No solutions in sight for SLO's homeless, only problems

California houses 10.9 percent of the nation's homeless. There are 3 million homeless nationwide. At any time there are from 35 to 100 homeless in San Luis Obispo.

By Heidi Linkenbach
Staff Writer

The homeless in San Luis Obispo have a problem and it's not just that they are without places to live. The problem is that without permanent addresses it's next to impossible to qualify for welfare, food stamps or subsidized housing grants.

Furthermore, children living with parents at a non-permanent address are unable to enroll in school.

These are some of the reasons that the city of San Luis Obispo agreed to give $10,000 to shelter the homeless at a City Council meeting Thursday. The council also called on the county to pitch in, and asked the Board of Supervisors for a joint public meeting to find some solutions to the homeless problem.

The $10,000 will be given out to groups which house the homeless such as People's Shelter, Zedakah and the Salvation Army.

At any time, there are from 35 to 100 homeless people citywide, said Hank Alberts, interim chairman of the San Luis Obispo County American Civil Liberties Union. The ACLU is a group of citizens organized to protect individuals whose civil liberties are being violated. In the case of the homeless, this includes the freedoms lost when they can't get a job, receive an education or exercise basic rights, such as voting.

Robert McGinn, president of the San Luis Obispo Ministerial Association, contends that since the problem is countywide, the solution must be countywide. "We have the obligation to welcome the stranger into our midst," he said. His group helps the homeless by supplying food and temporary shelter. They are also beginning a program where each church in the city will shelter the homeless for one month. The Seventh-Day Adventist church will be the first to shelter the homeless, beginning in November.

The Zadakah House, another organization committed to helping the homeless, is really a bus, equipped with eight bunks, which picks up transients at Mitchell Park and drives them to the Atascadero State Park campground, where they can sleep peacefully and legally.

Scouts get together

By Diane Wright
Staff Writer

Students and faculty who are Eagle Scouts are being asked to join a national Eagle Scout chapter being formed at Cal Poly.

Tom Lebens, an electronic engineering major, is on a steering committee of the national organization and is trying to locate Eagle Scouts on campus.

Richard H. Schmidt, scout executive for the Santa Lucia Area Council of Boy Scouts of America said, "Our main purpose is to make the flame of scouting rekindle in people who have let it die over the years."

Schmidt said only 1 to 2 percent of all Boy Scouts nationwide attain the rank of Eagle Scout. The council's list of Eagle Scouts in San Luis Obispo County contains more than 200 names and ranges from a man who earned the rank in 1925 to 20-year-old Cal Poly students.

About 25 Eagle Scouts and their guests attended a barbecue at Mission Plaza Friday.

"We had a good time meeting with each other," Lebens said.

Donald Cone, resources vice president and public relations representative of the Santa Lucia Area Council, said he is not aware of any other universities that have a national Eagle Scout chapter, but he said he assumes there are some.

Cone said Scout-A-Rama, which will be held at Mission Plaza on Nov. 7 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., might be of interest to Eagle Scouts at Cal Poly. Cone said it will show Eagle Scouts from other areas of California and the United States what Boy Scouts in the Santa Lucia Area Council are accomplishing.

Another event will be Camp-O-Ree-Camporal, which is scheduled for spring. Scouting groups compete with each other on levels of scouting skills at a

DUI enforcement officer stresses education, apprehension of drivers

By Coleen Bondy
Staff Writer

Too close to the curb, the driver of the car ahead suddenly swerves to the middle of the street, overcorrecting for the mistake. The driver drifts slowly toward the curb again, and repeats the earlier movements.

Joan DuPuis, the new driving-under-the-influence enforcement officer for the San Luis Obispo Police Department, needs no more evidence that this driver may be having an alcohol-related problem. She pulls up close behind him, turns on the red and blue lights of the police car, and signals for the driver to pull over.

Walking up to the window of the driver's side, she asks him for his license and explains to him that he was swerving all over the road.

DuPuis asks him to please step out of the car. She faces him squarely and says, "Now I want you to be honest with me. How much have you had to drink tonight?"

The driver almost invariably answers two — two beers, two glasses of wine, or two cocktails. And he hasn't had a drink for an hour or so.

She will continue with questions about how much sleep he had the night before, what he had for dinner, and over what period of time he was drinking. All of these factors play a role in how alcohol affects a person.

DuPuis then administers a series of tests. The driver is asked to walk a line, heel-to-toe, 10 steps forward and nine steps back. He is asked to stand with his feet together, eyes closed and head tilted to the stars.

Swaying gives him away, perhaps. Or else he fails to count from 60 to 70 forward, and 50 to 40 backward. Depending on how he performs on the tests, DuPuis must decide if she would want this person driving on the same road with someone she cared about. For his sake, and the sake of others, she must get the drunken driver off the road.

Last Saturday night, DuPuis pulled over about six or seven cars. One person was lost, looking for the freeway. He had been driving in the left-hand turn lane down Monterey. Another driver was too engrossed in a conversation to notice that she had run two stop lights.

Only one driver was deemed too intoxicated to drive, after he failed to take 10 steps forward and turn around and count out nine steps back. He counted 16 steps in one direction, looked around confusedly, and then counted from 16 to 24 back the other way. After performing poorly on a number of other tests, he was taken to the county jail for a breath test.

"We're not out there to seek and destroy," said DuPuis of her job. She is the only officer who deals strictly with DUI enforcement, only called away when she is needed for backup.

DuPuis enjoys public speaking, which is probably a main reason for her being chosen to be the DUI enforcement officer for this year. The police department is stressing education and apprehension, two things that DuPuis feels strongly about. She

A parallel universe reveals only ignorance

At one time, during my travels to the many countries of this world, I happened upon a society whose culture was so unique and different, that I thought it might be worthy of discussion.

At first glance, it might seem to be the same as any of the multitude of other societies on this planet. But, when considered more closely, it reveals its almost unbelievable oddities.

It seems that its inhabitants worship, of all things, brussels sprouts. I know it's hard to believe, but legend has it that the forefathers of this culture can be narrowed down to two people: Ion and Dawn. These two people were simple vegetarian farmers when the world was first created, and they lived quiet lives. They resided in a place that was situated on the eastern-most border of a vast swamp.

Because the swamp did not offer a great variety of things to eat, they were constantly searching for new sources of food. Over the years, they had looked almost everywhere for something different, but they were never to enter a certain bog, known to them only as Ignorance. One day, when Dawn was out scouting for new foods, she happened to spot a peculiar-looking plant that she had never seen before. The only problem was that it was in the bog. So, in Ignorance, she picked one of the plant's seeds and quickly ran home and planted it.

All of a sudden, there arose a mighty voice from the ground, and it said unto Dawn, "Thou hast done a great deed. Thou hast set me free from Ignorance, and thou shalt be blessed in the eyes of all for your courageous act." The voice continued, "Thou shalt never again be burdened by searching for food. Thou shalt, from this point on, reside in a place of beauty and life, away from the grim days of the swamp. Thou shalt rule over your companion, for your courage has shown you worthy." Dawn looked toward the voice in awe, and asked only one question of this entity: "What shall I call this being, that has set us free from our misery and given us a new life?" There was a silence, then a voice, "Thou shalt call it brussels sprouts."

This story has been handed down through many generations, and it has been this society's primary source for its cultural development. This is quite obvious when you consider, perhaps, a single family.

The woman is responsible for having the children, but that's as far as it goes. From the moment they are brought home, the man takes over the responsibility for raising them. Since he was the meek one and did not stray into Ignorance, he is given the simpler tasks that the society has. He does the housework, is involved in the home and school clubs and takes all the kids to their respective soccer games. The woman, on the other hand, goes to the office every morning, waits for dinner to be put in front of her and always has first dibs on the paper on Sunday mornings. She is also the family's instructor of religion.

Every Thursday afternoon (that's their Sabbath), she leads her family out into the backyard garden, and they have their religious service. Every family has its own garden of brussels sprouts, and each worships it in a different way. Some just pray silently, while others start a sing-along, praising the vegetable for bringing them out of desolation and into the wonderful world that they live in now. The woman is also the holder of the sacred Rule Book.

This book lays out the laws by which they lead their lives. If there is ever a question about whether or not something should be done, the Rule Book is always there to be consulted. It also helps the people to understand the afterlife. It says that if you do not worship your brussels sprouts, and treat them with respect, along with all other vegetation on Earth, you will be condemned to live out eternity in Ignorance. On the other hand, if you do your duty, and follow the rules as they're laid out, you'll spend the afterlife in a place as wonderful as the world they live in today.

From the moment the kids are brought home, the man takes responsibility for raising them. Since he is the meek one, he is given the simpler tasks.

From the moment the kids are brought home, the man takes responsibility for raising them. Since he is the meek one, he is given the simpler tasks.

This is, of course, the oddest of the multitude of societies on Earth. It is an example of what can happen when a story of legend becomes accepted as the universal truth. Again, this is a primitive culture, that can, in no way, shape or form, be compared with our own. For instance, our culture and society would never decide which is the superior sex by a simple act done in ignorance. It's too intelligent for that. Yes, much, much too intelligent for that.

Letters to the editor

The educational burden is your own

Editor:

Regarding John Astad and his letter of Oct. 12, we respect your expertise in this area, namely educational theory, as evidenced by your extensive background in it. Thirteen weeks of exposure to this university is hardly enough to qualify you as an expert on ANY facet of the system.

We think that your emotional, irresponsible slams aimed at Cal Poly are merely disguises for some deep-rooted distaste for Scantrons. How do you justify your statement about instructors not caring whether or not the students learn their material? Don't make the mistake of misplacing the burden of YOUR education. If YOU don't learn the material, don't expect to be spoon fed.

Any knowledge of senior projects will tell you that, in a preponderance of cases, the completed project entails much analysis and writing. I won't even touch on your assertion that the JWT is but another effort to get us to turn off our minds. Good luck passing it. Incidentally, the sciences at this university are perhaps the most homework-intensive of all subjects offered.

Do the readers of the Daily, and yourself, a favor by submitting an apology for this editorial atrocity.

Bakersfield police face riot after Fat Boys gig canceled

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (AP) — Police officers were met by a barrage of rocks and bottles when they formed a scrimmage line and pushed back a crowd of 2,000 that rioted when a Fat Boys concert was canceled.

Several members of the crowd at the Kern County Fairgrounds earlier pulled the event's promoter from his car, beat him and overturned the vehicle, according to a sheriff's statement.

At least three concert-goers were arrested after Sunday night's melee on charges ranging from failing to disperse to felony assault on a peace officer and felony assault on a police dog, according to Kern County sheriff's Sgt. Wim Leijder.

The cancellation announcement came about 90 minutes after the scheduled start of the show, according to witnesses.

At the same time, a group of concert-goers spotted the promoter, Marvin Adams of Hollywood, getting into his 1985 Mercedes with show receipts.

"Then they pulled him out and beat him up," said Darcie Powell, 14. "He was all bloody."

No one injured after bomb explodes in Clear Lake bank

CLEAR LAKE, Calif. (AP) — An explosive device was tossed through a window of a Bank of America branch, shaking the building when it went off and shattering windows but causing no injuries, according to an officer of the bank.

"It went through the center window and there is glass all over the place," Joyce Spanos, a branch section manager for the bank, said of Sunday night's blast.

The type of device used was not immediately determined, according to a police department statement issued Monday morning that described the damage as "moderate."

Spanos said there was no one in the building when the blast took place at about 10:10 p.m.

Spanos said she had received no notes, calls or other indications of the reason behind the explosion.

There was speculation the blast may have been connected with a robbery at a grocery store, possibly as a diversion.

The blast occurred about five minutes after an alarm went off at the store.

Bush announces candidacy, offers U.S. stable leadership

HOUSTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush, saying America needs strong and stable leadership instead of "radical new directions," today declared his candidacy for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

"For seven years now, I have been with a president, and I have seen what crosses that big desk," Bush said. "And who should sit at that desk? I am that man."

In a wide-ranging announcement speech in his hometown of Houston, the vice president signaled that he would hew closely to President Reagan's major policy stands, both in domestic and foreign policy areas.

Man who killed 7 in rampage denied release from hospital

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A judge ruled Monday that a former Cal State Fullerton janitor, who killed seven people during a library shooting rampage 11 years ago, was unfit for release from a state mental hospital.

Orange County Superior Court Judge Donald McCartin said Edward Allaway, 47, had not recovered sufficiently for release from high-security Atascadero State Hospital, where he has been confined since his trial ended in 1977.

Jurors found Allaway innocent by reason of insanity after the 1976 campus massacre in which he killed seven co-workers while walking through the library firing a .22-caliber rifle. Two others were wounded.

Allaway filed a motion for partial release, saying he was sufficiently recovered to be placed in a community outpatient program, which would permit him to live in a halfway house.

McCartin also denied a request by Allaway to be transferred to the less restrictive Patton State Hospital in San Bernardino. The judge said such decisions should be left to the state Department of Mental Health.

Man returns to S. Vietnam to bring back lost daughter

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Former U.S. Army medic Barry Huntoon left Monday for Vietnam to bring back the half-Vietnamese girl he fathered 15 years ago but has never met.

Huntoon, of Paradise, Calif., departed on an Air France flight for Ho Chi Minh City to bring back Tran Thi Tuyet Mai, whose face he saw for the first time in the picture magazine Life two years ago.

He had left behind his Vietnamese girlfriend, nine months pregnant with Mai, and returned to the United States in 1972 after completing his tour of duty.

Accompanying Huntoon, 38, was attorney Bruce Burns, who helped him try to resettle Mai and six other half-Vietnamese children of other fathers. Burns works for Amerasian Registry, a private voluntary agency in San Jose, Calif., that helps reunite so-called Amerasians with their American fathers.

Huntoon said he lost all contact with his girlfriend after the war ended in 1975 as the Communists overran the U.S.-backed South Vietnam government.

Japanese researcher awarded Nobel prize for disease work

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Susumu Tonegawa, a Japanese researcher working in the United States, won the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday for discovering how the body makes millions of antibodies to fight disease.

His findings could help improve vaccines and make organ transplants safer, said the Nobel Assembly of the Karolinska Institute, which awards the prize.

Hans Wigzell of the institute said Tonegawa's research also may be significant in fighting such diseases as acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, which destroys the body's immune system.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, where he has worked since 1981, the 48-year-old Tonegawa told reporters:

"The problem of how our body can respond to so many different kinds of pathogens was one of the most hotly debated issues in immunology. We did not understand how that happened."

"It turned out that, contrary to what many people thought, genes can change during the life cycle of the individual."

Jackson's campaign not reminiscent of 1984

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Jesse Jackson's 1984 presidential race posed a dilemma for black political leaders that was as stark in Alabama as anywhere in the nation.

That dilemma — whether to stand by the first black man to run for president or support a more electable, white candidate — literally split apart Alabama's black community. Elsewhere, black leaders were also torn between Jackson and Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic front-runner with a long history of support for black causes.

As Jackson begins his 1988 campaign, he paces the Democratic field, at least in the public opinion polls, and the "new" Jesse is running a mainstream campaign and striking a more conciliatory tone.

"1984 is behind us. 1984 has nothing to do with tonight. 1988 can stand on its own legs," Jackson said Friday night at a reception in Montgomery designed to heal some of the wounds left by his first campaign.

In 1984, Alabama's black political caucus, the Alabama Democratic Conference, endorsed Mondale because Jackson was late entering the race and lacked a strong organization. Jackson ended up third in Alabama behind Mondale and Gary Hart.

The ADC's decision split the powerful caucus. Older, politically experienced members maintained their allegiance to the group while Jackson's supporters — mostly young and middle-aged professionals — left to form a new political network, the Alabama New South Coalition.

Jackson's 1988 campaign team in Alabama includes many New South members, but Friday night he attempted to pick up ADC support by attending an informal reception with more than 100 members.

"I'd like to think whatever friction existed in 1984 has been ironed out for the better," ADC Chairman Joe Reed said.

Tuskegee Mayor Johnny Ford agreed. "At this point Jackson has the edge" for the ADC endorsement, he said.

SCOUTS

weekend camp at Camp French on Lopez Lake.

A fraternity called Alpha Phi Omega existed at Cal Poly several years ago. This fraternity was for former Boy Scouts, but not specifically for Eagle Scouts. Cone said at one time in the past, initiations to this fraternity got a little out of hand and it was dissolved.

The Cal Poly Eagle Scout Association is strictly for Eagle Scouts and is not a part of Alpha Phi Omega.

"There is a neat city-campus relationship here," Cone said, adding the civic and moral responsibility of Eagle Scouts would be an asset to the local community.

Schmidt said the scouting program is strong in the Santa Lucia Council. "The need is great and we ask everyone we can to help. Hopefully we can get some of the Eagle Scouts active when they have some time," he said.

Cone said the council realizes that college students are busy and their primary concern should be getting an education. The area of service to the local community is a secondary goal in forming a chapter at Cal Poly. The primary purpose is for fellowship with other Eagle Scouts.

Students and faculty wishing to be a part of the association can submit their names and addresses to the council office at 1123 Mill St. or call 543-5766.

Poly's place in space

Aeronautical engineering students design award-winning space vehicle

By Kristin Roncarati
Staff Writer

A group of 10 Cal Poly aeronautical engineering students won first place in a national contest to design a space-station-based rescue vehicle.

The 10-member group entered

The rescue vehicle would be attached to a space station and used as emergency transportation for returning to earth.

their design in Allied Corporation's 15th annual team design competition, one of three annual student competitions sponsored by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics. The Cal Poly group competed with 24 other university teams from around the nation.

Senior Derek Lang and Steven Merrihew (who graduated last June) headed the engineering group.

Lang said the group was surprised their project won first place. "This was a first time for us all to put something together and see how we did."

The students will receive a first-place award of $1,000 and a certificate for their 95-page report which outlined the design concept for the space-station emergency vehicle.

The project was described by Lang as a rescue type vehicle that can be attached to a space station for use in case of an emergency. The project will allow astronauts to "jump in and zip on back to earth," said Lang.

Lang said because Cal Poly does not have a concentration within the department which focuses on space research and design, a lot of the research had to be learned from scratch.

The students spent approximately 1,500 hours developing proposals for the vehicle's nine systems — electrical power, communications, structures, information and data management, thermal protection, environmental control, navigation guidance and control and propulsion.

Other team members who worked on the project were Christopher Brown, Naseer Khan, David Mounkes, Alexander Orosz, Lee Peron, Lisa Won and juniors Joyce Byrne and Stephanie Los. The students were advised on the project by mechanical engineering professor William Patterson.

Former deliveryman paints rice accurately

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill. (AP) — Many painters think of themselves as starving artists, but David Stevens is one of the few who could actually eat his work. One of his specialties is painting the Statue of Liberty on a single grain of rice.

"At the risk of sounding vain, I think I've got a talent that's out of the ordinary," said Stevens, 29, an unemployed deliveryman whose formal artistic training consists of a single high school art class.

He said he discovered his knack one day about three years ago when he was bored and his wife, who painted ceramics, had her materials out.

Using a quarter-size rock for his canvas, Stevens painted an ocean scene with a bright yellow sunset, a tiny island with palm trees and a galleon.

"I thought with the smallest surface it won't take as long," Stevens said. "In a couple of hours, I'd have a finished product."

Six weeks and several rocks later, he was challenged.

"A guy saw some of the stones and he said, 'That's fine. But the day you paint the Statue of Liberty on a grain of rice, I'll buy it from you,'" he said.

Stevens obliged, though the Angry brown-baggers left longing, law officers lay few lures, but Lock Ness lunch lifter lays low

By April Karys
Staff Writer

When secretaries on the third floor of the Administration Building went to the lounge last week to get their lunches from the refrigerator, they found their meals rifled. At least one brown bag was missing.

The mysterious lunch nabber had struck again.

— everyone has all their lunches gone through. It's like the Loch Ness Monster. And there hasn't been a sighting yet."

The hungry pilferer is selective. The lunches are each opened and examined, before anything, or the whole thing, is taken, said Berrett. Prosecution is not out of the question if the lunch nabber is caught, he added.

"It's happened at least three times in the last year," said one secretary, who asked not be identified. "It's frustrating, because we are rushed in the morning to make these lunches, and some of us don't bring extra money. Mine was taken last time and it was a good lunch — homemade fried chicken."

Ray Berrett, university investigations officer, said he doesn't know if the thief is a student or staff member.

"They'll strike three or four times, then quit for a couple of months," said Berrett. "Then, wham!

"A theft is a theft," he said. "Whether it's a twinkie, or whatever."

Campus police considered placing an alarm in the women's lounge to catch the thief, but all alarm systems are in use elsewhere, said Berrett. They have placed a sign above the third floor women's lounge indicating only authorized personnel are allowed there. Also the door has been locked.

"There are some angry brown-baggers in the Administration Building," Berrett said. "And they want action taken."

Jackson

Ford backed Mondale in 1984 because, he said, Jackson had no chance.

"This time," he said, "you're looking at a new Jesse Jackson. He's much more mature and he's appealing to a broader base — working class whites."

Ford, president of the World Conference of Mayors and a long-time political force in Alabama, said Jackson has started focusing on economics, which is the No. 1 concern of blacks and whites, and has learned how to sell himself to Southerners, who will choose a third of the national convention delegates next March 8.

"Jesse is more conservative than he was four years ago," Ford said.

Another ADC member, state Rep. John Buskey, agreed with Ford that "this group is probably leaning toward Jesse Jackson. One reason is none of the other candidates have stood out above the crowd."

Buskey said that when the ADC meets Dec. 5 to endorse a candidate, Jackson's campaign can't be dismissed as it was in 1984. "Reverend Jackson has done a better job of organizing. His campaign is being viewed as more serious," he said.

Buskey's brother, state Rep.

James Buskey, was one of the Jackson supporters who left the ADC to form the Alabama New South Coalition. The Mobile politician has not, however, jumped on the Jackson team.

"Even though the New South broke with the old organization over Jesse Jackson's candidacy, the New South has gone in a new direction," he said.

James Buskey rates Jackson the front-runner in Alabama, but he said his strength is concentrated in three of the state's seven congressional districts. Because Alabama's delegate selection system is based on congressional districts, Jackson "may get the most popular vote but he won't win the most delegates," James Buskey said.

Also, James Buskey said, "I do not think Jesse Jackson can get the majority of the delegates to the Democratic convention."

Because of that, he said, the New South Coalition must "have lively debate" about the other Democratic candidates when it meets in Mobile next month to make an endorsement.

Reed, however, may have found a way out of the Jackson dilemma for black political groups. He got the ADC members to pass a resolution Saturday that provides a safety hatch if Jackson's candidacy falters.

S. Korean government approves reformed constitution

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The National Assembly overwhelmingly approved a new constitution Monday that would allow direct presidential elections and bring other democratic reforms following stormy demonstrations last June.

"It's a historical document. We have opened a new era," said Rep. Lee Min-sup, spokesman for the governing Democratic Justice Party.

Government and opposition legislators joined to pass the measure by a 254-4 vote. Officials expect a national referendum Oct. 27, and predict the measure will pass easily. It would then become law when a new president is scheduled to take office.

"We hope it will lay down a firm foundation for our march toward democratization and politics through dialogue," said Rep. Kim Hyun-kyu, floor leader of the main opposition Reunification Democratic Party.

It was the first constitution jointly drafted by rival political groups since South Korea won independence in 1945.

The new constitution strengthens the role of parliament by reducing the power of the president and restoring parliamentary rights to audit and inspect state affairs. It also improves provisions for press freedom and a free labor movement.

It was rewritten after President Chun Doo-hwan bowed to opposition demands to hold direct presidential elections and enact other political reforms after nationwide anti-government protests in June.

The opposition complained that the old electoral college system of choosing a president favored the party in power.

An election, the first direct presidential balloting in 16 years, will be held before Dec. 20 to pick a successor to Chun, whose term expires Feb. 24.

Roh Tae-woo, president of the governing party, and Kim Young-sam, president of the Reunification Democratic Party, have declared they will run.

Kim Dae-jung, also of the Reunification Democrats, is expected to announce his candidacy soon. Kim Jong-pil, a former prime minister under the late president Park Chung-hee, also has indicated he would enter the race.

Amid growing concern that the split between Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung would benefit Roh, 13 members of the opposition party called Monday for the selection of a single candidate by a party ballot showdown.

The lawmakers from Reunification party factions controlled by each of the two Kims renewed proposals that they share power in accordance with the result of a presidential party convention. If one runs in the election, the other could serve as party president, they said.

The two Kims had pledged only one of them would run for president, but then each asked the other to bow out of the race.

"If both Kims decide to run for president, we will make an important decision," the legislators said. The lawmakers did not elaborate.

Chinese police are keeping the quiet in Tibet

LHASA, Tibet (AP) — Nema Tsering sat in a dark corner of the Jokhang Temple, his young face twisted in pain by the thought that Tibetan independence might not be achieved.

The 19-year-old monk tugged at his burgundy robe as it slipped off his bare shoulder, and said sadly, "If the Dalai Lama dies, then there is no hope."

As the novice monk voiced his desire for an end to 37 years of communist Chinese rule in Tibet, more than 20 plainclothes police stood guard over the temple, the holiest in Tibetan Buddhism — making clear that the government will snuff out any independence movement.

Nema Tsering was speaking late on the afternoon of Oct. 7, the 37th anniversary of the Chinese army's advance into Tibet and the day on which many predicted a new outbreak of violent anti-Chinese demonstrations. The day had passed, without a stir.

He attributed the quiet to the police show of force throughout the city, and said trouble would reoccur once the police left.

"I've seen the posters," he said, referring to the pro-independence posters that went up every morning, attracting crowds of Tibetan readers before Chinese officials tore them down.

"The posters all said many people have died. It is not right for them to die for nothing," he said.

Monks demonstrated for Tibetan independence three times in the past two weeks, with an estimated 14 killed, including three monks, in bloody riots on Oct. 1. Nema Tsering, who did not join the demonstrators, said the monks represented the true feelings of all Tibetans and were not a fanatical minority.

Chinese authorities say Tibet has been an integral part of China for centuries. They blamed the disturbances on former prisoners and followers of the Dalai Lama who ignore the feelings of the Tibetan people.

Nema Tsering explained that monks were at the front lines of the battle because they broke all personal ties upon entering the monastery and were in a better position to sacrifice for the sake of independence.

More than 100 monks were arrested for joining demonstrations. Most have since been released.

Nema Tsering, a monk for two years, did not consider violence the right path to independence. He said Tibetans look to the United States and other countries to help convince the Chinese that history does not support China's claims to Tibet.

He said that once the Chinese see their interpretation of history is wrong, Chinese and Tibetans can discuss the issue of an independent Tibet and reach a peaceful understanding.

However, Tibetans will never settle for anything less than independence with the Dalai Lama as religious and political leader, he said.

The Dalai Lama, considered a god-king by Tibetans, fled China in 1959 after an aborted rebellion by his followers and now heads a government in exile in India.

It is impossible for Chinese and Tibetans to live together peacefully because of their differences in religious beliefs, Nema Tsering said.

"Our lifestyle and their lifestyle are completely opposite," he said. "We believe in Buddhism, they do not."

In recent years, the Chinese government restored and reopened many temples severely damaged during the chaotic decade of the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. It also allowed Tibetans to follow their religious practices, but Nema Tsering said the religious freedom they were given is not enough.

"They've spent a lot of money restoring the temples, but it can't compensate for what was destroyed," he said.

He said even the higher standard of living the Chinese brought is not adequate compensation.

"The Lamas say, living is not most important, freedom is most important. Even though life is better than before, our hearts are not at rest."

"The Chinese say our lives are better than before," he said. "But our hearts are not as peaceful as before. In the past, life was not good, but now our state of mind is not free."

He stopped and looked off to where his fellow monks were seated in a row in front of hundreds of flickering candles, swaying to the rhythmic chanting of prayers and mantas.

RICE

would-be customer disappeared.

Stevens says that, without using a magnifying glass, he can paint the Statue of Liberty — down to the miniature yellow torch — in 15 minutes. It measures one-quarter of an inch tall, and one-sixteenth of an inch wide.

To paint detail, he uses a brush with only two or three hairs. He glues the rice grain to a piece of cardboard to keep it steady.

During a recent interview, he painted a Canada goose in flight in about 10 minutes, from its tiny black beak to its plumage of gray, white and black against a light blue sky.

Other pieces include 12 mallards in flight on a single grain, artist's signature included. And a tuxedo-clad gentleman before a grand piano, with candles burning on a candelabrum.

"What's so frustrating about it is I found my niche in life, but I can't use it," Stevens said. "I can't make a living off it."

"I've cornered the market on a non-existing market."

The most he has gotten for his works at art shows in this town of 10,000 in southern Illinois is $30 for one rice grain, with $5 sales more common.

In addition to rice and rocks, Stevens said he painted the face of a watch for a friend obsessed with game show celebrity Vanna

White. He painted a nude portrait of Ms. White from the waist up.

"His boss told him he couldn't wear it," Stevens said, "because he works in a retail store."

"He brought it back and I painted a negligee on it. Now he can wear it."

Two great ways to cruise through the semester.

The hand on the left is poised on what could be the most essential part of your education.

A Macintosh™ computer.

And the hand on the right is gripping pure, simple, unadulterated fun.

A Honda Scooter. One we're giving away.

All you have to do for a chance to drive it away is visit your campus computer center and fill out an entry form. While you're there, take a Macintosh for a test drive.

Because Macintosh can help you write term papers, categorize elements of the periodic table, plot the rise and fall of pork-belly prices, compile computer code, and talk to other computers.

And the first 250 people on campus who get behind a mouse, so to speak, will receive a free Apple® memo board.

So head over to your campus computer center today. And ask about our Student Financing Program.

Who knows? You may soon find yourself cruising a little farther than you expected.

SPORTSBRIEFS

Cal Poly climbs to 11th in polls

The Cal Poly football team, which ran its record to 5-0 after whipping Cal State Hayward Saturday, has moved up to No. 11 in the Division II top-20 poll.

The Mustangs, ranked 13th last week, are one of two Western Football Conference teams on the list. The other is No. 5 Portland State, which will be in San Luis Obispo Oct. 31 to face the Mustangs in Cal Poly's homecoming game.

Cal Poly's 5-0 start is its best since 1973, when the Mustangs finished 9-1.

Cal Poly's Theresa Smith and Claudia Hemmersbach were named to the Volleyball Monthly Invitational's all-tournament team last weekend.

Smith, a senior outside hitter, nailed nine aces in the Lady Mustangs' final-match loss to Colorado State, tying the team record set last month by Darci Pankhard.

Joining Smith and Hemmersbach on the team were Colorado State's Angie Knox, the most valuable player, and Diane Saba; Julie Evans of Pepperdine; and Lisa Smith of Louisiana State.

Water polo club captures tournament

The Cal Poly water polo club won all four of its games last weekend to capture the Cal Maritime Tournament in Vallejo.

The Mustangs were down, 4-3, after three quarters in the final but rallied to defeat Chico State, 6-5. Bob Frappia scored two of the fourth-quarter goals and Jim Long added the winning point.

Cal Poly reached the finals by blowing out Chapman, 21-4, and then defeating both Cal Maritime and UC Davis, the top seed, by one point.

The Mustangs' Brian James was named the tournament's most valuable player.

Cal Poly, with a record of 6-2, will drive up Highway 1 today to challenge Cuesta College. Game time is 3 p.m.

HOMELESS

Eileen Cavalier with the Zadakah House. "Violent people are not allowed on our bus. Fifty percent of the people we serve would not be suitable for employment because they just don't have the mental capacity to hold down a job."

The other 50 percent are people who need transitional housing. They need more of a long-term, temporary shelter where they can pull themselves together and get back on their feet before they go out looking for jobs. The Zadakah House is funded by private donations and by the Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army is in the process of petitioning the city for a permit to operate a temporary shelter for up to 35 people from November through April. The shelter would provide mostly transitional housing and offer adult education.

Part of the problem that families face is the lack of subsidized housing in San Luis Obispo. Though the cost of living on the Central Coast is accelerating at a rapid pace, jobs continue to offer low wages with few or no benefits. Even with two incomes, families with children have a hard time making ends meet because of the high rent. Mobile homes, typically the cheapest housing available, can't be rented (legally) to families with children. There are families who are living in the campgrounds at Lopez Lake, whose children cannot attend school because they don't have a permanent address. Often these families have been evicted from former residences because of discrimination against their children, or because of the tenant's inability to pay rent.

According to Joel Dillinger of the California Rural Legal Assistance, it costs a minimum of $1,500 to get into a permanent home after being evicted. "I attribute this to the failure of the city to establish a countywide housing authority that would prevent unauthorized evictions by landlords," he said. "They (the city) are too busy fixing potholes in the street. People who apply for welfare are handed a stack of papers a half-inch thick, which are almost impossible to fill out and many applicants don't have the mental capacity to fill them out. You need a lawyer these days to fill out a welfare application."

"The food stamp people are the same way," continued Dillinger. "They want to be sure that recipients have a method of being able to cook the food, yet most of them won't go down to the creek bed to look at the tin pan and fire that some people have to use."

Another problem is busing. Often cities pay for the homeless to be bussed to Los Angeles or San Francisco to mesh with the street people in those cities. When President Reagan goes to his ranch in Santa Barbara, the street people are bused up to San Luis Obispo. When the Pope passed through Los Angeles the pattern was repeated.

California houses 10.9 percent of the nation's homeless, according to Jan Bradford of the California Special Training Institute. There are 3 million homeless nationwide, up from 2.5 million in 1984.

"The average time someone is on welfare in California is 18 months. There are no third generation welfare recipients here, as there are in the East," she said. One of the main reasons why people go on welfare is the 30 percent drop-out rate in high school. Forty percent of the dropouts are minorities.

While it may seem that there are many groups offering help to the homeless, those who look for help are not always welcomed with open arms.

Michael Allen, a senior biology major, and his roommates found that out the hard way.

"One of my roommate Jim's friends brought this guy over and asked us if he could sleep at our house for a couple nights because he didn't have anywhere else to go. Our house policy is that we'll let someone spend two nights on our couch, and then he has to get out."

What Allen and his roommates didn't know was that the guy was in a wheelchair. "Besides the imposition of having a stranger in our house, the fact that he had to rely on us to bathe him and do other things for him, because he couldn't reach cupboards or the freezer, was a real pain," he said. "It was like baby-sitting."

Although Allen and his roommates repeatedly told their guest, who's name was William, that he would have to find another place to live, he made no effort to find a place. They called Roandoak of God, a shelter in Morro Bay, Grass Roots and the Salvation Army. People at each place told Allen that they either had no room for William, or that they flat out didn't want him, leaving Allen and his roommates to deal with the problem of getting William to leave.

"We finally just told him after five days that he had to get out. It was a really frustrating situation because we wanted to help the guy, but we couldn't keep him at our place any more."
