A climb behind the Iron Curtain

By Jim Hawkins

Staff Writer

Like many students, Douglas Pflugh will spend a few weeks this summer indulging in his favorite hobby — mountain climbing. But this summer it won't be the average hike, for this trek will take place behind the Iron Curtain.

Pflugh has been chosen to participate in Caucasus Trek '87, an excursion sponsored by the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Youth Exchange Program. The four-week program, which will begin July 1, involves 12 American and 12 Russian youths, ages 16 to 22. The program will include hiking, backpacking, an adventure rope course, and cultural excursions into Moscow and the Caucasus area.

The highlight of the trip will be a backcountry trek culminating in a climb of Mt. Elbrus, the highest peak in Europe. According to Pflugh the climb will not be technically difficult, but its length and wind conditions — a wind-chill factor of up to 50 degrees below zero — will pose a tough challenge.

"Communication will be a problem on the climb," said Pflugh. "The food is supposed to be really bad. No high-tech dried foods, a lot in cans. People who have done this trip before said the biggest problem is agreeing on what food to take; their diet is so different."

Children's Center needs new facility to support itself

By Carol J. Vance

Staff Writer

The Cal Poly Children's Center is one of three centers in the California State University system which is in extreme need of financial support in order to continue operating.

Currently the center is located in the old World War II bungalows behind the new engineering building. The buildings are in constant need of repair. The center has been at Cal Poly for 14 years, and Liz Regan, director of the Children's Center, said a permanent building is needed to allow room for more children.

With expanded facilities and more children, Regan said the program could be enhanced and eventually be self-supporting. Center workers hope to relocate into a permanent facility soon, but without funding this will be impossible.

A report given by the child care task force said, "As a result of limited and unstable funding sources and escalating operating costs, the CSU children's centers are experiencing significant difficulty in maintaining existing levels of service and are unable to accommodate additional children."

Cal Poly's center has 36 children. Twelve are infants and 24 are preschool age, and there are 300 currently on the waiting list. The staff to handle these children consists of five core staff members and 15 to 20 work-study students during the year. There are also six interns and two teacher's aides.

The task force made 11 recommendations to the Board of Trustees, most of which deal with funding. It also recommended that each CSU campus be urged to include in its physical master plan the establishment of a permanent child care facility.

In response, the Board of Trustees included a $1.2 million program change proposal to fund child care in its 1987-88 budget. These funds, however, were not included in the governor's version of the 1987-88 budget.

The CSSA has requested that the $1.2 million be restored, but it is not known if the money will be included in the final budget signed by the governor. If the funds are included in the budget, $55,000 would go to Cal Poly's center. Regan said it would be used for salaries and program needs.

About 52 percent of current funding comes from the State Department of Education.

Some students may get 'special' admission

By Elizabeth Daymond

Staff Writer

Getting into Cal Poly is tough, but those who can't meet the academic requirements still have a chance through special admissions.

Last fall 3,321 new students enrolled at Cal Poly. Out of those, 617 qualified through special admissions processes, according to Cal Poly Admissions Officer Dave Snyder.

Snyder said these students broaden the education program for all students. "Education is more than grades and test scores. A lot of it is being in an environment with people from other walks of life," he said. "The students who come in through this process do have some impact on the quality of overall GPA and test scores, but it's not significant or negative."

There are two interest areas that admissions consider when extending special admission privileges. Some are mandated through legislation of the California State University system, others are authorized at the campus level.

Veterans who are residents of California are automatically eligible for admission as mandated by CSU legislation, as are senior citizens, if they don't prevent a regularly enrolled student from getting in a class. Students participating in the foreign exchange program are also automatically admitted. "The theory is if there's one coming in, there's one going out," said Snyder.

Students currently enrolled in high school are also eligible under CSU rules on a quarter-by-quarter basis if they qualify.

Freshmen survivors describe life in college

By Jon Bachman

Staff Writer

Entering Cal Poly as a freshman can be a very scary experience.

For many students, it is their first attempt at living on their own away from home. Others find it difficult adapting to new surroundings, new roommates and the pressures of that first exam.

But it's been a year now, and freshmen — soon-to-be sophomores — are evaluating their first year at Cal Poly.

John Berry, a freshman graphic communication major, said he was surprised at how much partying went on at Cal Poly.

"My expectations when I got to college were that I'd be studying a lot," Berry said. "But I found out that students here are real carefree and they like to party. That was a big shock to me because it was contradictory to what was printed in the catalog."

Berry also said he noticed there is much competition in college. "I think there is a lot of it, and the classes are set up to get as many people out of this school as possible," he said.

Freshman ornamental horticulture major Dan Holmes had just the opposite experience.

"I thought there would be a lot more parties, with everyone getting drunk all the time," Holmes said. "But it's not so. You also have to study a lot more than I expected, and I didn't think it would be such a grind."

Holmes said he was in awe of the other students and teachers when he first arrived, but that's now changed. "At first I looked up to everyone, but now I realize they're all on the same level as me."

"I heard college was hard, but I think it's a lot harder than I thought it would be," agreed Diane Dowling, a freshman chemistry major.

ON THE STREET

What qualities do good professors have?

Anthony Salafia, physical education senior:

They're available for the students and show an interest in them; they really want to help the students out. They're enthusiastic about the subject they teach.

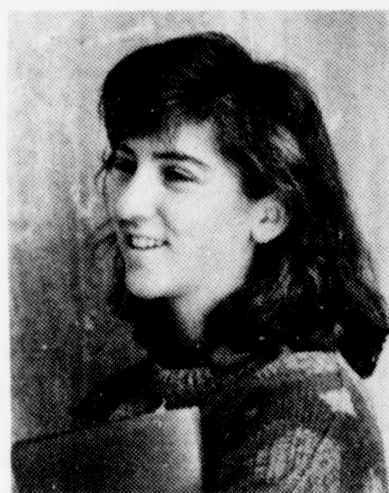

Paul Marshall, liberal studies senior:

They care about the students and make sure what they want to teach gets across. If you know they care, you'll work. The effort they put in can motivate you.

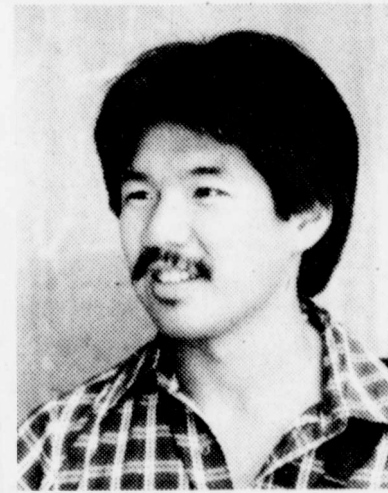

Carrie Leibert, graphic communication freshman:

They have interesting lectures. Teachers who talk in monotone are boring. Teachers who get into their lectures are the most interesting.

Kyle Naydo, aeronautical engineering junior:

They realize that their class is not the most important thing and not the only one you're taking. They don't bog you down with too much work.

Records office lags in processing transcripts

Editor — Recent articles in Mustang Daily concerning backlogs in grade processing should be a warning to students requesting transcripts. If they are uncertain about whether or not a grade change (including an incomplete) has been processed by the records department, they should indicate on their transcript request form that a change is needed.

I found out the hard way that grade changes are not processed when they are submitted. During a recent job interview a prospective employer looked at my transcript and asked why I had an incomplete from the previous year. I said that it must have been a computer error.

When I asked Karen Stubberfield of the records office to send a corrected transcript to my potential employer, I was told that I would have to pay the transcript request fee again. She said that I should have indicated the incomplete from spring quarter 1986 on the transcript request form, even though the records office received the new grade in July 1986, nine months before I made the transcript request.

Wouldn't it be nice if the records office decided to give refunds to all students who have had similar transcript problems?

It's no big deal that dispensers were vetoed

Editor — It seems to me that Kevin Swanson's response to condom dispensers is due to either ignorance or the typical repulsion to using the damn things. But what's the big deal? According to R.H. Bohl, it doesn't even matter — we don't like each other anyway.

Jeff Kelly

What! You're out of French Ticklers?

Earlier this month, after much acrimonious debate over Cal Poly's public image, the Student Senate voted to install condom dispensers in the campus' restrooms. Kevin Swanson, ASI president, promptly vetoed the measure, and it appears to be dead for the foreseeable future.

The dispensers were ostensibly to help prevent the spread of AIDS, but Swanson argued that the conspicuous presence of condoms was likely to encourage hanky-panky and defeat their own purpose.

Given the rather flaccid history of sex at Cal Poly, however, Swanson's fears that we will all multiply like rabbits seem unjustified.

Only at Cal Poly do men write letters to the editor accusing half the women on campus of lesbianism. Only at Cal Poly do screaming evangelists draw applause in the student union when they condemn coeds to hell for dating.

And then there was the infamous Swine Unit Incident a few years back (Was he wearing a condom?), which is not mentioned at fund-raising dinners.

Like the good engineer that he is, Swanson also brought up the issue of condom failure rates. What is the factor of safety of a condom, anyway? Perhaps a new class could help quantify the problem:

IT 141x Condom Testing Laboratory (I) Comparison of various prophylactic polymers and molding techniques. Deflection diagrams, factors of safety. One unit; lab fee required.

But suppose the Condom Act had passed after all. I offer a possible scenario, taking place in the near future:

Sunday, 1:30 a.m., Kennedy Library reserve room. Joe Mustang has just come back from a night on the town. His friend is waiting in the car and she is probably already asleep.

Joe staggers through the door and heads for the bathroom. With a huge sigh, he relieves himself at the urinal. Zipping up, he turns around and ... there it is.

Surrounded by Bible study fliers and Christian graffiti, the Condomatic protrudes from the wall, its truck-stop charm strangely out of place in a library bathroom.

Joe sighs with macho disgust (it was her heavily-dropped hint, anyway) and fishes for coins in his pocket. Three lovely ladies to choose from ... how many quarters? Above the Condomatic, a conspicuous sign reads:

This dispenser has been placed here by Associated Students Inc., in the interest of preventing sexually transmitted disease. But please, guys, don't take this as our blessing to go crazy — ASI cannot afford to expand the Children's Center beyond its present capacity.

Also, the School of Agriculture wishes to remind you that inappropriate use of university livestock is a violation of state law and is punishable by two years in prison, a $10,000 fine or both.

A few moments later, Joe is red-faced with anger and staggering toward the reserve desk.

"You're !, $&! machine stole my money!" he bellows at the clerk.

"You're out of French Ticklers!" Several students at the computer terminals look up briefly.

"You're the fourth one tonight," sighs the clerk, handing Joe an ASI refund slip. "And they're not our machines, so maybe you can tape a sign on it for me."

Pebble Beach fire smolders

PEBBLE BEACH — A charred landscape beneath a smoke-tinged orange sky greeted firefighters Monday in the wake of a wind-fanned $30 million fire that raced through exclusive Pebble Beach, destroying dozens of homes and forcing evacuation of hundreds of frightened residents.

At least 56 homes were damaged or destroyed by fast-moving flames that hopped from roof to roof across about 140 acres of brush and woods beginning Sunday afternoon. Fire officials blamed the blaze on a campfire, possibly set by juveniles.

"It's awful," groaned Tom Oliver, president of Pebble Beach Co., surveying the damage as dust and smoke colored the sky. "Isn't it just terrible? (Sunday) night it looked like Dante's 'Inferno.'"

The fire was expected to be contained at noon Monday, about 21 hours after the first wisps of smoke were spotted in the Huckleberry Hill section near 17-Mile Drive, but officials had to back off that prediction as they battled to snuff out flare-ups. No new time was set.

Cyclists may need helmets

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Although an opponent said it was "government by nanny," the Assembly decided Monday that motorcycle riders should wear helmets.

The vote was 41-29, a bare majority of the 80-member house, for AB36 by Assemblyman Dick Floyd, D-Hawthorne. However, an opponent, Assemblyman Gil Ferguson, R-Huntington Beach, asked for a second vote at a future session.

"The taxpayers in the state of California currently spend over $65 million a year maintaining people who through no fault of the taxpayers but the fault of the (motorcycle) rider are in one of the vegetable gardens in one of our hospitals," Floyd said.

But Assemblyman Larry Stirling, R-San Diego, called the bill "government by nanny, trying to tell everyone what's right for them."

Court reinstates drug tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday allowed the U.S. Customs Service to resume drug tests for employees who want promotions to drug enforcement jobs.

The court, over one dissenting vote, rejected a union's emergency request to block the tests pending further review of the case. Only Justice William J. Brennan voted to block the drug testing.

The National Treasury Employees Union is challenging the testing program, contending that it is an unwarranted invasion of privacy. The tests require workers to provide urine samples in the presence of someone administering the testing program.

The tests were halted last November after a federal judge issued an injunction. The judge said the tests are unconstitutional.

CIA agent misled Congress

WASHINGTON — Suspended CIA station chief Joe Fernandez, in secret sworn testimony made public Monday, said the CIA's covert operations chief misled Congress last fall when he testified the spy agency never facilitated private efforts to resupply Nicaragua's Contra rebels, even indirectly.

Fernandez said that his CIA superiors knew he was using a sophisticated encryption device supplied by Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North to pass on intelligence information to Contra leaders and private U.S. citizens to assist air drops of weapons and other supplies.

Last October, CIA covert operations chief Clair George said: "The CIA is not involved directly or indirectly in arranging, directing or facilitating resupply missions coordinated by private individuals in support of the Nicaraguan democratic resistance."

Lebanese prime minister dead

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A bomb planted in Prime Minister Rashid Karami's attache case blew up during a helicopter flight Monday, killing the Moslem politician.

The co-pilot took the controls from the wounded pilot and landed the shattered aircraft.

Thirteen people — Karami, aides and crew — were aboard the French-built Puma. Interior Minister Abdullah Rassi was among the four wounded, all of whom were released after treatment.

The assassination of the Syrian-backed Karami, 65, Lebanon's longest-serving prime minister, further dimmed prospects for an early end to the sectarian violence that has battered this nation for 12 years.

A man identifying himself only as Capt. Hammoud claimed responsibility for Karami's assassination on behalf of the hitherto unknown "Lebanese Secret Army." But police said the telephone call appeared to be a hoax.

Karami, a Sunni Moslem, was prime minister 10 times in 32 years and was backed by Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon.

Pilot could face charges

MOSCOW (AP) — West German officials had their first talk Monday with the teenager who flew a light plane to Red Square through 400 miles of Soviet air defenses, and they said he appeared to be reacting calmly to his stay in prison.

In Bonn, the Foreign Ministry condemned Mathias Rust's flight and said it hoped the Soviets would be lenient with the 19-year-old West German pilot.

There was no indication that Kremlin officials had decided to file charges against Rust.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the case was under investigation and Rust could be given 10 years in jail and a fine of 1,000 rubles (about $1,500).

Dowling said she's gotten used to college because it's only hard some of the time. "It's different in high school because you go to the same classes every day," she said. "Here it's more spaced out so you have panic and then calmness."

She said when she first came to Poly, she feared she wouldn't be able to find her way around, but after a year she's mastered it.

Kelly Hawkins, a freshman speech communication major, said her first year in college was a real learning experience. "I thought I knew everything in high school, and when I got to college I found out how much I didn't know and how much more I have to learn," she said. "I also think college opened up my mind to all the possibilities there are in the world."

Melanie Capps, a freshman agricultural management major, said she thought college would be a lot harder than it is.

"When I first got here I thought I'd be studying a lot and wouldn't have time to do things," she said. "But I find it's not that hard, and I have a lot of free time."

Jose Nuno, a Sequoia Hall resident adviser, said he tells freshmen to take fewer units during their first year.

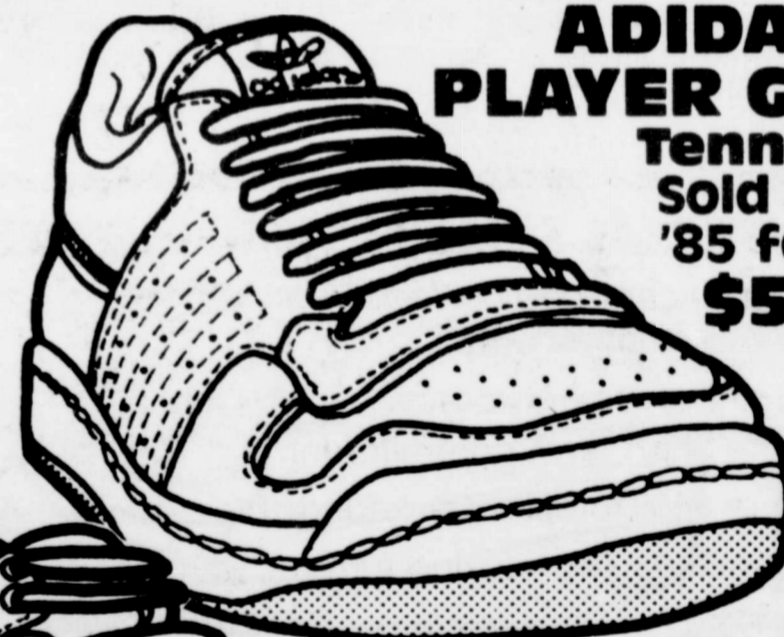

"A lot of students are used to doing well in high school, and they think that will carry them through in college," Nuno said. "They also think they have to take the number of units the curriculum tells them to, and that's wrong. I usually encourage freshmen to take a smaller load of classes their first year because they need to learn how the system operates," he said.

Nuno said students can avoid early disappointment if they figure out what instructors want.

"Go to each instructor's office and find out what they want from you," Nuno said. "Students need to pay attention to what the teacher stresses in his lecture. But each freshman is an individual, and their expectations of what college is like will differ in more ways than just grades."

Renaissance Faire illustrates life in Elizabethan times

By Carolyn Duvall
Staff Writer

It takes a year of planning and intense effort to create an annual two-day event that transports visitors back in time to the Elizabethan era and the Renaissance.

The Central Coast Renaissance Historical Society started a few years ago when Marianne Carlson was thinking of a promotional idea for the Lawrence Winery, which was changing its name to Corbett Canyon. "The word 'renaissance' means 're-birth,' and the winery was changing its name so I thought it was appropriate to have a Renaissance Faire," said Carlson, president of the society.

The Historical Society's goal is to promote and educate people about the history of the period through local events.

Carlson didn't have any previous knowledge of how to run a fair, but she received helpful input from Rick and Esther Smith, two seasoned Renaissance Faire-goers who attended her fair in full Elizabethan costume. Carlson later left the winery, but decided to get fully involved in putting on a Renaissance Faire.

The first fair was held in 1985 with only seven people involved in organization, building the fair site, recruiting artisans and teaching workshops on speech, costuming and mannerisms.

"We do lots of research to keep the event historically accurate. We even research the characters we play," said Carlson. "Most people who attend the fairs don't realize that we've taken the fair to this extent. Maybe sometime later they realize that we were portraying real characters. It's a total re-enactment of the period," she said.

This year's fair will have 65 authentic handmade craft booths, about 25 food booths and 15 game booths.

"Everyone has to use natural materials in building their booths," said Carlson. "Food similar to the period will be served, or if it's something modern, we at least try to give it an Elizabethan name. All the vendors must be in costume as well. We want people to feel as though they have slipped back into time. Everything seems like a small village. You can't even see the highway from the fairgrounds."

The fair will be held at El Chorro Regional Park, across from Cuesta College on Highway 1, on June 13 and 14. "We even have a person who will be minting 'authentic' coins of the period," said Rick Smith, entertainment coordinator.

Fair organizers are expecting nearly 25,000 visitors with more than 400 costumed actors portraying life in the Elizabethan era. "We have three stages with big-time actors. People can come out here and be entertained by them for eight hours straight," said Smith.

Funding for this event comes mostly from donations and fund-raisers. The society has held a fashion show and wine tasting and hosted the opening nights of Shakespearean plays. "We also entertain at Farmer's Market to hopefully generate some interest," said Carlson.

Other support has come from the California Conservation Corps in clearing firebreaks and building fences to keep cattle out of the fairgrounds. "We've also had lots of entertainers donate talent simply because they have so much fun coming to the event," said Carlson.

The St. Jude Guild contributes heavily to the fair. The guild is a group of people who get together every weekend to build booths, teach classes on the Renaissance and do general work for the annual fair.

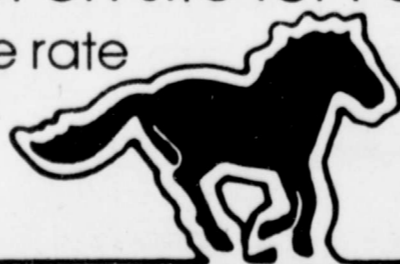

Smith said it is appropriate that the guild is named after St. Jude. "St. Jude is the patron saint of impossible causes," he said.

This money provides free child care for 19 of the 36 children to benefit low income parents. About 19 percent comes from ASI funding. Regan said if the $1.2 million program change proposal goes through, the 19-percent ASI share will no longer be necessary to support the center. The final 29 percent comes from parent fees of $13 per day.

According to Regan, the center provides Cal Poly with much more than just child care. It also provides an academic resource for the campus and lab experience for child development majors, dietetics majors and physical education majors.

CABRILLO, Calif. (AP) — At his commencement ceremonies at Cabrillo College, Adragon De Mello said his studies there were easy, once he adjusted to not having a playground handy during breaks between classes. After all, he's only 10.

The freckle-faced De Mello graduated from the community college on Saturday with high honors for earning a grade average of at least 3.75 in a system where a 4.0 average would represent straight A's.

"I had to get used to not having any playgrounds to go to between classes," he recalled.

But he's serious about his studies and has been accepted by UC Santa Cruz, where he already has finished two astronomy classes.

tapped for initiation in Mortar Board as an honorary member of the Tassels Chapter at Cal Poly. Howard has been instrumental in getting Mortar Board started on campus.

Cal Poly agriculture students enrolled in Agriculture Credit and Finance competed in the Fourth Annual Agriculture Loan Contest sponsored by San Luis Obispo Production Credit Association, where students evaluated a facsimile loan request. Mike Oliver, Shaun Simpson, Randy Bernard and Guy Gomes took first place honors. Carla Palazzo, Louanne Wolfe and Cornelia Vincze took second place honors.

Mustang Daily overcame an early 5-0 deficit and scored 12 runs in the second inning Sunday en route to a 23-16 victory over KCPR in the Second Annual Ed Zuchelli Memorial Softball Game. The newspaper's victory avenges last year's 11-10 loss to the radio station. Mustang Daily attributes much of the credit to several neighborhood boys who harangued KCPR throughout the game.

some journal articles on them. I view this program as an excellent way to experience the people and lands firsthand."

Pflugh said the area they will spend most of their time in is an oil export area with poor living conditions. He compared it to the Appalachian Mountain area in the United States.

"Except for some tourist things we'll do in Moscow, we'll be isolated most of the time anyway," he said.

He also said that from what he has heard from previous Caucasus trekkers, the Russian and American groups are kept apart much of the time, even staying on separate floors of the building they'll live in.

"I think an ideal situation would be to have a Russian roommate. Hopefully this year will be better," he said. "Once you're on the road in the back country they can't restrict us, so it will be open anyway."

Pflugh first got interested in climbing when he went on a backpack trip with the Yosemite Institute in 1981. Since then he has experienced numerous outdoor activities including kayaking, climbing, caving, back country skiing and sailboarding.

When he graduates he would like to introduce more people to the outdoors and raise the public's environmental awareness.

"I've given a lot of thought to teaching. When I first get out I'd like to teach in something like the Yosemite Institution," he said. "I'd like to make people aware of the condition of the environment. When people do things that don't promote the general good, they do so out of a lack of awareness of what they're doing. Most resource problems result because people aren't aware of the end result of their activities."

Mustangs eagerly await major league draft

By Marty Neideffer
Staff Writer

For the next three days college, junior college and high school baseball players around the country will be on the edge of their seats.

The reason being that from now until Thursday, Major League Baseball will be conducting its annual amateur draft.

Several Cal Poly players are among thousands throughout the country hoping to extend their baseball careers into the professional ranks.

The Mustangs with the best shots at advancing their careers are catcher John Orton, third baseman Scott Reaves, center fielder Jeff Smith, pitchers Eric Bratlien and Jeff Sutter and shortstop Dave Poirier.

Orton is the most likely candidate to be drafted from this year's Cal Poly team. He has been contacted by several major league teams and should go in the very early rounds.

The favorite after Orton should be Reaves. The Mustang third baseman possesses a stronger than average arm in the field and has a good deal of power at the plate. Reaves has been contacted by several teams this year, most recently by the California Angels.

His 12 home runs led the Mustangs this year, but Reaves still felt he had a somewhat off year in the power department. "I didn't put real big power numbers up this year," said

Reaves. "I think if I do get drafted, though, it will be because of my power potential."

One reason the muscular third baseman didn't put up some big numbers this season was that he had to play half his games at San Luis Obispo Stadium. A lot of Reaves' power is to the opposite field, and with a 390-foot power

'It doesn't matter what round I go in, just as long as I get an opportunity.'

— Scott Reaves

alley in right-center field and a stiff breeze constantly blowing in it's not too easy to put one out.

Cal Poly coach Steve McFarland said Reaves will get his chance to play. "I think Scott will be drafted, but probably in the lower rounds," said McFarland.

Reaves isn't concerned with what round he goes in; he just wants to play. "I just want to give it a shot. It doesn't matter what round I go in, just as long as I get an opportunity," said Reaves.

Pitchers Sutter and Bratlien also have outside chances of being drafted. Both had consistent years in an otherwise disappointing season for the Mustangs.

Bratlien probably has the better shot of the two pitchers. He was the Mustang ace for most of the year and finished with a 6-3 record in conference play. The righthander has been contacted by at least one scout, but seems to be unsure of whether he wants to turn professional this season or complete his last year of college eligibility.

Sutter has an outside shot at being drafted, but has more of an opportunity to sign as a free agent after the draft. He came back this season following an arm injury that slowed him early on.

This year's longshots include Smith and Poirier. It's not likely either will be selected in the draft, but they may be given a shot as free agents.

McFarland thinks the center fielder and shortstop have an outside shot at getting professional contracts. "Dave and Smitty are what they call fill-in guys. If an organization needs help in the outfield or middle infield, then they might go, but they didn't have the type of year where I can definitely say they'll be drafted," he said.

Smith doesn't think this year's draft is the end of the road for him, however. "I still feel I have a chance even if I'm not drafted this year," said Smith. "I'm playing summer ball for the Santa Maria Indians and should get some exposure playing there. If I do well maybe I'll sign from there."

Rams give Robinson extension

ANAHEIM (AP) — Coach John Robinson of the Los Angeles Rams, who has directed the team to the National Football League playoffs each of his four seasons, agreed Monday to a four-year contract extension through the 1991 season.

Robinson had been entering the final year of his original five-year deal with the Rams.

"It's always been a dream of mine to make the Rams into the best team in professional football, and John Robinson is the coach to fulfill our dreams," Rams' owner and president Georgia Frontiere said as she announced the contract extension.

Chances may be greater for Poirier and his teammates this year than in previous years because baseball has discontinued its January free agent draft, which was used primarily to draft junior college players. There will also not be a secondary phase, which was previously used for players who had been drafted before.

This means that all players will be included in a single draft. As a result, the number of players selected this year is expected to exceed that of any previous year.

with applications include hardship cases, relatives of faculty, athletes and ethnic and disabled students. "If an applicant has been turned down, there's a procedure to determine if there's factors that limit their choice of school or if it's a real hardship on the family to send them away to school," said Snyder.

These applicants are local residents for whom "it's a matter of that student not getting a university education, or admitting him to Cal Poly," said Madolyn Nix, journalism department secretary.

Children, grandchildren, parents, grandparents and sibings of Cal Poly employees and retirees with more than 15 years at Cal Poly are also automatically eligible for enrollment pending a minimum 2.0 GPA. "It's one of the fringe benefits of being a state employee," said Bev Hensel, director of the advisement center in the School of Business, "but I don't see a preponderance of faculty sons and daughters. A lot more get in through regular admission."

Last fall, 50 students were admitted to Cal Poly through this program.

The Student Academic Services program asserts that within the next 10 years, the distribution of ethnic minorities admitted to Cal Poly will achieve parity with the 1995 graduation class.

"Certain ethnic minorities do receive extra consideration," said Snyder. "Admissions in 10 years will be an exact mirror of what comes out of the high schools."

Last fall 134 athletes were accepted through special consideration.

"The coaches select and nominate the students, and they have to meet the eligibility criteria for the most part," said Snyder. "If the student's academically ineligible but has a reason, the director of athletics and the dean of the school they apply to will review the student for capability."

The more impacted a program, the higher the percentage of students who were admitted through special consideration. For example, the School of Liberal Arts admitted 94 special applicants last fall, which made up 33 percent of those admitted. The School of Engineering had 25 percent of its students apply through special programs. The schools of Professional Studies and Education and Science and Math admitted 18 and 13 percent of their new students through these programs. The School of Agriculture, the only non-impacted school at Cal Poly, admitted just 5 percent of its applicants through special programs.

Confusion over Topsy Taxi slows program involvement

By Monica Fiscalini
Staff Writer

People seem to be confused about the revised Topsy Taxi program — and the coordinator would like to see the confusion cleared up.

The pilot Topsy Taxi program operated during fall quarter. After a brief hiatus, some changes were made and the revised program started April 23.

Topsy Taxi coordinator Franklin Burris said the most important differences between the old and new programs are that under the new program, people don't call the taxi themselves and they don't need to show a student identification card.

Topsy Taxi is a service for anyone who has had too much to drink. Fraternities, sororities, clubs and businesses that sell alcohol may purchase books of 10 coupons for $21.50 each. They can then give coupons to patrons who have had too much to drink and the patrons will receive safe rides home. The giver of the coupon must call the taxi; patrons do not call the taxi themselves or they will have to pay.

Once the taxi arrives, the patron gives the coupon to the driver, who gives the patron a brochure about drunk driving. The location of the patrons' cars is also recorded in case they forget by morning.

The Yellow Cab Company, which gets $6.50 for each coupon, returns the coupons to Topsy Taxi.

Under the pilot program, the cab company charged ASI between $4 and $15 for each student who got a ride home. The new flat rate is an average of the pilot program fares.

Gary Howell of the Yellow Cab Company reported that only one coupon has been used since the new program began. "I think it's because everything changed. It's not quite as easy as it was before," he said.

Not all alcohol-selling businesses in town are part of the program. Burris said he hopes participants will have a poster in the window indicating that the service is available. Otherwise, a patron should ask if Topsy Taxi is available.

Osos Street Subs is a participant, but does not have a poster up yet. On a recent Thursday night an employee behind the counter was caught unaware of the program. Manager Polly Derr said managers know about the program.

Bob Fairchild, a manager at Woodstock's Pizza, said there is always a manager on duty who will be in charge of distributing Topsy Taxi coupons. With 60 employees it is difficult to have them distributing coupons, he said. Fairchild said there will be an employee meeting in two weeks to discuss the program.

Burris said a common concern of businesses was whether they would have to give coupons to patrons of other establishments. Burris decided they would be allowed to refuse coupons. "That's a concession we've made," Burris said.

Fairchild said he wouldn't refuse a request for a coupon if someone got drunk someplace else. "I'd rather not take that chance." He said buying alcohol at Woodstock's is not required to get a safe ride home.

Burris said one fundamental problem is that some people don't want to take a cab home.

F. McLintock's manager Mike Stanton agreed and said the major problem is that the taxis don't arrive fast enough and people don't like to wait. But he said Topsy Taxi is a good program as long as it's used properly.
