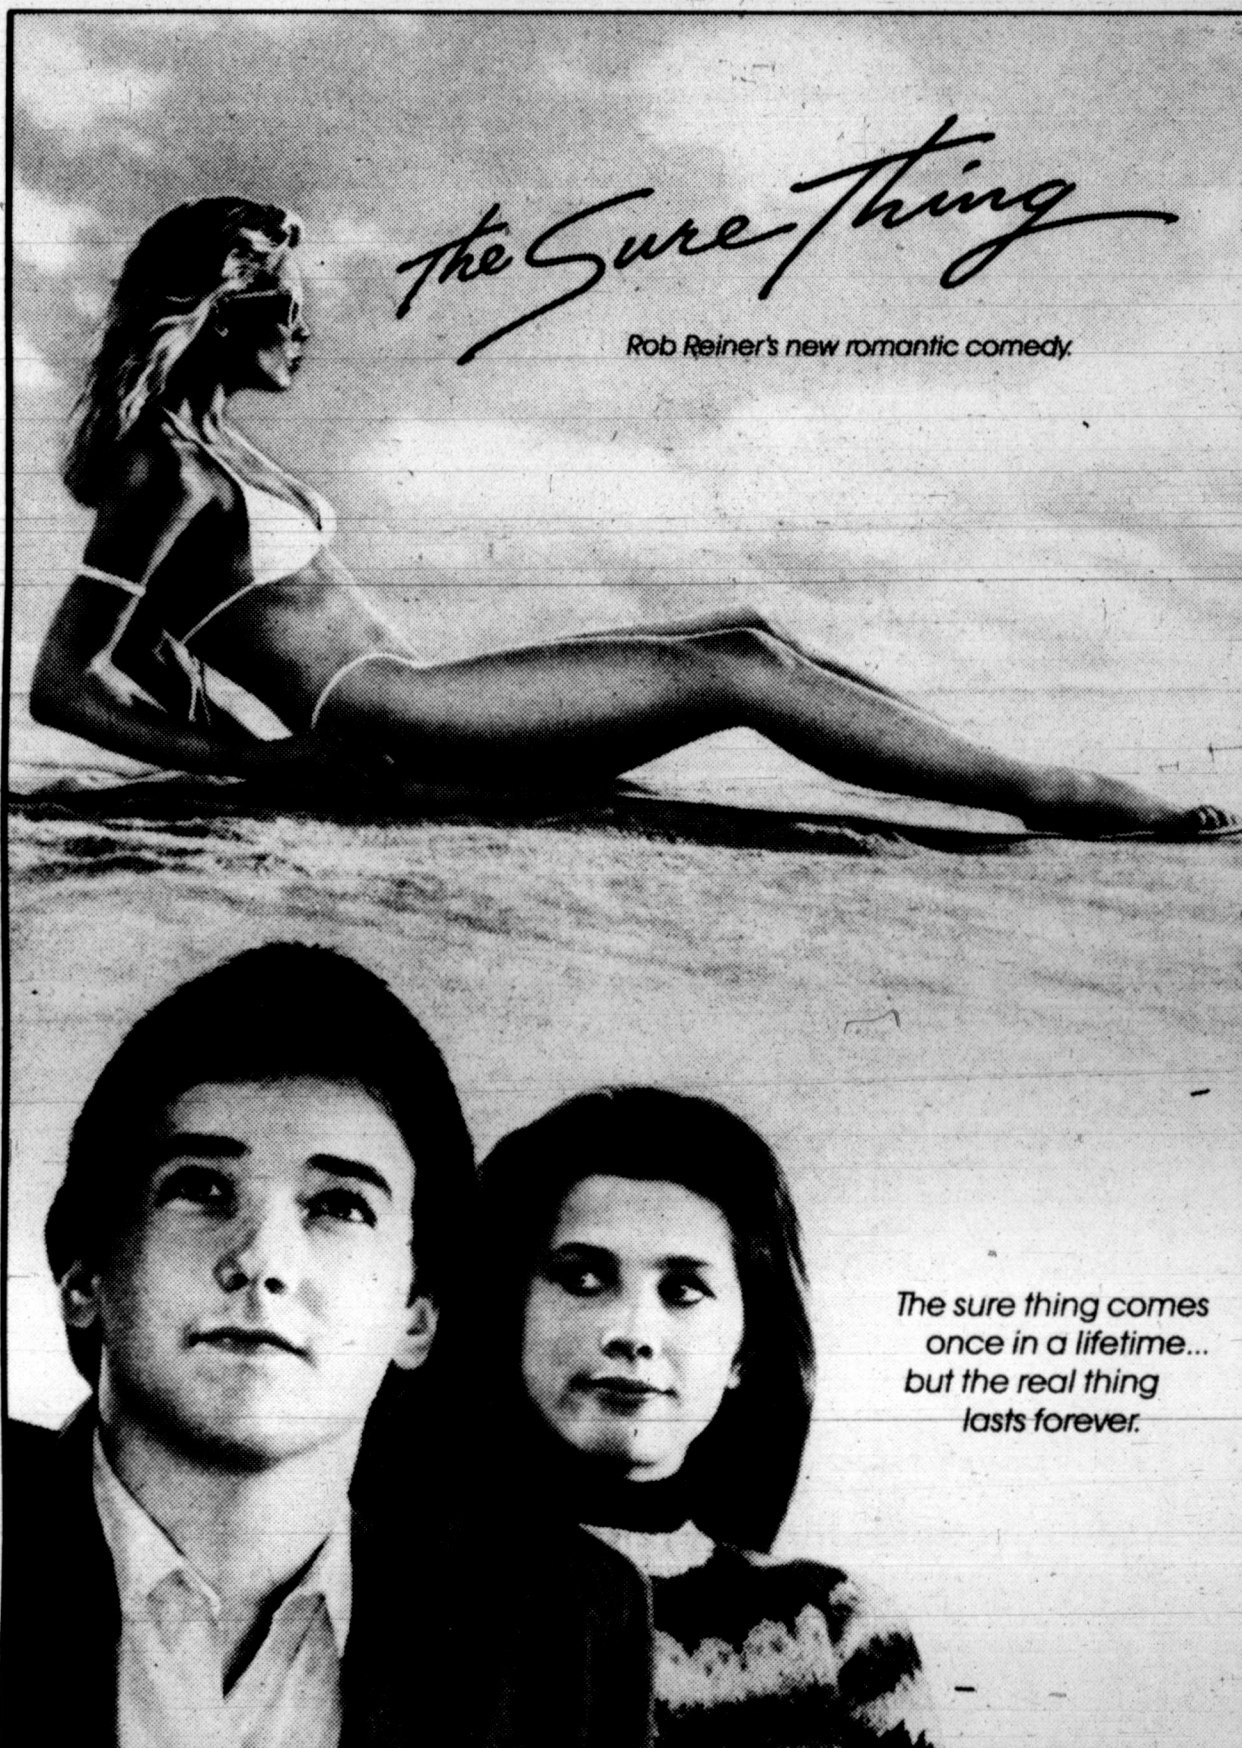

Lietzke, 33, scored the 10th victory of his career in this event last year, coming from four shots back in the final round and eventually beating Andy Bean in a sudden-death playoff.

It was the only tournament he won during the season, but the game's most successful cross-handed putter said the year was one of his best.

"In many ways it was my second best year on the tour, second only to 1981 (when he won three times)," he said. "I played well through the year."

Lietzke faces a line-up that, in addition to Bean, includes the principals from last year's Honda Classic as well as the leaders from last week's Doral Open — Mark McCumber and the two men he outlasted in the final round, Jack Nicklaus and Tom Kite.

Randak admitted that parts of the proposal, namely the limited number of tables available and their restricted location, have potential for problems. "But there haven't been problems in the past and I doubt there will be in the future."

"Basically the ERA is unnecessary. It will not give women equal pay for equal work — we already have that," said McElhose. She offered few alternative philosophies.

She did, however, give the views of the founder of Concerned Women for America, Beverly LaHaye. "Beverly LaHaye is concerned about the destruction of the American family, that is why she founded this organization."

Seniors will aid students filling income taxes

By WENDY WALTERS-BURGENER

Staff writer

Free assistance will be available today and next Tuesday for students needing help with their tax forms.

According to Wallace Burt, associate professor in the Accounting Department, the Senior Volunteer Tax Aide Program will provide a tax counselor available for help in room 218 of the University Union today from 10 a.m. to noon, and 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. and next Tuesday, 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., and noon until 2 p.m.

As part of an outreach effort to students Bob Andrews, director of the Senior Volunteer Tax Aide Program, said that seniors want to help students who he feels have a lot in common with each other.

"Students and seniors are in a similar position because both groups are living on a restricted budget for the most part, and both groups experience difficulties with the housing dilemma."

According to Andrews, seniors get to a point in their lives where they feel a desire to help or to pass on knowledge that they have acquired throughout the course of their lives and providing tax assistance is just one of the ways to do it.

"We want to relate to you (the students). We've had our day and you're just beginning yours. This tax service we are providing for you is an extension of our overall service to the community." He said.

There are approximately 58 seniors trained by the IRS Tax Board on the Central Coast said Andrews, to provide free assistance, and there are 25 counseling sites within the county.

"All of the seniors involved in this program have expertise due to their careers many were accountants, business men, etc."

My washing machine is taking me to the cleaners

By ANDY FROKJER
Special to the Daily

Washing machines don't eat clothes, that's just a myth. Washing machines prefer something with a little more substance — quarters. They don't eat your clothes, they just hold them for ransom. "If you don't put in another quarter, you'll never see your pants again!"

Unfortunately, even if you put in another quarter there's no guarantee you'll ever get your pants back. You see washing machines are pretty sloppy about releasing their hostages. How else could you explain how my roommate's sister's sock ended up with my laundry? And how did a pair of panties get in with my clothes last week? Was it trying to mate with my boxer shorts? Just what I need, a bunch of little diapers to deal with.

All washing machines have their quirks. Some need a swift kick in the side to get them to go, ours requires a monthly sacrifice. A new pair of socks usually does the trick, though sometimes you have to throw in a shirt too. We tried to pass off a bunch of rags as clothes once. That really pissed our machine off and it wouldn't clean our clothes for two weeks.

My mother always insists on doing the laundry when I'm home. "If you're going to do your own laundry do everyone else's too." She wouldn't say that if she knew I was the one who left the crayon in his pocket in second grade and created a whole new style of brown polka-dotted clothes for the entire family.

Mom always tells me to divide the clothes into light and dark. For years people have been telling me about civil rights and now I'm supposed to segregate my laundry? What's the trick? Okay then, what about my red shirt. Is it light or dark? And what about my socks? They're dark when I throw them in the washer but white when they come out.

Though Mom insists on washing my clothes, she's not too keen about putting them away. "Mom, where are my shirts?" "They're on the couch." "Why are they on the couch?" "Well, they don't just fold themselves and put themselves away." "Of course not, that's what mothers are for." That's when I learned that the art of snapping a wet towel is not the exclusive territory of locker room jocks.

For some reason, Mom has a heck of a time sorting laundry. She's always putting my brother's clothes in my closet. I just love pulling on a pair of pants in the morning, standing up and watching them slide to the floor. It's hard to make it to the kitchen for breakfast with your pants around your ankles. Lately, I've tried something new. I marked all my underwear with a little "AF" on the label, just like summer camp. That works fine when Mom remembers my name is Andy not Eric. My system also has its drawbacks:

Mom is still trying to figure out who "BVD" is.

Mom always loses my clothes when she does the laundry. "Don't worry," she tells me, "it'll turn up sooner or later." Sure it will, three years from now when I'm looking for a rag to wash my car with. Or else she says, "Go look in your sister's drawer, maybe I put it there by mistake." Right, since when did my sister start wearing jockey shorts? So I'll be rummaging through my sister's undergarments and she walks in. "What are you doing?" "Me? Well, my slingshot broke and I was wondering if you had any extra bras I could borrow..." "Uh-huh, right." I don't think she bought that one. She's probably wondering how long I've been a transvestite.

Like most people, I like to wait as long as possible to do my laundry. Most people measure their laundry by loads. I measure mine by the ton. I don't ask how many loads I'm going to have to do. No, it's more like: Is it time to rent a bulldozer yet? You know it's time to wash your clothes when you can use your sock as a boomerang. I don't let my clothes go that long anymore. Last year I broke three of my favorite shirts trying to stuff them in a laundry bag.

My roommate has a system. He has one pile of clothes that are clean, another pile that have been worn once but are still clean, and still another pile that are slightly soiled but not dirty enough to wash. Then he has another pile of clothes which don't matter whether they're clean or not and finally a pile of definitely dirty clothes that need to be washed. He swears he knows which pile is which. I think it's just an excuse to leave his clothes laying all over the room.

My other roommate refuses to put more than one quarter in the dryer. He just takes his clothes out wet and hangs them all over the apartment. Every time he does his laundry our apartment looks like the Salvation Army thrift shop. Just the other day I sold two of his shirts to the newspaper boy for fifty cents.

Speaking of dryers, some people use those fabric softeners to make their clothes smell nice. Not me. Who wants their clothes to smell April-fresh in December? I can just picture the commercial showing a mother putting fabric softener in her son's laundry. "April-fresh. Do you think he'll notice?" "Hey Mom! This shirt smells like mildew!" "He noticed!!!" Let's face it, as long as we're making our clothes smell, we might as well invent a musk-scented fabric softener. It would save us guys a fortune in cologne.

Student calls building proposal a 'rape' against the student population

Editor:

There is another rape that has been committed on this campus. It has been committed by the University Union Advisory Board (UUAB) against all 14,200 students it represents. This is not a one time act, it has been going on for weeks now. The rights of the students to know what is planned for the future of the University Union (OUR UNION!!!) have been raped. The leader of this clandestine group is Roger Conway who I condemn for trying to make the University Union into a political business venture.

The reason for all the name calling stems from the fact that they are planning to remove the bowling alley. This has been in the works for weeks without anybody knowing about it. The reason given is that the bowling alley does not make a profit. Well, pardon me, but I thought the University Union was created by the students, with the student's money, for student services! It is ridiculous to close the bowling alley for losing money when the overall Game's Area is projected to make a profit.

The whole thing stinks of a bureaucrat's meddling and manipulating of the sheep on the UUAB council to promote his political special interest groups. Yes, the issue is political, not financial. The history goes like this: Mustang Lounge is to be converted into a coffee shop (with the underlying purpose of becoming a pub if the campus ever becomes "wet"). This leaves no home for the Recreation office. Roger pushes for the bowling alley to be removed and replaced by a recreation office, a dance studio, and a nautilus—all of which could be located elsewhere or are already found on campus.

So you see, Roger and the UUAB could care less about the overall effect of this decision; but, rather, they look only at the present. This is what represents us, all 14,200 of us! Narrow-minded people do not benefit the majority.

Talking to the UUAB indicates hope of breaking through this narrowness, but it will take input from all concerned! Please help save the bowling alley and remove the General Hospital-like shadyness of the UUAB.

Finally, if it is a matter of money the price of bowling could be increased. Most places charge $1.10 per game and even in the Bay Area it may reach $2.50 a game. Obviously, 75¢ is too little if it means removing the bowling lanes.

Also Roger's office surely doesn't make a profit—why not convert it into a recreation office or a dance studio?

Last game for hoopsters

Men are home, women on road

Both the men's and women's basketball teams end their season tonight, the men at home, the women on the road.

The men are 4-9 in the California Collegiate Conference, 15-11 overall. The year ends for the men tonight with a their last CCAA game, hosting Cal State Bakersfield in the Main Gym, 7:30 p.m.

The men's game is free.

The women are on the road tonight, playing Chapman in Orange, 5:45 p.m.

Both teams split their games last weekend.

out. "I think we'll fill the gym," said Rivera. "Last year we had people hanging out the doors of Crandall Gym, so if we can attract the same sized crowd, I'll be pleased."

Rivera is hoping to use the profits for the traveling budget, and possible scholarships for his gymnasts. "They used to have gymnastics scholarships here. My goal is to eventually make enough money, with fund raisers, to be able to offer a few scholarships again."

The team has a budget this year of $3,100. This pays for traveling expenses, such as lodging, food and gas, and for the costly fee of judges at home meets.

"We spend $1,200 hosting three home meets each year," said Rivera, explaining. "The judges are what most of the money goes towards."

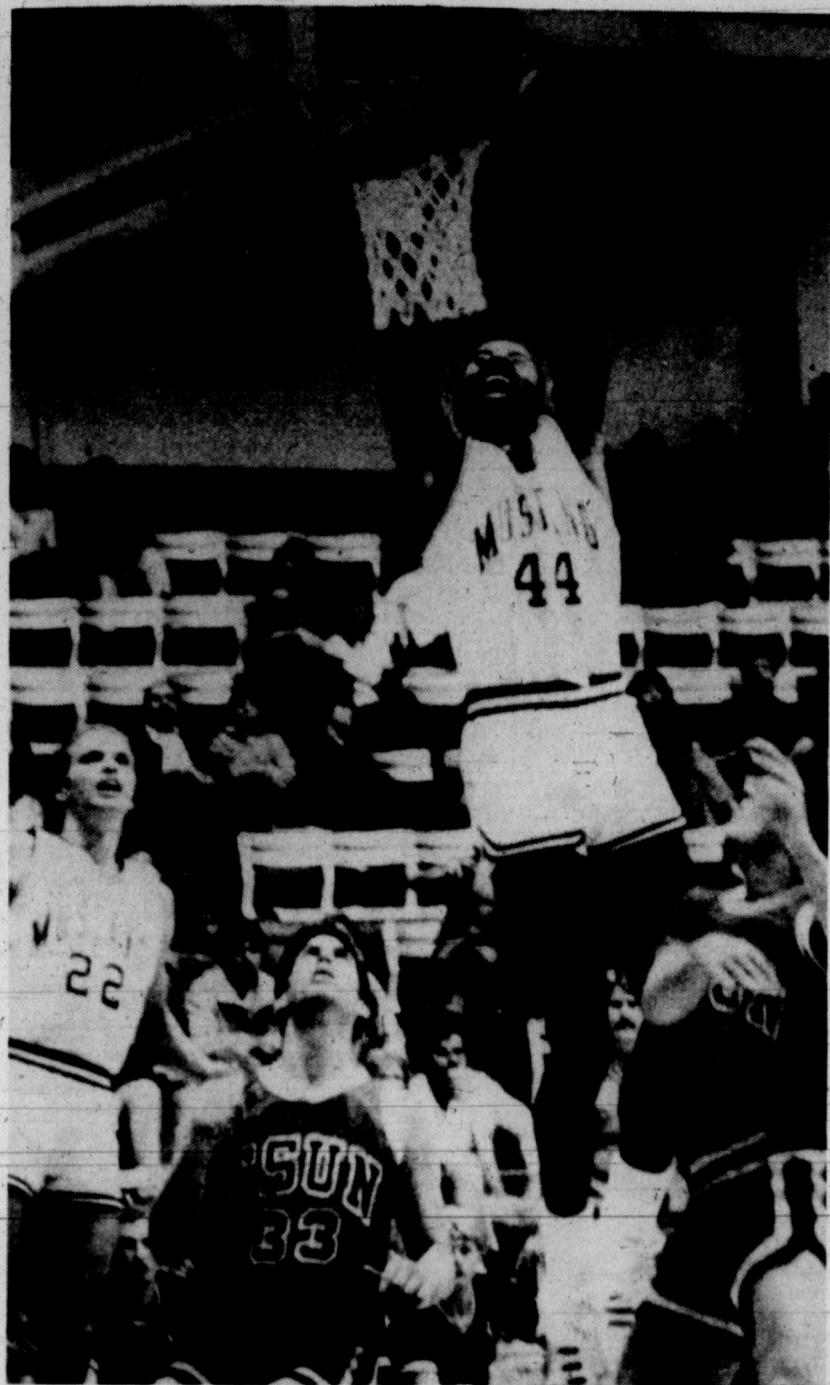

STEPHANIE PINGEL/Mustang Daily

Performing in the Poly Royal exhibition will be the entire team, club members and various guests, including former All-American gymnasts from Chico State. Even coach Rivera will even get in on the action, performing on the high bar, floor exercise and the trampoline.

The president of the gymnastics club, Joe Rovegno, will also be participating in the show. "In the past," said Rovegno, "the exhibition has been put on by the club — this is the first year the whole team will be involved, so the talent level will be much higher."

STEPHANIE PINGEL/Mustang Daily

Derrick Roberts slams ball home. The men's final game is at home tonight.
