Grrrrrrrrr!

This photo was snapped by Mustang Daily photographer Daryl Shoptaugh. Big deal, right? Well, it is! The photo won first place in the sports category of a professional tri-state competition.

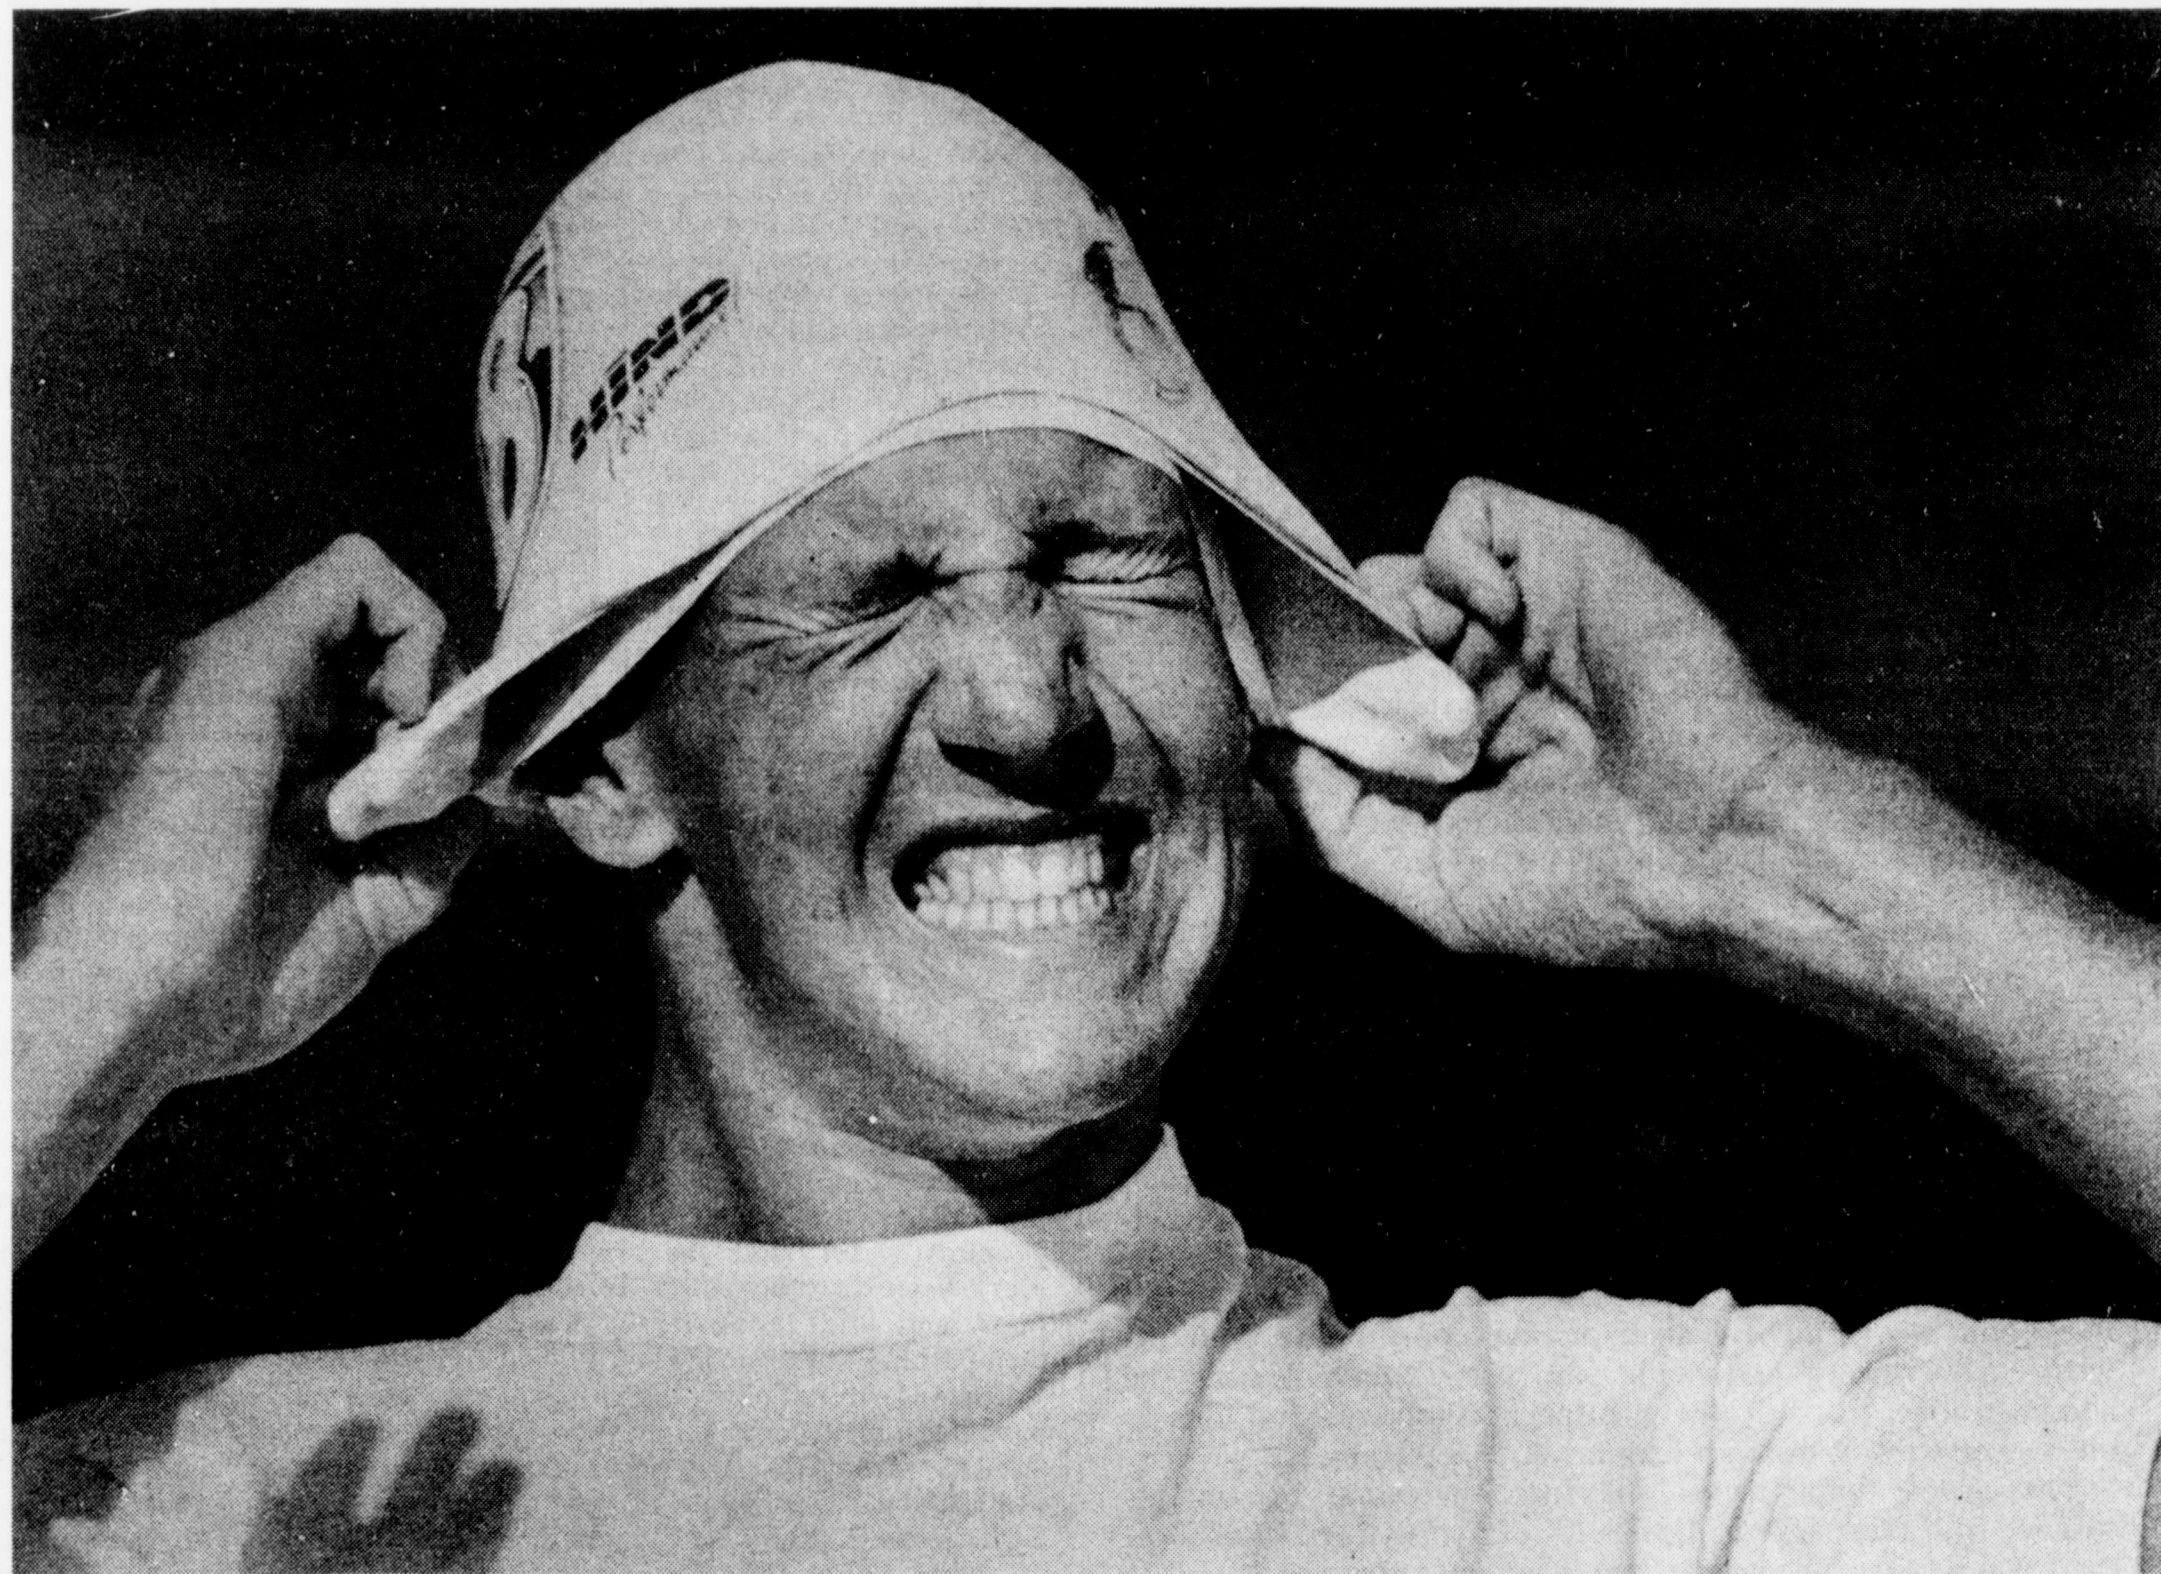

"It's a great way to cap my photographic work while I've been at school," he said.

Daryl has taken consistently brilliant photos, but has received little recognition. His time, at long last, has come.

The photo is of lifeguard Todd Brinnon getting ready for an Avila Beach lifeguard competition in August.

Daryl shot it with a 300mm lens, Cannon F-1 body, Tri-X 400 ASA film, 1000/sec. at f4.

Ignorance about geography grows

FULLERTON (AP) — Disturbed that few students can pinpoint the spot of America's longest running war, even when given the country's name, educators this week are taking aim at geographical ignorance.

On Monday, students at California State University at Fullerton lined up to locate the spot where Columbus landed, the world's third most populous country and the United States' leading trade partner.

But only 14 percent could name the eastern Caribbean Sea as Columbus' landing point. Just 26 percent knew the Soviet Union was the third most populated of the world's nations and could find it on a map. The same amount identified and pinpointed this nation's leading trade partner, which is not Japan, but Canada.

"This convinces me I've got to take a geography class next semester," said history major Ed Merk, who admitted he fared poorly on the test, but refused to give his score.

The 21-question quiz was given by geography professor William Puzo as part of National Geography Awareness Week.

Three years ago, Puzo made headlines when he released test results showing 49 percent of his introductory geography students were unable to locate Japan on a map. This year's results were worse.

"In this year's tests of my introductory students, only 39 percent could locate Japan," Puzo said Monday.

This July, Congress passed a resolution calling for more geography awareness by U.S. students. That resolution said most U.S. college freshmen cannot find Vietnam on a map, even though the country was the site of the longest war in U.S. history.

Contra report says Reagan created law-evading aura in White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressional Iran-Contra report paints a picture of a Reagan administration at odds with the law and the Constitution, but minority Republicans dismissed it Tuesday as a partisan indictment of the president that ignores foreign policy questions raised by the affair.

The report says President Reagan flirted with constitutional crisis by creating a White House atmosphere that encouraged evasion of legal requirements and flouting of proper procedures for reaching foreign policy goals.

It also says the administration violated the Constitution by going to third countries to solicit donations for Nicaragua's Contra rebels at a time when Congress barred even indirect military aid to them.

And it is sharply critical of Attorney General Edwin Meese III, questioning why he delayed launching a criminal investigation of the affair when it became public a year ago.

The voluminous document, reviewing in detail the story of how administration officials sold arms to Iran in hopes of freeing Americans held hostage in Lebanon, then diverted some $4 million of the profits to the Contras, is due to be released Wednesday.

But glimpses of its findings were gleaned Tuesday from a report of minority Republicans on the House and Senate investigating panels and from committee sources.

Program helps avoid project goofs

By Carolyn Duvall
Staff Writer

The computer printed paper is several feet wide and runs two-thirds the length of the side room in Chumash Auditorium. The paper is a printout of a failure-avoidance program designed to show campus offices and administrators where a major project could possibly go wrong and fail.

The failure-avoidance information was collected and analyzed by Sage Analytics International. This company specializes in evaluating programs to determine where they could possibly fail, and in bypassing those trouble spots, help the project succeed. The company's unusual name comes from a name once applied to wise people — sages. The Sage company has worked with many government programs and major industry clients. Applying the Sage analysis to a university program has never been done before.

This particular printout was an analysis of the Oasis program starting up on campus. The Oasis project's goal is to provide a campuswide integrated program for administration/student information systems that eliminate errors and optimize use of human and fiscal resources to provide effective and timely results that meet the needs of students, administrators and faculty.

To determine just how a program could fail, Sage analysis begins by choosing people who can provide information on the project. Sage interviews these people in groups to identify possible failure points. Next, a logic diagram "fault tree" is constructed so people can easily see main problems and where they originate.

A rating booklet is then used for the participants to rate each problem for its significance to the entire program, how familiar they are with that problem, and how likely the problem will reoccur.

Rating booklets are evaluated See OASIS, page 6

Get insured now or break the bank later

Litigation and paper work are costly. Auto insurance is also costly. Combine these and the numbers bloom.

It is California law to have automobile insurance, but proof has never been required until the sheetmetal crumbled. Many drivers were able to escape their obligation simply because no one ever knew.

Now, finally, all drivers are required by law to carry proof of insurance. The law was enacted two years ago and was promptly suspended. Following a review by the state Supreme Court and approval of its constitutionality, the law can start to get to work.

It may seem like this will only increase the already burgeoning revenues of the insurance conglomerates. But down the road, the proof law will reduce consumer costs by allowing the conglomerates to operate more efficiently.

When one of the parties to an accident is uninsured, the costs to process the claims are astronomical. If the driver who was damaged has collision insurance on his own vehicle, this will pay for his repairs and medical expenses while his insurance company goes after the perpetrator. In all likelihood it will involve an expensive court battle, and extensive paper work and man-hour costs. All this raises the administrative costs of the insurance company, and this is one reason why insurance premiums just keep going up.

The proof requirement will force everyone to get insurance or face severe fines. If everyone has insurance, there will be no problem collecting from those who don't.

In this case, it isn't the "proof" clause in the law that matters, but the reasoning behind the law. In this case, the reasoning is in the best interest of everyone who drives.

Letter to the editor

Wheeling and dealing

Editor:

As a member of the ASI finance committee, I would like to take exception to the recent series of letters and editorials addressing the issue of funding for the Cal Poly Wheelmen.

Last year, the ASI faced a substantial increase in costs relating to insurance when our premiums took a huge, unprecedented leap. As a result, the ASI found itself in the position of either increasing income by raising fees or lowering expenses by cutting subsidies. The issue was put before the students in the form of a fee increase referendum last spring.

The amount of the fee increase being considered was $3 per student per quarter. This modest increase would not only have allowed the ASI to offer the Wheelmen a subsidy of approximately $3,000, but it would have also allowed ASI to increase subsidies across the board to the many clubs and organizations on campus.

That referendum failed, and the only other option open to the ASI was to lower expenses by cutting subsidies. All ASI subsidized organizations received 20 percent less subsidy this year than last year. Some programs, such as the ASME Bike team, lost 100 percent of their subsidy. No new groups were added to the subsidized organization list. In spite of these draconian measures, the budget barely balanced.

The situation does not look any brighter this year. As the ASI gets squeezed by inflation and rising costs against an income ceiling, whole programs face losing their subsidies.

Our tropical waist shrinks to our eternal detriment

I woke to the sound of my father's gasp as he looked out our window at the Malaysian Peninsula. As our plane lost altitude I saw forests with more lush green vegetation than I had ever seen.

After landing in Singapore, my dad and I explored the outskirts of the region. Dad couldn't hold me back as I raced into a forest area. I yelled, "Dad, come quick! Look at the huge Syngoniums, Philodendrons and palms ('houseplants') growing underneath these moss-laden trees with purple and white orchids hanging from them... It's incredible!" I felt so alive to stand in such a complete ecosystem. I truly felt what the transcendentalists Emerson, Thoreau, Whitman and Muir must have felt when they wrote about "wild nature" as the most enlightening and spiritual of all places.

The instincts of the transcendentalists have proven to be crucial to our survival. Tropical forests are a primary source of welfare for people everywhere in ways they never suspect — especially in material contributions to our daily lives. These forests form a green band around the equator and cover a mere 1/16th of the earth's land surface.

Unfortunately, if we don't stop wiping these forests out, there will be only a few isolated, degraded tropical reserves left for our grandchildren. They are being lost at an alarming rate. Tropical forest land the size of England is lost every year, and both the developing (tropical) nations and the industrialized countries have had their part in the destruction.

Local farmers have been using the slash and burn farming technique, in which native plant material is removed. They farm on the low-nutrient tropical soil for a couple of years, then move on to burn more forest. Giant timber corporations based in North America, Western Europe and Japan clear thousands of acres. They only harvest certain varieties; the rest is burned.

And with fast food expanding in the West, thousands of acres are being cleared in the tropics to raise "cheap" beef. Wendy's, Burger King and several others continue to clear more and more forests after the soil in previously cleared areas hardens (laterizes) from exposure to the sun. It then will only grow weeds that cows won't eat.

Why should we care so much about this destruction? Here are some reasons. Despite their limited area, tropical forests harbor well over 2/5 of the 5 to 10 million species of plants and animals on this planet. In New Guinea alone, more than 150 kinds of trees bear edible fruits, and only a few have found their way to our dinner tables. That leaves plenty of scope for the future.

When we use any sort of medicine or pharmaceutical, there is roughly one chance in four that it owes its existence to raw materials from tropical forests. The cure for polio, the biocompounds for leukemia remission and much of the compounds for cancer research all come from tropical plants. To name just a few leading categories of industrial materials, we get gums, resins, waxes, dyes, tannins and essential oils from tropical forests too.

Technology is now available to prepare bio-crude from plants grown in the tropics at competitive prices, provided that mega-amounts of vegetable matter can be assembled at the processing facility. Since scientists have taken a close look at only one in 100 of the projected plant species in these forests, it seems likely that they contain stocks of helpful natural resources.

Burning these forests also affects local and global climates. Without these large ecosystems, there is a huge loss of evapotranspiration (moisture 'breathed' out of plants), which lowers rainfall in the region and causes drought and famine, such as in Ethiopia and other regions of Africa and South America. The loss of this plant biomass also leaves much more carbon dioxide in the atmosphere which traps the sun's heat and causes global warming. This leads to an eventual desert region in our breadbasket states. It also causes major erosion due to the loss of important watersheds (e.g. — the now annual Ganges river flooding in India).

Without these large forest ecosystems there is a huge loss of evapotranspiration, which lowers rainfall in the region and causes drought and famine.

There's a lot we can do to help. We can stop patronizing Wendy's, Burger King and other businesses that contribute to the problem. Recycle, and join conservation groups that are working to save forests and educate people to farm intelligently. Pressure your senators, representatives and president to pass laws to help the situation.

Realizing that each individual makes a difference in the health of life on this planet is one step that will protect our planet for our children.

apologize for the failure of the referendum — it was ill-considered. We are now feeling the consequence of that decision. But if the answer was a vote against the fee increase, or even declining to vote, then (with all due respect) Shut up. You made your decision, now you must live by it. Some voters may have made an uninformed decision, and for that I apologize. That shall not happen again as long as I am a member of this committee.

Despite all the ruckus about ASI being a cold-hearted mother, the ASI finance committee has not received any inquiry, either official or unofficial, from the Cal Poly Wheelmen.

The ASI faces another year of difficult money decisions. Chances are good that another fee increase referendum will come before the students this spring. The amount will once again be on the order of $3 per quarter, something I feel is within every student's range of affordability.

Both the ASI finance committee and myself welcome your comments. If this or any other issue is of concern to you, make your opinions known. Only when we know your opinions can we act on them.

Six bullets lodged in his head doesn't mean that he's dead

SANTA ROSA (AP) — A man who was shot six times in the head as he slept in his home has been released from the hospital—the six .22-caliber bullets still lodged in his skull.

"He's perfectly alert, fully conscious," Dr. Stephen C. Cary said of James L. Sexton, 40. "Hasn't a single defect. It's really amazing."

"He has the entry wounds, of course, but aside from those and a stiff neck, he's all right," said Cary.

Sexton, 40, left Santa Rosa Memorial Hospital on Monday and went home.

A man who responded to a knock on Sexton's door refused to answer questions.

"We aren't supposed to talk to anyone," he said, slamming the door.

Authorities said Sexton was shot six times late Saturday. His former roommate, Daniel Frost, 32, was shot and wounded by a sheriff's sergeant after a lengthy pursuit.

Frost, who was hit in the stomach by a shotgun blast, underwent surgery at Palm Drive Hospital in Sebastopol and was listed in stable condition late Monday.

Frost was shot when he walked toward deputies and refused orders to put down the handgun he was holding, according to deputies.

Sexton was initially listed in critical condition, but X-rays showed that none of the six bullets penetrated the brain. None was life-threatening or even disabling, said Cary.

"They're all still there, all in the right side that was exposed as he slept," the physician said.

Smokeless Mr. Potato Head gives pipe to surgeon general

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mr. Potato Head, 35, quit smoking Tuesday. He gave his pipe to Surgeon General C. Everett Koop and vowed never to touch it again.

"He started to smoke the day he was born," said Koop. "Not only is it dangerous to his health, it gives the message to kids around the country that smoking is not a bad thing to do."

So pleased was Koop with Head's decision that he proclaimed the giant potato the official "spokespod" for this year's Great American Smokeout, the American Cancer Society drive to get millions of Americans to give up smoking, at least for the day, on Thursday.

About 40 million Mr. Potato Heads have been sold since the Playskool toy was introduced 35 years ago, complete with stick-on eyes, ears, a nose, a mouth — and a pipe.

Now that he has kicked the habit, Playskool officials are thinking about reshaping the mouth — which now looks a lot like a mustache — into a smile for the estimated 1 million toys manufactured each year.

First lady Nancy Reagan sent "heartiest congratulations" to Head.

"By kicking the habit, Mr. Potato Head will not only improve his health, but will serve as a good example to young people who need to learn the importance of maintaining good health habits," Mrs. Reagan said in a message read by Koop.

Playskool officials haven't determined whether or not they will include a new piece of paraphernalia to replace the pipe.

U.S., Soviets both confident missile treaty will be ready

GENEVA (AP) — Both sides appeared confident Tuesday that a treaty scrapping intermediate-range nuclear weapons will be ready for President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to sign in Washington next month.

Kremlin negotiator Yuli Vorontsov said in a Soviet television interview that work on the 120-page document was in the final stage and should be done by Nov. 23.

Vorontsov is first deputy foreign minister and leads the Moscow delegation to the U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva. He was interviewed shortly before meeting with chief American delegate Max Kampelman at the U.S. mission, in what U.S. sources said would be the last session between the two chief negotiators.

Most of Tuesday was taken up by two meetings between Vorontsov and Michael Armacost, U.S. assistant secretary of state, on what were described as "regional issues."

The main topic was Afghanistan, where an estimated 115,000 Soviet soldiers are helping the communist regime fight a Moslem insurgency.

Vorontsov said in the television interview that snags developed in the arms control talks when the Americans raised what he called "artificial issues" about verification provisions to be included in the treaty.

He added, however: "We think we shall be able to persuade the American side to remove these artificial issues and that the treaty will be prepared for signing in time." Reagan and Gorbachev are scheduled to meet in Washington on Dec. 7.

I thought cocaine was one of life's little rewards. Then, it became my life.

Who'd ever think a little line of coke now and then would lead to a full-blown addiction? Not too many do. Especially the people who use it.

Our chemical dependency program has a special plan just for cocaine dependencies. We know that the reasons someone chooses cocaine—the invincible feelings of strength, power and brightness—are also the feelings that make it difficult to quit and get help.

Cocaine can easily go from recreational use to wreaking havoc with your life; finances, career, family, friends and health. Physical signs may include pains, constantly running nose, seizures and insomnia.

Coke abuse is making addicts of Decathlon to study health

By Kristie Kuechler
Staff Writer

Students will be able to evaluate their physical, emotional, social, spiritual and intellectual health Thursday at the Wellness Decathlon.

The decathlon will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the University Union Plaza.

Some of the events within the decathlon that will be set up are cardiac risk assessment, blood pressure screening, skin screening, dental fitness, sexuality awareness and a flexibility and strength testing booth. A booth will be set up giving out non-alcoholic daiquiris to promote alcohol awareness.

"Everything is free to the whole community, anyone can come," said Cheri Eplin, a member of the sexuality team. "It's going to be a lot of fun with a bunch of fun games to play."

The finish line is staffed by Health Center professionals who will provide follow-up information for decathlon competitors.

The Health Center, peer health educators, American fitness and business club, Student Health Advisory Committee, Rec Sports and the wellness project are all sponsors of the Wellness Decathlon.

During the decathlon the wellness team will feature a booth with activities in each of the five realms of fitness. The team will be available for further counseling to follow up the wellness physical for students who want to talk about the different realms of fitness in their lives. To do this Cal Poly students can make a free appointment at the Health Center.

The lifestyle wellness team is a group of peer health educators who work in conjunction with the Health Center as a resource for the students of Cal Poly. This team was established to promote the general health and wellness of Cal Poly students.

The team sees wellness as a balance of the physical, spiritual, intellectual, social and emotional aspects of life. The lifestyle wellness team was established to help meet these needs. Through workshops in the dorms, for the Greek system and for various classes on campus, the wellness educators address the five aspects of wellness.

Along with workshops, the wellness team performs wellness physicals. A nurse practitioner measures wellness through such things as blood pressure, pulse, height, weight and vision. The student and the peer health educator then have an opportunity to discuss the student's health risk.

"The student is given a wellness worksheet which taps into the five areas of wellness so that the student can see his or her strengths and weaknesses in the five realms of wellness in their lives," said Sally Spiekerman, a member of the wellness team.

Getting a massage in class helps students ease stress

Learning to relax not only one's own stress but that of another person's is the idea behind a massage class offered through Rec Sports.

The course has been offered for the past two years and its popularity has grown since its inception.

Jim Tucker, a senior physical education/physical therapy major, teaches one of the two courses offered this quarter. He said he looks at the class as a "place for people to come to relax, calm their minds and relieve stress."

team will be offering personal stress counseling that can be used by the students to help balance some of the various areas of wellness in their lives. Stress

Tucker, who has taught the class for about a year, breaks his class into two sections. The first half focuses on the individual person and awareness of the body.

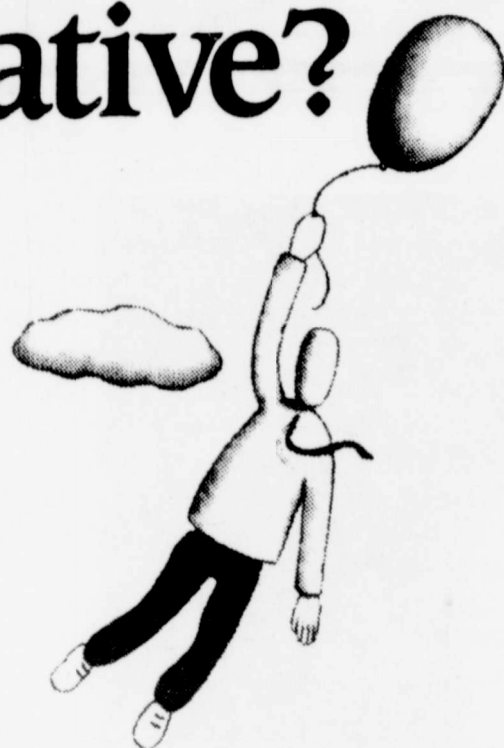

Tucker stressed the importance of the massager to be in touch with their own stress because "if you cannot be relaxed yourself, there's no way you can relax another person."

The second half of the class teaches the basic techniques, physical as well as psychological, involved in giving a successful massage.

Tucker said one problem in teaching a course to strangers is

Art Buchwald in '88

Columnist discusses humor and the presidential race

By Dawn Jackson
Asst. Managing Editor

There could be another candidate in the 1988 presidential race.

It was unanimous among the 500 journalists at a recent Chicago convention: "Art Buchwald in '88."

He was compared to Republican front-runner George Bush.

"George Bush looks like everyone's first husband," said one of his supporters on stage. "So does Art."

And he was credited with a few famous lines.

"It was Art who told Richard Nixon to use the line 'I am not a crook.' Nixon used it and it worked.

"He told Jessica Hahn to say 'I am not a bimbo.'

"And it was also Art who, during the Iran-Contra hearings, told Oliver North's counsel to say 'I am not a potted plant.'

"When Art comes up with a line, he makes it work," said another fan.

Buchwald was the last to speak.

"When you're such a long-standing Washington sex symbol you have to expect this," he said with his Yonkers accent and slight lisp.

Sporting a red "power" tie and a dark suit, Buchwald looked the part.

He discussed issues of the day.

"In the Iran-Contra affair, we were found to be selling arms to moderate Iranians.

"I say a moderate Iranian is one who has run out of ammunition."

Later, in a private interview, he confirmed suspicions that Robert Bork and Douglas Ginsburg could never have made it to the Supreme Court because of their beards.

"Well, they had a problem with Bork because they didn't know whether he was going to grow one or not. Ginsburg's beard was a little better but it had a lot of pot in it."

All in a day's work for one of the most successful humor (and sometimes, politically satirical) columnists in the country.

Buchwald was roasted last week to benefit a legal defense fund for journalists. And later, in an impromptu dinner, he ordered a round of cheesecake and spoke seriously about his more than 50 years in the journalism profession.

Glancing at the menu, he said the worst thing about journalism is the food. "It's always sandwiches and coffee because you're always on the run."

Traveling is a big part of his job, and he answered a firm "NO!" to whether he likes it.

"It's lonely out there. Have you ever seen 'Death of a Salesman?' That's me."

Humor columnist Art Buchwald with students Alison Skrat, Dawn Jackson and Heidi Linkenbach.

His career began at USC with the campus newspaper, The Daily Trojan, and the humor magazine, The Wampus. Professionally, he worked 12 years with the International Herald-Tribune in Paris, France. He's been writing his twice-weekly syndicated column for 38 years.

His commentary, which has won a Pulitzer Prize, appears in newspapers nationwide.

Buchwald said he spends most his time on his column thinking.

"I'll spend three to four days on a subject such as Ginsburg. But it only takes an hour or two to write the actual column. Hopefully it comes out right the first time. I sometimes have to redo them."

Unlike some columnists and cartoonists, Buchwald doesn't write columns in advance, but feeds off the news.

"If I wrote about Bork and it ran three weeks later, I'd be a dead duck," he said.

Besides timeliness, he has no other restrictions on what he writes.

"I can write about religion, I can write about Jerry Falwell and all the fundamentalist kooks, I can write about adultery and pot.

"And as I can remember, in the last 15 years, I haven't been called on a single subject matter saying 'We think that's too rough.' Some papers may not have run the column, but I've never been called on it," he said.

The most difficult part of writing is choosing the appropriate words, thoughts and sentences.

"It seems to me it's more like an editing job than a writing job," Buchwald said. "The writing comes easy. Editing is the tough part."

"After 38 years of writing this column I find that today's column means nothing. It's what you write next week."

He finds his satisfaction in reader response. The money isn't bad either.

"Not only do I like what I'm doing, but it's very profitable.

"Money gives you independence. If you have money in the bank, like I do, and someone says 'I don't like you. Disappear,' you can say 'Fine.'

"If you have the 'Go to hell' attitude, people will leave you alone," he said.

He says he has no fear about writing anything and never has a lack of subjects.

"There's no editor who's ever heard of writer's block. You don't ever let the thought get into your head."

Buchwald lives in Washington D.C., a city always bustling with news.

He discussed the Gary Hart scandal.

"Hart threw the gloves in the ring and said, 'Follow me. You're going to be very bored if you follow me. But if you want to, go ahead.'

"Why?"

"Because he's stupid," Buchwald said frankly. "If you're a presidential candidate you don't want to make it easy for their guys to get you. You're careful.

"These guys ought to know better. If they can't stay clean, to hell with them," said Buchwald.

He talked about last week's censorship of Bloom County by some newspapers because the strip contained the phrase "Reagan sucks!"

"It's the editor's paper. If he doesn't want to run it, that's his business," he said, adding that it probably got more publicity because of the censorship.

"I've used that expression before and they've asked me to take it out. They say I don't have the image to use the word 'sucks'. But Bloom County does."

He said he feels uncomfortable using such a strong word. "I'd get a little nervous saying the president of the United States sucks."

Buchwald does know Reagan and described him as "OK."

He said he doesn't make a profession out of verbally bashing the president. "I don't wake up in the morning and say 'I wonder what I'll do to Reagan today.' But if it's an issue like the justice issue, I'll do something with it."

He must make decisions about whomever or whatever he's writing about.

"If it works, there's a lot of money to be made. If it doesn't, a lot of people will be mad at you," Buchwald said, adding that Nancy Reagan gets more angry over his columns than the president does.

The dinner was nearing to the end and Buchwald ordered another piece of cheesecake.

"That shows you the real me — the guy that ordered the second piece of cheesecake."

And as he went to sign the check, he criticized the hotel for not putting the number of his room key.

"If this isn't my number, someone is going to be paying for a lot a cheesecake."

the students find it difficult to relax around an unfamiliar face. "They're not used to opening up and letting their defenses down," said Tucker.

Communication between both the massager and the massagee is crucial to realizing the needs of the person being massaged.

Tucker says his students enjoy the course because it is a "break between school and stress." He said he tries to take a casual approach to massage because he has found many people to have a hang-up with the idea another person controlling their stress.

Tucker received his massage teacher certification in 1985 at the Swedish Wellspring School of Massage in San Luis Obispo. He is also trained in sports massage, a variety of massage focusing primarily on relieving stress in athletes.

John Garrigues, a senior industrial technology major and one of Tucker's past students, said the he took the class because "I've always enjoyed giving and getting backrubs and I wanted to learn more about it."

He said the most important thing he learned was to relax and how to relax other people.

"Massage is one of the best ways to relieve stress," said Garrigues. "When you're giving or receiving a massage, you forget about everything else."

There were about 10 people in his class. "We got to know each other really well after rubbing oil on each other's bodies."

Cynthia McCabe teaches the Tuesday night class. She has taught the course at Cal Poly for two years and plans to continue teaching. McCabe received her certification to become a massage instructor at the Palo Alto School of Professional Body Work in 1981.

McCabe said her interest in massage grew out of her love of dancing. She became "interested in the way the body held its tension."

McCabe said the most important goal for her as an instructor is to be able to teach her students "how to touch other people and how to contact another person gently and therapeutically."

She said the class is a good break for students because "they can drop their studies and do something for themselves."

McCabe tries not to have her students follow her methods directly but rather "discover and learn their own style."

When she first began teaching the class, most of her students were female. Now she sees more of a balance between male and female students in her classes, and she has even had a few professors take the course.

McCabe said she has few students who feel uncomfortable with the methods of the class. Those who do feel uncomfortable will usually drop out of the class after the first or second session.

McCabe works full time at Atascadero State Hospital as a dance therapist.

Madeleine George, a senior English major who is taking the class from McCabe, said, "It's a lot of fun and a great way to relax. You learn to give massages but you also get them."

by a computer to produce reports and charts to provide people involved with an outline of trouble areas. Later, a follow-up meeting will evaluate how successful the analysis and program have been.

Troubleshooting the Oasis project required a lot of time from the people involved. "It took a lot of hours of input. Some people took about 4 1/2 hours to complete the rating booklet," said Wally Mark, head of the Oasis and Sage projects.

Ratings of the Oasis project were done in October. Of 140 people involved in the evaluation process, 120 returned their completed ratings booklet. "That was the highest return rate the Sage company ever had," said Mark. After all the data was gathered, 559 possible failure items were identified.

The major problems came from three categories: 1) problems related to inadequate preparation of the institution for the Oasis program, 2) shortcomings in system implementation and 3) problems related to program planning and management.

"These were the most important problems, and 80 percent of people's concerns addressed only those," said Mark.

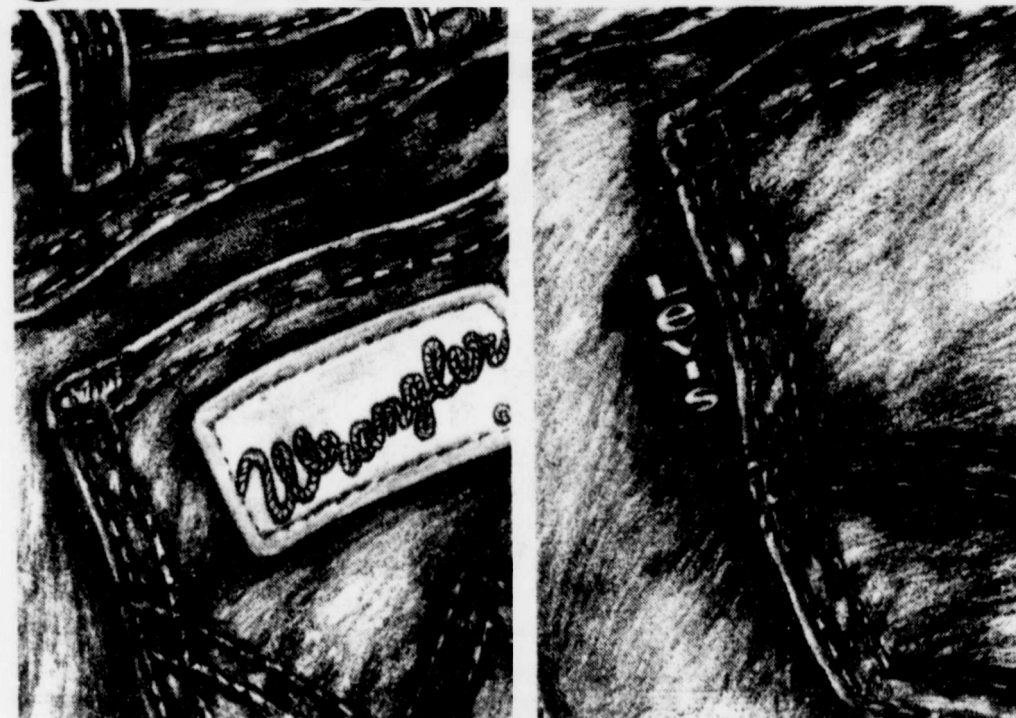

To correct or avoid these major pitfalls to the Oasis project, members of a steering committee will provide recommendations and "specific offices can solve problems within their own operation," Mark said.

Detailed analysis of potential problems read like a sideways tree. The main, generic problem is listed at the left, and the many smaller causes branch out to the right. One problem was listed as "inadequate Oasis project planning."

The next branch shows "problems related to the implementation plan and schedule development." This is caused by "inadequate planning for (the Oasis) conversion." Inadequate planning is due to "insufficient capabilities of the software programs to meet the specific needs of Cal Poly." Failure to meet Cal Poly needs could be caused by "failure to provide interfacing capability with outside departments such as payroll, housing, student records, admissions, etc."

Finally, this problem could be caused by either "insufficient programming resources under the current time restraints," or the "lack of university commitment to department resources."

Tough national meet awaits injured squad

By Elmer Ramos
Sports Editor

The Cal Poly men's cross-country team had to sweat out the NCAA's selection process last week. After the Mustangs were granted an at-large berth in the national championships, it seemed they would be breathing much easier.

But they're not.

Health problems have head coach Tom Henderson concerned that Cal Poly may have trouble in Saturday's race in Evansville, Ind. The Mustangs were fourth in last year's meet.

Tim Campbell, who has never been lower than the team's third finisher this year, will not compete. He injured his Achilles' tendon last month and has not fully recovered. Although he skipped the conference meet, he competed in the regional, finishing near the back.

MEN'S X-COUNTRY

"He was the most consistent competitor on the team," said Henderson. "Losing him will have a tremendous impact on our performance. A top-three finish will take a perfect race."

All-American Chris Craig also has not fully recovered from an injury, but he will race. He hurt his knee after running into a pole at the conference meet earlier this month. Craig was Cal Poly's top finisher at last year's nationals.

"Chris is back to about 85 percent," Henderson said. "But I am confident he will be fully recovered for the meet. He is a championship athlete. He knows how to perform when the pressure is on."

Meanwhile, Mike Livingston has tried to pick up the slack. The all-American finished fifth in the conference meet and third at regionals, the top Mustang both times.

Michael Miner, another all-

Conference championship... check. Regional championship... check. All systems are go, as the Cal Poly women's cross-country team attempts to win its sixth straight NCAA championship.

The Lady Mustangs once again are favored to win the national meet, held Saturday in Evansville, Ind. A victory would complete another triple crown, since they won their eighth straight California Collegiate Athletic Association title and seventh straight western regional crown earlier this month.

Also defending a national title is all-American Gladees Prieur.

The senior broke the course record in winning last year's crown, but had to battle Seattle Pacific's Bente Moe down to the last 150 yards before pulling away. Moe reversed the order in this year's regional, finishing second while Prieur was sixth. The regional champion, Sylvia Mosqueda of Cal State Los Angeles, is undefeated this season.

"Gladees always rises to the level of the competition, and her competition is excellent," said head coach Lance Harter.

The team effort will be bolstered by three other national-meet veterans. Kris Katterhagen was sixth in last year's meet, Minkler was 39th and Noreen DeBettencourt was 13th in 1985. Becky Nieto, Pauline Stehly and Teena Colebrook round out the squad.

"We have a reputation of developing unknowns," said Harter. "Becky is an example. She was a long shot to make the team, yet she has been a contributor all season."

Stehly and Colebrook both are two-time track all-Americans. Stehly's best performance this year was in the regional, where she finished seventh.

Colebrook, a native of England, is in her first year of cross-country competition. She was Cal Poly's top finisher in the conference meet, but pulled out of the regional after experiencing breathing problems.

Cal Poly's closest competition should come from Cal State Los Angeles, Army and Springfield, ranked second through fourth in the nation, respectively.

CONTRA

founders envisioned," said a source familiar with the report, who spoke only on condition of anonymity. "It paints a picture of a government out of control."

In its broadest criticism of the president, the Democratic-directed report concludes that Reagan failed in his constitutional duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

In the introduction to their own dissenting version of the report, the GOP dissenters contended that it also attempts, "almost as an overarching thesis, to portray the administration as if it were behaving with wanton disregard for the law."

But the minority dissent found that conclusion, as well as many others in the document, based on selective use of testimony and dubious interpretation of the law.

The document was signed by all six Republicans on the House committee — Reps. Dick Cheney of Wyoming, William Broomfield of Michigan, Henry Hyde of Illinois, Jim Courter of New Jersey, Bill McCollum of Florida and Michael DeWine of Ohio — and two Senate Republicans, Orrin Hatch of Utah and James McClure of Idaho.

The GOP members did find numerous mistakes, most of them errors of political judgment, including an 11-month delay in notifying Congress of the Iran arms initiative.

However, they wrote, "We emphatically reject the idea that through these mistakes, the executive branch subverted the law, undermined the Constitution or threatened democracy."

"On some issues — particularly the ones involving the statutes involving covert operations — we believe the law to be clearly on the administration's side," they added.

Even where the administration did run into legal gray areas, the Republicans asserted, the problems do not affect the fundamental policy decisions that the administration pursued in the Middle East and in Central America.

The minority contended that the report seeks to treat policy debates as though they were legal or criminal concerns, and tries to give to Congress a greater role in policymaking than it should properly assume.

On the key point of Reagan's knowledge of the diversion of money to the Contras, the final report raises doubts and says that if the president did not know about it, he should have.

In its dissent, the GOP minority agreed but faulted former national security adviser John M. Poindexter, who testified that he made the decision to divert the money without ever telling Reagan. Poindexter actually undercut Reagan's authority by keeping the truth from him, it said.

The minority said it understands the enthusiasm of National Security Council aide Oliver North in pursuing the diversion, but added: "Enthusiasm is not a sufficient basis for important policy decisions."

And it faulted Poindexter and North for their "apparent belief that covering up was in the president's best political interest."

The minority report contended that the final product of the committee majority more represents a continuation of years of mutual mistrust and policy warfare with the administration over Central American policy than a sincere attempt to find out what went wrong and heal rifts.

Reagan should have publicly confronted congressional efforts to restrict aid to the Contras by vetoing a bill that carried the restriction in 1984, the Republicans contended.

"Once the president decided against a veto, it was self-defeating to think a program this important could be sustained by deceiving Congress," they wrote. "Whether technically illegal or not, it was politically foolish...."

Sales of arms to Iran had their roots in an intelligence failure, the minority said. Reagan's decision to go ahead with the sales was based on "the thinnest" of information, it found, and was made in an atmosphere of intense concern for U.S. hostages.

While the deal degenerated into an arms-for-hostages swap, "it did not look that way to many of the U.S. participants at the time," the minority document said. But, it added, U.S. officials should never have agreed to allow weapons to be the currency used for establishing good faith in bargaining with the Iranians.

MUSTANGS

American, will try to keep pace with Livingston. Henderson said Miner has regained last year's racing form after a sluggish start this season.

Chris Bahr, Michael Parrott, Paul Ghidossi and Jim Chaney complete the team.

Bahr was added after first alternate Gary Charbonneau, who was to replace Campbell, underwent emergency surgery last week.

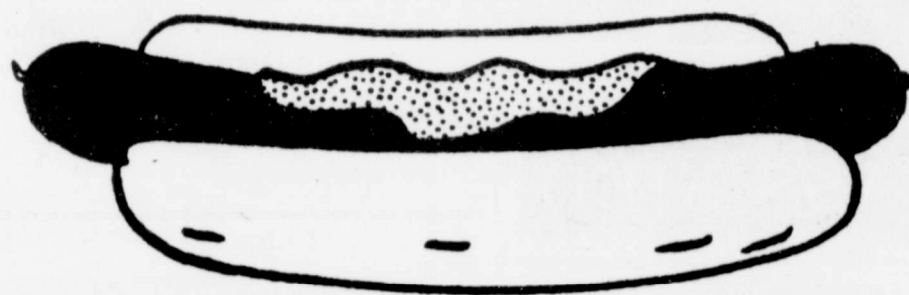

"Chris has nothing to lose and everything to gain," Henderson said. "His orders are to go out with our pack, no questions asked."

If the Mustangs can boast of any advantage, it is that they trained on the course in September after the Notre Dame Invitational. Although it was rainy and windy at the invitational, they ran well. That is encouraging to Henderson, who said the same conditions — maybe even snow — may prevail.

Defending champion Edinboro, South Dakota State, Cal State Los Angeles and Southeast Missouri are the favorites.
