

Cal Poly MBA degree program increases in popularity

By Laura Rosenblum
Staff Writer

First of two parts

The Cal Poly Master of Business Administration program is receiving a lot of attention lately.

Perhaps it's because the program has recently been expanded from a one-year to a more intensive two-year curriculum. Or maybe it's because the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business will visit the Cal Poly School of Business this January to consider the MBA program for accreditation.

But likely the popularity of the program stems from a nationwide surge of students returning to or continuing at colleges and universities to get their MBA.

According to Kenneth D. Walters, dean of the School of Business, the two-year growth from 45 to 120 MBA students at Cal Poly is a reflection of a national trend.

This trend is two-fold. It first centers around an increase of MBA degrees awarded in the U.S. in the past decade. A study conducted by the Graduate Management Admission Council found the number of new MBA degrees earned in the U.S. in 1982 was about 5,000, whereas in 1982 that number was 62,000.

A similar study done by the GMAC showed that in 1982 one out of every five master's degrees awarded was an MBA. The second part of the trend involves the growth in the number of women who are earning MBAs. A GMAC study indicates that the annual rate of growth in the number of MBA degrees awarded to women in 1982 was 17.3 percent while the corresponding rate for men was 2.0 percent. 43 percent of the 75 students admitted to the Cal Poly MBA program this fall were women. That's up from a 36-percent figure for women admitted last year.

"The bottom line is that women now are finding the MBA to be the major professional graduate degree that gets them entry into the job market," said Walters. "Females want business school now."

Cal Poly has the highest admission standards of any of the 19 California State University campuses.

It's daytime curriculum is intended for full-time students, unlike many other

Cal Poly firefighters clean up an ammonia spill Tuesday morning in the SCARAB printing room in Engineering West. The spill forced evacuation of classes on the second floor of the building.

Engineering West closed because of ammonia spill

By Susan Harris
Staff Writer

The Engineering West Building was evacuated Tuesday morning when ammonia spilled in the SCARAB printing room and the room had to be sealed off.

Tim Briggs, a Cal Poly firefighter, said the recycled ammonia was supposed to be caught in a bucket but overflowed onto the floor.

"It didn't damage anything, but maybe the wax on the floor," said Briggs.

According to Briggs, the strength of the ammonia was not at a dangerous level. "It's not the same kind of ammonia as the stuff used in pools or refrigeration units," he said.

Architecture student Ken Holman was in the printing room at the time of the accident. "I was working and the ammonia overflowed on the floor," said Holman. He tried to clean it up, but the ammonia poured out too fast.

Classes on the second floor of Engineering West were evacuated from 10 to 10:45 a.m. due to the fumes.

Richard Shaffer, a social science professor, was teaching down the hall from the SCARAB printing room when the accident occurred. "People in the back of the room started making comments of the type that occur when any strange smell is in a classroom, then we were evacuated," Shaffer said.

Briggs said no incident of this kind has happened in the year and a half that he has worked here.

SPECIAL REPORT

CMC overcrowding causes widespread concern

By Craig Andrews
Staff Writer

The current crisis of overcrowding in California prisons may allow the California Mens Colony to expand more rapidly than Cal Poly or San Luis Obispo.

By renovating the west facility, 500 beds will be added to the capacity of CMC, bringing the total number of beds to 6,852 — 4,308 in the east facility and 2,544 in the west, according to CMC officials.

CMC was designed to house 3,544 inmates — 2,400 in the east facility and 1,144 in the west.

The city administration of San Luis Obispo is upset because the state has bypassed requirements set forth in the California Environmental Quality Act.

Also, the cities of San Luis Obispo and Morro Bay and the county had to sue the Department of Corrections in July 1981 to obtain an environmental impact report on CMC expansion and to prevent work on the west facility until the state complied with environmental quality standards. Once completed, the effectiveness of the 1983 environmental impact report was challenged in the Superior Court by San Luis Obispo and Morro Bay in July 1983.

"The section on water was totally inadequate," said San Luis Obispo Mayor Melanie C. Billig.

"Expansion of water usage at CMC may very well use up the water supply reserve for Cal Poly," said Allen K. Settle, vice-mayor of San Luis Obispo and political Obispo or Camp Roberts, both California National Guard facilities in the county. "If they plan to take Camp San Luis Obispo, we want to know about that. It will affect our service capacity and our water," he said. A water shortage would also affect plans for a new cogeneration steam plant proposed for Cal Poly, he said.

Settle said the two military camps are ideal candidates for CMC expansion because they are existing facilities that aren't being utilized.

However, Kamien said the Camp Roberts issue was cleared up a couple of years ago, when the military decided it would not give up the facility because it needs the space.

"Nothing is impossible," Billig said. "All they have to do is get the governor to declare emergency conditions and pass a bill."

Kamien said, "The whole issue of CMC has been politicized. We're basically neutral."

But, another Department of Corrections policy that has upset city officials is that many inmates from other regions — often large metropolitan areas — are being ex-science professor at Cal Poly. He said the university plans to expand with more buildings and add an additional 1,000 students during the next five years.

If CMC continues to expand using the Cal Poly water allotment and then falls short, it might then seek water from San Luis Obispo, said Billig.

Water becomes an issue only during dry years, said Larry Kamien, CMC public information officer. "At this time we're within our allocation," he said.

However, Billig said, "Currently the

"We can't get a straight story," said Billig. It is difficult to obtain detailed information from the Department of Corrections regarding CMC, she said.

Billig and Settle recently asked the League of California Cities to make prison construction a topic of statewide concern for the upcoming legislative session. Settle is currently meeting with the league in Sacramento concerning the CMC issue.

Settle expressed concern that CMC may eventually expand into Camp San Luis

Prison expansion proposal plagues Cal Poly growth

There seems to be a plumbing problem at the West Facility of the California Mens Colony.

State officials from the California Department of Corrections want to use more water than they have been allocated from the Whale Rock reservoir, the same place the city of San Luis Obispo and Cal Poly get their water.

State officials are proposing to increase the capacity of the state's largest correctional facility by 500 beds to alleviate overcrowding conditions that plague all 12 state prisons.

City officials and concerned members of the Cal Poly community are beginning to raise their voices about this issue.

With the increased inmate population at CMC comes a demand for increased water use — water that some contend the facility already uses too much.

If the state is permitted to increase the facility as planned, proposed increases of student enrollment here at Cal Poly may have to be scrapped. This is simply not productive for the state, the city or the university.

State voters have approved millions of dollars worth of prison expansion revenue bills, increasing the state prison capacity by thousands. With all the new construction planned, many officials are mad that Environmental Impact Reports and compliance with the California Environmental Quality Act are not being required and enforced here at CMC.

It is apparently a political problem. San Luis Obispo is already taking its share of the prison load, and Cal Poly is threatened with a halt on expansion. How much is any one county supposed to take?

Prison crowding is a problem, one that needs to be spread equally throughout the state.

The future of San Luis Obispo and Cal Poly rest on the shoulders of our local officials. They have an uphill battle to fight and need our support.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Clarifications added to Middle East view

Editor — Some clarifications must be made on your Oct. 7 editorial, "New stance needed in the Middle East." First, your implication that Reagan is a credible source to foreign policy is fallacious. Even though he is president he is also the great contradictor in governmental policy. His public support of China (good commies) and public denouncement of the Soviet Union (bad commies) is classic. Most large economic circles agree that our trade is equal with both sovereign nations.

Second, classifying Israel as part of a homogenous zone termed the "Middle East" by our media is wrong. By topographic standards it is correct. By U.S. foreign policy guidelines it is incorrect. The U.S. has been supporting the Israeli economy and military for years. We do this for the reason you mentioned, "to maintain bases in the area."

Then the question arises, "Why can't the U.S. use its superpower status for peace instead of violence." Lest we forget our humble beginnings, the U.S., Constitution gives the answer. Section 8, articles 15 and 16: "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions; (16) to provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States." This clearly shows a resolution. It is best illustrated by an allegory. When you pick a sore it gets infected, grows and festers. Maybe we should follow the constitution's words and pull out. I'm sure the problem would heal, but scarring is always eminent.

After all, our great military lost over 200 lives on a mistaken outing in Lebanon. That is intolerable.

When we have a policy advocating both South Asian and Afghani murder, something is wrong.

Let Congress fix it or better yet, let the taxpayers.

Hijackers say 2 Americans dead

(AP) — Palestinian hijackers who seized an Italian cruise ship carrying 413 people claimed Tuesday to have killed two Americans, according to Western diplomatic sources in Syria and radio reports. The hijackers threatened more deaths unless 50 Palestinian prisoners in Israel were freed.

The claims could not be verified.

Reports of Americans aboard ranged from two to 28. President Reagan said all governments, particularly those with citizens aboard the ship, have a vital interest in the safety of the passengers and crew.

The 23,629-ton Italian liner Achille Lauro was hijacked off Egypt late Monday. The hijackers said they were from the Palestine Liberation Front, a dissident group of the PLO.

Senate debates balanced budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department used some creative bookkeeping Tuesday to keep the government afloat while Senate leaders spun their parliamentary wheels over a balanced budget plan that has stalled action on increasing federal borrowing authority.

At the same time, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said Congress is in its current fix because of insane administration economic policies.

In what has become a daily letter updating Congress on the governmental effort to keep balancing itself on a fiscal precipice, Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard G. Darman told Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan.

"As of this morning, we project an ending balance for Oct. 8 of zero; and — absent remedial action — a negative ending balance for Oct. 9."

'Meet industry' dinner slated for Thursday in Southern California

By Sally Kinsell
Staff Writer

Students will be given an opportunity to meet with business and industry professionals in Los Angeles at the sixth annual Meet the Industry Dinner to be held Thursday evening.

Seventeen companies from the Los Angeles and Orange County areas have bought tables at the Bonaventure Hotel, said coordinator Laurie Hill, tax manager of the Deloitte Haskins & Sells accounting firm in Los Angeles. "It's an annual dinner that the Los Angeles Alumni Association puts on to give students an opportunity to meet the recruiters that will be coming on campus to interview."

The event will begin with cocktails, followed by a prime rib dinner. After dinner Karl Karcher, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Karl Karcher Enterprises, will speak.

"It's kind of a PR thing for Cal Poly to get its name known in the industry and at the same time it gives the recruiters a chance to pinpoint potential employees," Hill said.

The dinner is free to students attending, and usually the companies buy cocktails, said Hill. Transportation is not provided to the area, however. Students with majors requested by the companies may attend the dinner, but if others have any specific reason to attend they can, Hill said. "Basically it's open to the entire university."

Some of the firms that will be represented at the dinner include TRW, Hughes, Lockheed, Goodyear and Bullocks. Six of the top eight accounting firms in the United States will attend the event. Most of these are requesting technical majors, but almost anyone may attend. Space is still available for about 120 students. Sign-ups will be taken for engineering and computer science majors in their departments, and all others may sign up at the accounting office.

Two student senators resign from office

By Lynette Wong
Staff Writer

The resignations of two Cal Poly student senators were announced at the Student Senate meeting last Wednesday.

Mike Beaupre from the School of Business and Shana Olson from the School of Science and Mathematics both submitted letters of resignation to Vice President John Sweeney.

"I was disappointed. I like to see senators representing their school to go ahead and do their best," Sweeney said. "I respect their decision to resign. Mike came in. I encouraged him to remain active as an alternate."

Sweeney said both senators resigned because of other time commitments.

Mike Beaupre, a business administration major, said his decision came about because of his involvement in other school activities.

"I'm already an ASI Finance Committee representative from the School of Business," he said he chose not to meet the Student Senate time commitments. "I'm not interested in parliamentary procedure as of this point. But I'm more than glad to be an alternate."

Olson, a biology major, said she decided to resign during the summer. She said her decision also stemmed from her unexpected workload.

"The basic thing is that I'm the kind of person who wants to give it her all — after seeing all the work involved, I couldn't give it my best shot."

She said she "thought about it all summer and came to the conclusion that it's better to resign at the beginning of the year instead of waiting until the middle of the term."

Olson said although she resigned, she feels comfortable with her decision.

"It would have been a great opportunity if I had the time."

As of now, replacements for these positions have not been filled. Sweeney said he sent letters informing the school councils of the senators' resignations.

"The school councils will have to elect a new senator. I hope they come forward with the names of the newly elected senators as soon as possible."

"I hope we get good individuals to replace them," Sweeney said. "I'd like to see one who'll retain interest and get involved with ASI."

Wellness Decathlon to test students for physical fitness

By Rebecca Berner
Staff Writer

A mock race designed to promote wellness and give students a chance to test their fitness levels will be held Thursday in the University Union Plaza.

The Wellness Decathlon, sponsored by Health Education Services, will consist of 10 events or fitness-testing stations where participants will be screened for things such as anemia and high blood pressure, said Andrea Marocco, a student peer educator.

Other free events will include height and weight measuring and the calculation of ideal weight, skin screening, leisure satisfaction screening, strength and flexibility testing, relationship assessment and dental fitness.

At the 10th station, alcohol-free dairies and information about drinking lifestyles will be provided.

If the testing turns up any possible health problems, participants will be referred to the Health Center staff, Marocco said.

Upon completion of the "race," decathletes will be greeted at the finish line by Health Center staff who will answer any questions and handle any referrals.

Although it is set up like a race, the decathlon is not designed to promote any competition among participants, Marocco said. "It's called a decathlon just for fun; it's a fun way to get your check-up."

The race is free and while most of the testing services offered at the decathlon are available on a day-to-day basis at the Health Center, a fee is normally charged for students without a health card, Perin-Martinez said.

Honeymoons that never end

By Lisa A. Houk
Sports Editor

The honeymoon isn't over just because a husband or wife becomes a student.

For Mike and Barbie Coss, the rice and wedding cake have been gone for a year, but their marriage has never taken a back seat to school.

"When we look at our lives, college is such a short period of time compared to our lifelong marriage, so school should never take priority over our relationship," said Mike Coss, a 25-year-old construction management student.

Barbie Coss works full-time and is the main financial supporter of the two.

"I went to Poly for a couple of years as an English major, but I decided to take time off to help Mike with his studies and bring home the money," said Barbie Coss.

The Cosses retain a positive attitude toward their marriage, school and work, but with all three going

'People think we're old fogies just because we're married, but it isn't true'

— Gary Joralemon

at once, their relationship feels the strain at times.

"People say you learn more about yourself in the first six months of marriage than at any point in your life — and it's true," said Mike Coss. "I found out I was a very average student who was satisfied with C's, until Barbie showed me how to bring out the best in myself."

Mike's grades went from C's to B's and A's after marriage, therefore proving two heads are better than one.

During the week, the Cosses both wake up at 5:30 a.m., and don't see each other until 6 p.m.

"As soon as we get home we talk about our day," Barbie said, "If it was good or bad we'll at least know right away."

The weekends are usually free, Mike said, but when last-minute obligations such as finals take the weekends away, the giving in their relationship has to begin.

The added strain for married couples going to school is not the classes and homework, but the full- or part-time jobs they need for financial support. This allows for marriage partners to lead independent lives, and whether or not this independence is agreeable to their relationship is up to the two persons involved with each other.

"It's tough to work from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and then go to classes from 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. because at the end of my day or night, I still have a house and a husband to take care of," said Laura Boyer, a 26-year-old home economics student who has been married for five years.

Tim Boyer, Laura's husband and a speech communications graduate, said, "Both of us have learned to manage our time so that the hours, days or weekends we spend with each other are quality and not quantity."

Quality time for married people can be cut short if schedules conflict, unexpected problems arise or if one or both persons are just plain exhausted at the end of the day.

For Gary and Lisa Joralemon, their free time is spent at the gym working out with each other to release some pressure and to share a common interest in physical fitness. The Joralemons both went to Cal Poly and worked during their first year of marriage, averaging 15 units a quarter and five hours of work a day.

"We struggled through our first year, but now that we're more financially secure, we can look back on that first year and realize how special those times were — we pulled together and we made it," said Gary Joralemon, a 24-year-old social science/criminal justice student.

The Joralemons said living in the Lanai Apartments, where many other married students live, makes it easier to study for classes and handle similar problems which couples have.

Gary and Lisa Joralemon combine classes and homework with marriage.

"I want to be married, teach and have kids — it's all a matter of planning and prioritizing the most important things plus getting a little crazy once a month like Gary and I always do," said Lisa Joralemon, a 26-year-old social science student.

Relationship or marital problems are not as pressing as the class scheduling problems the couples have during each new quarter. When lab classes and upper division courses are offered only at certain times, the working married students suffer the most.

"I just keep waiting and waiting each quarter for some added lab times and they never seem to show up because Poly naturally caters to the full-time students," Laura Boyer said.

The Boyers said most of their homework was busy work which a regular full-time student wouldn't notice, but since every hour counts with married students, the homework should be practical, worthwhile and to the point.

On the whole, the couples said their grades were just as good as before married life, but the number of units taken and money coming in drastically decreased.

"I was student-teaching full-time one quarter and had to pay the registration fees for six or more units as a full-time student, and I wasn't even on campus the whole quarter — I felt like the money was going nowhere," said Lisa Joralemon.

Married students may have some added pressures and limited time to enjoy the college life, but one thing is certain, their social life doesn't end just because a ring is worn on their left hands.

Gary Joralemon said, "People think we're old fogies just because we're married, but it isn't true. In fact we get a little wilder in the shorter amount of time we have."

Talking, adapting to changes and believing in each other have kept the Coss', Boyer's and Joralemon's honeymoons alive and the grades high, but what happens when the honeymoon has been over for nine years and college life is just beginning?

Ron and Lynn Ayers were in a very different situation when marriage and college coincided.

The Ayers had been married for about nine years, and Ron, who was 27 at the time, got accepted into the Cal Poly architecture program.

"Since no one turns down an invitation to Poly, especially in architecture, I had to drop everything and go," said Ron Ayers, now the 32-year-old owner of Ayers Construction in Atascadero.

The difficult part of this unexpected admittance to Cal Poly was that Ron Ayers was not only a husband, but a new father too, as his daughter Kelly was only six-months old. In addition to marriage and his recent parenthood, Ron also had the added burden of a 250-mile weekend commute from Anaheim to Cal Poly.

"People just don't commute 250 miles, but my husband must have been a freak, because he did it every weekend for two quarters," said Lynn Ayers.

The Ayers' relationship became a weekend affair, which sounds exciting, but two days to spend time with a daughter and wife can turn a relaxed weekend into a rushed 48 hours.

"Ron would get up at 3 a.m. every Monday in Anaheim to be in class at Poly by 7 a.m.," Lynn said. The worst part about it was trying to say goodbye when I was tired and grouchy, knowing that I wouldn't see him for the whole week, and worrying about him driving the 250 miles."

Ron said even though they only had the weekends together, the drive was worth it because, eventually, the Ayers learned how to have a good time in two short days.

"I felt awful at times during the week, being away from my wife and new little girl," Ron said, "but at least I lived with some young college kids in San Luis Obispo, who brought back some of my old college days."

Lynn Ayers was the financial supporter of the family, working full-time all week, with the responsibilities of being a mother every day after work.

"If I had a bad day at work, I couldn't just say, 'Ron you deal with the baby,' because he wasn't around," Lynn said. "It was tough not having someone carry the load sometimes, but Ron was carrying his own full load of classes, so I had to keep pushing."

The long distance and short weekends tested the patience of both Ron and Lynn Ayers, but the couple beat the mileage by not missing a weekend together and by each doing the work or homework that needed to be done. Whether it's nine years of marriage and then college, or college first and then marriage, or even college and marriage all at once, the married students at Cal Poly have found the way to make the honeymoon last quarter after quarter.

Expansion: no end in sight

CMC inmates complain about living conditions

By Craig Andrews
Staff Writer

Inmates at the California Mens Colony are complaining about the pressure caused by two people living together in closet-sized cells.

CMC has been increasing its service capacity for inmates, but has not been able to keep up with the rising prison population, said Larry Kamien, public information officer at CMC.

"We're all frustrated about overpopulation," said David Heroux, 22, an inmate at CMC. "There's more fighting; there's more pressure on us ... now they're bringing just anybody into the institution," he said. Heroux lives in a six-man "dorm" on one side of a building. It is the only dorm in that section. "The dorm's okay because we got a little room to move around," he said. He moved into the dorm Oct. 5.

Heroux said there is enough access to recreational facilities, but said "Once we're locked up in our houses we can't do anything. There's not enough room because of beds."

It's very degrading," said James Francis, 31, another CMC inmate. He said he switches cell mates every three to four days because the close quarters causes friction. "You can't even get to the bathroom without walking on the bottom bunk," he said. "There's no space element here; I'm trying to change this," he said.

"I'd knock the walls out and make four-man cells," said John Terheggen, 28, a CMC inmate. "When you're in there you both have to lay down," he said, adding that he gets along well with his cell mate.

"Despite the complaints that you're hearing, they'd rather be double-celled here rather than being somewhere else," said Kamien. CMC is a preferred facility; the trouble-makers are shipped out, he said.

In 10 years no one will talk about being double-celled, Kamien said. "Many of these guys have never had a cell to themselves — they've just heard of it," he said.

"We are very concerned about the level of security for the inmates and for the community. When there's over-crowding, there's violence," said San Luis Obispo Mayor Melanie C. Billig. "They're scared. This has been the country club of prisons; now we've got a whole other inmate population," she said.

Originally, each side of a building was designed for 50 inmates. There are now 106 inmates per side (including the six-man dorms). There are two buildings in each of four quadrants at CMC — approximately 1,145 inmates per quad.

Each cell measures 11 feet by five feet, nine inches — about 56 square feet.

Some inmates are also upset about the large number of new inmates who are constantly coming to CMC. "We don't know who's who now. There's too many races together," said Heroux.

Kamien said up to 150 new inmates may be shipped to CMC in a day. However, inmates are also being shipped out, he said.

"Everybody's moving around and doing something," said Kamien.

ported to CMC. Billig said counties with larger populations have more political power in Sacramento because they hold more seats in the Assembly.

There will also be a financial impact on the county from prison expansion. Often an inmate's family will migrate here when he is sent to CMC. Some of these families are on welfare, and the county pays for welfare, Settle said. Also, the new personnel who would accompany additional inmates could drive up rent prices in San Luis Obispo, he said.

It's not fair that CMC should be given priority over Cal Poly, said Settle. "Cal Poly is the largest single source of income for this community. The CMC may get the nod on expansion versus Cal Poly, because the CMC crisis is more important than expansion at Cal Poly. Inmates don't contribute to our sales tax at all; the student body does," he said.

Kamien said, "There are counties that are providing large numbers of inmates, and they don't have the facilities to house them. We're going to house inmates here to the best of our ability and our best service to the state."

City officials are upset that the state has waived CEQA and the EIR study on prison expansion. "That makes us angry. We want to know what the intentions of the Department of Corrections are for the next five years," said Settle. "They may not know, but we can ask them to find out and make some type of commitment. I'd rather know ... even if they aren't sure," he said.

By being exempt from CEQA, the state doesn't need to accept public input.

Kamien said the state waived the restrictions because there wasn't enough time. "We need those beds yesterday," he said.

"They have created this emergency situation. It's a question of management. They have the money; they had the lead time," said Billig.

Several new prison facilities have recently been approved. Between $60 million and $70 million has been allocated for 500-bed units at Tehachapi, Jamestown and Susanville. The environmental impact report is waived because of the "emergency." The Tehachapi facility will be on line soon, Kamien said.

Also, under another bill (AB 2251), a new 3,000-bed facility has been approved at Corcoran. Five hundred beds will be added at Ione; 3,000 will be added at Avenal.

Although these additions to the system are welcome, they are long overdue, said Billig. At CMC, double-bunking has been going on for about two years.

"Why, with all the money and the approved sites, can they still not get a prison built?" asked Billig.

San Luis Obispo city administrators plan a number of steps to curtail the flow of new inmates into the county, including the creation of a lobbying group of prison-impacted counties and cities and also the request of a formal response by the California Department of Corrections to the county and the City of San Luis Obispo concerning the two- to five-year plans for CMC.

Settle said a representative from the office of the director of prison construction will visit with city and county officials and local media within the month.

MUSTANG DAILY

Team's workouts hit hard

Fourth place doesn't say it all

By Andy Frokjer
Staff Writer

It was the best of times and the worst of times for the women's cross country team last weekend at Stanford Invitational.

Though hampered by a week of hard workouts and the illness of their top runner, the Mustangs still managed to come away with a fourth place finish and some good individual performances.

"We went out and gave it our best shot and we did very well considering," said Coach Lance Harter.

Stanford won the meet with a score of 47 points, followed by UCLA (82), UC Berkeley (111), and Cal Poly (112).

The Mustangs' chance to upset the host team and avenge a long string of second place finishes at the meet fell victim to the team's long range training goals. The master plan called for a week of hard training and fatigue took its toll.

"It really set back the performances of the entire team," said Harter. "It's my fault, I overestimated their ability to handle an overload of training, but it will pay off in the weeks to come."

And as if the fatigue wasn't enough to contend with, the Mustangs were forced to race without Katy Manning, who was out with the flu. Manning was the team's first finisher in its two previous meets this season.

"Fifteen minutes before the race I made the decision not to let Katy race," said Harter. "The team said, 'Okay, we have to go with what we have. Someone's going to have to suck it up.' That confirmed in my mind that we're going to be tough at the national championships. That's a character trait that coaches dream of in teams."

Harter couldn't have dreamed of a much better race from junior Lori Lopez, who finished seventh in 17:27 to lead the Mustangs.

"Lori ran a great race. Her confidence is growing every day that she can handle top-notch competition," said Harter.

Lopez was followed by Jill Ellingson, who is proving to be a rock steady performer in every situation, with a 14th place (18:03) finish.

"Jill's gaining experience now and she's learning not to be intimidated. As the season goes on, she is really going to make that top group of ours a real force," said Harter.

The Mustang scoring was completed by Jennifer Dunn who finished 19th (18:11), freshman Noreen DeBettencourt in 28th (18:24) and Sherri Minkler in 44th (18:41).

"The meet showed us we're not in a unique situation. You take away the number one runner from Cal, Stanford or UCLA and you add 40, 50 or 60 points to their score," said Harter. "With Katy running right with Lori, we would have a 40 point turn around. That would give us a good solid second place."

Water polo club turns to new image

By Carol A. Maltman
Staff Writer

Commitment, dedication and hard work are qualities that members of the men's water polo team must exhibit in order to play on the team this year, said Head Coach Paul Cutino.

"Players are expected to budget their time. To do their best in school and in water polo, so that both benefit equally," said Cutino. "I think we have just as much talent as we had in 1980 when Cal Poly won the NCCA championship, but we have less experience."

The team consists of 25 men, 18 will become members of the NCCA team, and the remainder will form the Cal Poly men's water polo club. The team currently has temporary NCCA status, which enables them to play in league games, but in spring of 1982 the water polo team lost its NCCA standing and reverted to a club. The Athletic Advisory Board will decide if the team is to retain its temporary status.

"The University had a negative image of the water polo team, the team has turned around for the sake of themselves and the University. We're changing our image," said Cutino.

The water polo team traveled to Allan Hancock College for its first game, but the Mustangs went under with a 19-13 score. Cutino said that this does not indicate the type of season the team will have. The team will travel to Vallejo this weekend to play in the California Maritime Academy Invitational Tournament.

"We have a lot of good players," said Cutino. He also mentioned the talents of co-captains Bob Frappia and Dan Panico, along with Bob Weaver, Charles Clark and Kevin Winkler, who will all contribute to the team's success.

Men run with the best

Harriers take third at Stanford

By Andy Frokjer
Staff Writer

In a world where winning is everything, finishing third is not something people are usually proud of. Yet while the men's cross country team left its unblemished record somewhere on the Stanford golf course last weekend, they showed they could run with the best even on an off-day.

Stanford played the ungracious host, running away with its own invitational scoring a mere 27 points, while University of California, Irvine followed with 48 points. Cal Poly's score of 92 was only good for third place, but the nearest Division II team trailed the Mustang harriers by 167 points.

The Mustangs, ranked third in Division II, arrived at the meet planning to run as a tight pack to repeat their winning performances at the Hornet and Fresno State invitational. But while their top five runners finished within a 34 second span after running 6.2 miles, the Mustangs had to settle with third place in the 27 team field.

Judging by experience, the Mustangs' pack-running strategy should have worked, but as

'Storms, Griffiths and Hernandez ran fine races ...'

— Tom Henderson

fortune unfolds, three other top teams chose the same plan of action. At the mile mark the Mustang pack found itself trapped in a big group of teams from Stanford, Irvine and San Diego State.

The party didn't last long however, as the Stanford squad surged at the 1.5 mile point, following with another surge on the first major hill and suddenly capturing a 60-yard lead on the field.

"The Irvine coach and I looked at each other and said, 'It's over ... we're running for second place,'" said Coach Tom Henderson.

From that point, the Mustangs held their position, as UC Irvine made an attempt to catch Stanford, but the Anteaters came up short of the first place finish.

Brent Griffiths and Jerry Hernandez led the Mustang pack through most of the race before relinquishing the top spot to fast-finishing Bruce Storms. Storms placed 12th overall in 32:20, while Griffiths finished 14th (32:25) and Hernandez was 18th (32:30).

"Storms, Griffiths and Hernandez ran fine races and held the front of the team solid," said Henderson.

With two other top Cal Poly runners having off-days and finishing well back in the field, the team's depth kept the Mustangs in contention.

"This could prove devastating to many teams," said Henderson. "However, everyone in the back pulled up to the front to fill the gap."

Michael Miner, finally returning to the form that put him on last year's national meet team, moved up to the number four spot placing 22nd in 32:44. Freshman Jim Chaney was not far behind, taking the 26th spot to complete the Mustang scoring.

Ken Ellingboe moved all the way from 12th man at the Fresno meet to nab the sixth spot (30th overall) and Don Reynolds, moving from the number 16 position, followed Ellingboe across the finish line as Poly's seventh man (31st overall).

"I have said that we have 14 men all capable of running in the top seven and races like this prove it," said Henderson. "One of these days they will all run great races at the same time and no one will beat us."

The Mustangs take this weekend off before hosting the Cal Poly Invitational on homecoming weekend, October 19.

WOMEN

Despite the fourth place finish, Harter had no regrets about keeping Manning out of the race.

"We can't afford to lose her for the season," said Harter. "We're thin. We can't afford to lose any of our top seven. In the past we've had eight or nine girls who were pretty much interchangeable. This year we don't have that luxury. We have to make sure all our top athletes stay healthy."

Nor did the Lady Mustangs have any regrets about their rigorous training schedule, even though it hurt their chances to win the meet.

"Our athletes realize that five years down the road when people ask about the 1985 cross country season, it's what your national standing was, not what your place at Stanford Invitational was," said Harter.

The Mustangs' top six runners will rest this weekend, while Harter will send a "B" team to the Northridge Invitational. The varsity squad will return to competition on October 19, hosting the Cal Poly Invitational.

MBA DEGREE

MBA programs which cater to to working students. Like most Cal Poly programs, it allows students to focus on a particular aspect of their field.

Students coming out of the Cal Poly MBA program need that extra job experience and ambition to compete with their counterparts from more well-known programs. Donna Davis, Placement Center advisor for communicative arts and humanities majors, said, "A lot of employers aren't even aware that there's an MBA program (at Cal Poly)."

Davis said few employers come to Cal Poly solely to recruit MBA students. Companies usually don't need a large enough number of people to fill management positions to warrant an on-campus visit, and if they do have a need they generally recruit from well-known, accredited MBA programs.

John Massingale, campus recruiter for Touche, Ross & Company, said his company looks primarily for undergraduates. "It's not typical to hire too many MBAs," he said, "and when we do we usually get them out of Stanford or Harvard."

John Bertrand, from the accounting firm of Deloitte Haskins & Sell, has a more open attitude about Cal Poly MBAs.

He said accounting undergraduates are preferred in the audit and tax departments but MBAs are considered for management advisory service departments.

"MBAs have greater business sense and management skills and also a maturity from more years of study," he said. "Because of the additional skills they (MBAs) have, they have potential to move from entry-level into higher levels of the business." Bertrand said entry-level MBA employees are "typically paid around $3,000 to $5,000 above the same entry-level employee with a bachelor's degree."

Ken Larson, campus recruiter for Hewlett-Packard, said his company recruits heavily from the Cal Poly undergraduate engineering and management information systems majors. But, the MBA program at Cal Poly, when evaluated by his company, "did not provide enough of the business background needed."

However, Russ Radom, a second-year MBA student and the president of the MBA Association, worked as a summer intern for Hewlett-Packard and was offered a permanent position with the company upon graduation in June 1986.

Radom graduated from Cal Poly in 1976 with a degree in natural resource management and worked for four years as a park ranger in California and Arizona. "I was dissatisfied with the upward mobility of a park ranger. My interests have changed over the years to finance," Radom said.

Walters realizes the irony that the MBA program is not accredited, while the Cal Poly undergraduate business school has an excellent reputation. However, Walters points out that the Cal Poly MBA program has a number of special features, most prominent of which is the elective courses offered to second-year students that allow them to specialize in one area, such as finance or marketing.

Another special feature is the agribusiness concentration — a cooperative program with the agricultural and business schools. The MBA program is being considered for accreditation this January by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

"The schools belonging to the AASSB are the ones recognized as having the highest academic standards," Walters said. "This is the accreditation body for business. People know and companies know who the members are," he said.

"We don't know how we'll measure up," Walters said. "Our approach is we know we have some problems, such as the need for more computers, but with the help of external financial support we are solving them."

Cal Poly business majors earned the same median salary as the MBA graduates from 1982 to 1983. Records from the Placement Office show that Cal Poly MBA graduates earned a median salary of $1,956 — approximately equal to the $1,950 median salary earned by Cal Poly students with undergraduate degrees in management information systems.

Davis said students with MBAs are going into three main areas of work: commodities, health care and management consulting. She said Cal Poly MBA students should put together a job-search strategy that emphasizes direct contact with the employers themselves.

"A lot of the MBAs try to go through the on-campus interview program and that's not the main vehicle," said Davis. "I recommend that they use it but I don't recommend that they put all their eggs in that one basket."
