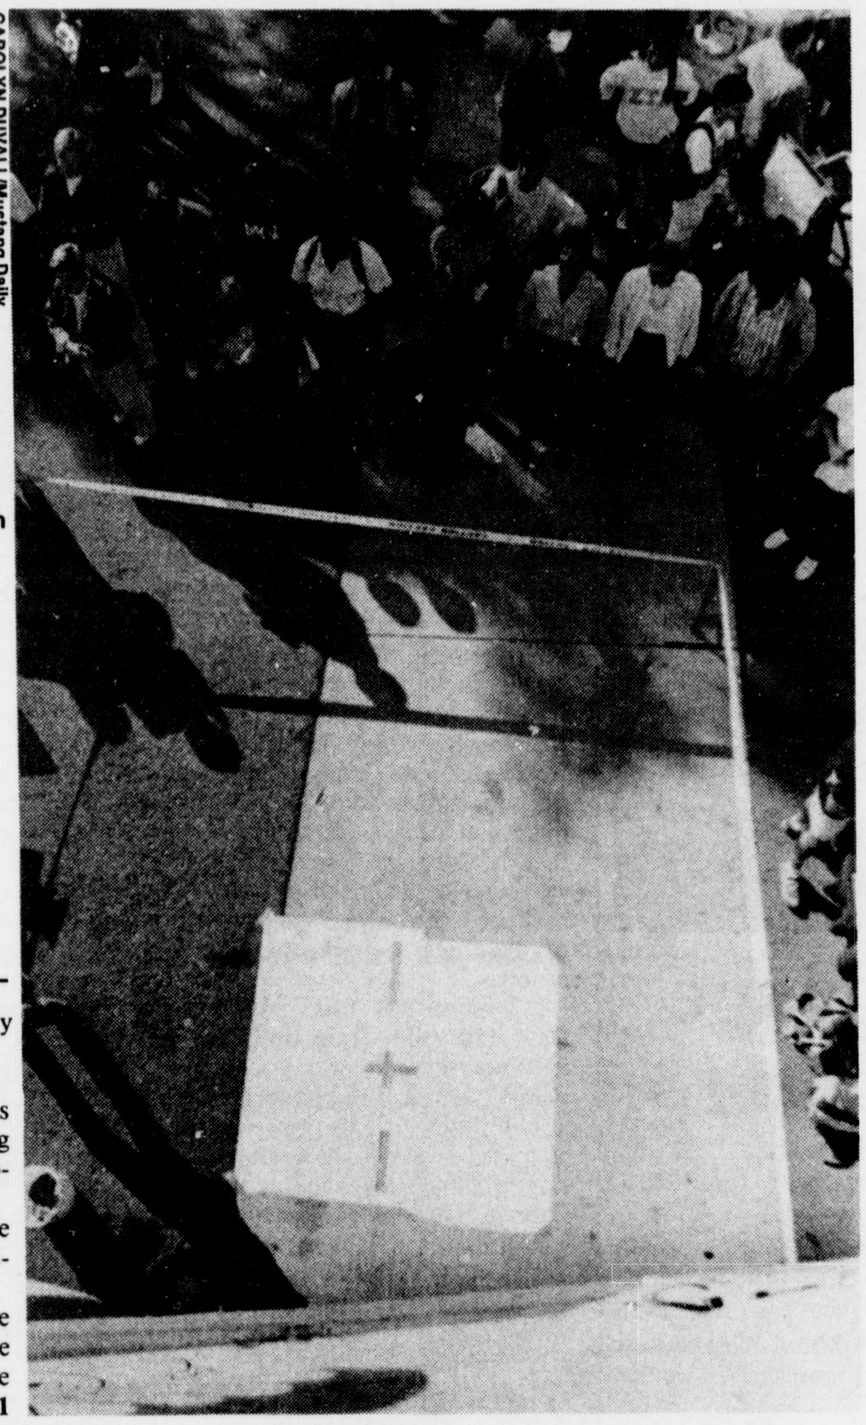
Giving a new meaning to "freshly packed," this student drops an egg off the roof of the University Union onto the target below.



Splatt!

Humpty Dumpty could relate to this battle of the cartons

By Carolyn Duvall
Staff Writer

Eggs were dropped off the University Union Wednesday for the 16th annual egg drop contest.

Contestants in the drop, sponsored the industrial technology department, designed packages to hold two eggs and dropped them from the balcony outside the Mustang Lounge to test the packages for commercially practical shipping containers.

The packages were checked for broken eggs on the concrete below. Any time an egg was broken, the package was disqualified.

Before being dropped, each package was weighed and the volume was figured. Then, each package was dropped three times and checked. The packages with surviving eggs were

S. Senate closes term with cheer, tone registration

By Heidi Linkenbach
Staff Writer

The Student Senate wrapped up its fall quarter business Wednesday night with unanimous calls of good cheer for the upcoming holiday season from all senators.

On a more serious note, ASI President Stan Van Vleck reminded everyone to have fun, but to be safe, during the holidays.

The senate unanimously approved the allocation of funds to implement the On-Line Touch Tone Registraton program. The system, expected to be in operation by winter 1989, will replace the CAR system, and will provide a solution to the add/drop complication faced by students each quarter.

Through the touch-tone telephone, students can register for classes, and know exactly which classes they have on their schedule, before hanging up the phone.

Discussion on the General Education and Breadth Requirement resolution was postponed until the next meeting so it can be rewritten. Tom Lebens, senator from the School of Engineering, said, "There are some technicalities in the wording that make it difficult to understand." The resolution will be resubmitted at the next meeting.

In other business the finance committee approved the request from the ASI Outings committee for $3,180 for the kayak program. The allotment is contingent upon the committee finding supplemental insurance for the program, which ASI will not provide.

The next meeting will be Jan. 13.

Poet criticizes Reagan saying he's in a deep sense of denial

CHRIS DUNKER/Mustang Daily

Robert Bly

By April Karys
Staff Writer

"I don't want to go into Reagan-bashing," award-winning poet Robert Bly told an audience of about 100 yesterday morning in the University Union. An hour later, however, he ended his Arts and Humanities lecture series talk by saying that the President should be charged with treason and impeached.

Bly's lecture, "Freedom," focused on the last 15 years of U.S. history, emphasizing Reagan's presidency.

"The problem is not with Reagan," said Bly. "The problem is with the people who elected Reagan. Reagan never wanted to be president. He wants to play the role, and that's very different. But we knew he was an actor, and not a very good one. Yet we elected him."

'But Reagan says Russia is an 'evil empire' and that the United States is number one. He's pitiful. He's an anti-statesman.'
— Robert Bly

Bly, 60, who is known in the literary community for his blunt, fiery political outspokenness, said Reagan is in a deep state of denial, and he is the son of an alcoholic.

Bly said anyone who has grown up with alcoholic parents knows they do a lot of denying, and the whole family participates in the denial process. Bly claimed he could tell Reagan was in a state of denial by his smile.

"When you can deny something as important as that serious condition in the family then you can deny anything," Bly said quietly, his voice nevertheless penetrating. "If you believe you can raise military spending and lower taxes, and balance the budget, then you can believe anything."

But this means that the entire nation is in a state of denial, Bly said.

"We all walk down the street with idiotic smiles on our faces and whenever anyone asks how we are we say, 'Fine! I feel just

Overflowing luggage is prone to bursting

Next week as Cal Poly students test themselves on one quarter's learning, the world's superpowers will test each other head-to-head.

The test will look similar to King of the Mountain, with each side trying to gain more ground than the other on the negotiations dirtpile. Nuclear missiles were once the sole item of import on each agenda, but when Mikhail Gorbachev comes to Washington next Tuesday, he can expect to match hidden agendas with Reagan.

In the face of mounting personal political pressure, the two leaders have lost sight of the ultimate goal: eliminating nuclear weapons. Reagan is trying to salvage the last of a presidency tattered around the edges. And Gorbachev is catching heat for his perestroika from conservative communist party members at home.

The issue here is nuclear weapons, the most fearful element of modern society. But because both Reagan and Gorbachev are hindered by domestic weakness, they are dragging all their excess political baggage up on the bargaining table. Reagan wants Russian withdrawal from Afghanistan, Central America and Angola, as well as human rights justice. Gorbachev wants SDI, more technology and no trade barriers. He's also interested in the U.N. arms embargo against Iran.

These are all noble aims in their own right, and as such they should be negotiated independently or as a group of non-nuclear items. Including them in the nuclear negotiations will only cause bargaining to balk down in political glutony. Sure, it would be nice to negotiate completely openhearted peace with the Soviet Union, but the world has a long way to go yet. A proper starting point is the death of the nuclear threat.

The first step has already been taken with the intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) treaty. The Soviet Union will destroy 1,500 warheads, the United States will destroy 350 after the treaty is signed on the first day of Gorbachev's visit. In the days that follow, the goal is a 50 percent reduction in long-range strategic weapons.

This goal will never be achieved unless we realize the solitary importance of this issue. Linking non-essentials to arms reduction will surely kill the hopes of humanity.

OPINION

Giving and receiving has never been so deceiving

'Tis the season to shop 'til ya drop. Yo ho ho and a bottle of rum!

Yes, it's the Give-n-Receive fling of 1987, starring your local greedy merchants eager to ooze the green blood from your pumpin' wallet. Arm your checkbooks and spend, spend, spend.

I don't know, but every year the Yuletide seems to get a little more distant from me. Maybe it's because I'm broke, but I'm pretty sure it's because I'm a cold-hearted, slimy, selfish fish of a Scrooge with a credit limit so low that I barely qualified for a Vons Bakery Card.

Wandering through the malls and hubbubs of the land after Thanksgiving, I found nothing but blah. The same blah bitchy high-school wenches crowding The Promenade del Huevos Towne Centre. The same blah folks skidding out of control on the ice-skating rinks. The same blah fountains espewing their re-treated water to the pleasure of the suburbanites. Kind of gets you misty-eyed, hmm?

There's something to be said about nice cute little downtowns like San Luis, where you feel like there's a center of town; a focal point. But let's face it, America wants a mall. They like pretending that they're wandering down some Fifth Avenue or Melrose Avenue, shopping in plastic stores for plastic things for plastic friends. This is us — this is now.

I was at this little pastel wonderland over Bird Day, 110 miles from any sign of a breaking swell, and yet there it was — a surf store. With surfboards. So useful and practical — go surf a sand dune, dude. I was more than slightly amused at watching wanna-be Kevin Currans following Mr. Zogg's advice by rubbing Sex Wax on their sticks. I think the company meant the surfboards. Such is mall life.

All the anchor department stores competed for my attention, showing me a fistful of teeth with dreams of big commissions in their eyes. Go to Nordstrom's to watch the piano dude tinkle on the ivories. Waltz into Bullock's and have lamely dressed sales clerks show off their overpriced wares. Stroll into Bullock's Wilshire and have the overdressed clerks give you the definition of overpriced. Trudge into Emporium-Capwell and notice the clerks (all wearing their "How may I help you?" buttons) scatter like groupies at a general-admission concert. And finally, limp over to Gottschalks and get explained that a Garfield digital watch is "a swell gift — and a Best Buy!"

A pile of Stew

Stewart McKenzie

Butcha can't help but like the K-martness of department stores. The joints are bigger than your entire apartment complex, and probably the mannequins are better dressed than your roommate. Can you find that at The Foot Locker?

But after a hot and heavy day of shopping at Macy's, Pomegranite Republic and The Gap for Egotistical Left-Handed Baptists, it's time to hit the place that hits the spot: The International Food Circus. Truly, the global village philosophy is here. Dine in China on blood-red sweet-n-sour. Indulge in England on super-soggy Fish-n-Chips. Go buy a few cancer sticks at Hot Dog on a Stick, famous for the employees that wear uniforms akin to colorful bodycondoms.

And all for the price of a Garfield digital watch.

After eating my face off, I abandoned Christmas mall shopping. Instead, I decided to buy what my family deserves: Cal Poly shot glasses. It's the gift that keeps on giving. Whatever that means.

Mr. McKenzie has paid a promotional fee for this column and has asked to remind you that switching auditoriums is prohibited.

Letters to the editor

A golden answer

Editor:

Violent fluctuations in the stock market are the predictable result of excess government control and monkeying around with our nation's money system. It is intolerable that a small elitist group of so-called experts have the power to determine the value of the dollar, while another group at the Federal Reserve decides what interest rates shall be. This kind of power inevitably produces booms and busts that harm both our nation and many hard-working Americans.

There are other contributors to economic stability and to America's continuing decline. Among these are massive deficits and the extreme trade imbalance.

Some people refuse to acknowledge basic economic principles. They display their ignorance by assuming they have the power to repeal these basic laws. Our huge debt burden and the trade imbalance are the result of this arrogant disregard for the truth. Deficit spending and deficit trade are inseparably linked together. As debt payments soar to new and greater heights the cost of all goods produced in the U.S. must also increase. This destroys our ability to compete in the world market.

All these factors destroy confidence in America's future. A growing lack of confidence can be expected to get worse, because our elected leaders and other powerful "experts" continue their refusal to cease tinkering, and they are doing little to clear up the deficit and trade problems.

What is the answer? A return to the gold standard. A significant cutback in government spending. An end to foreign aid including the staggering cost of defending European and Asian allies, who can and should defend themselves. A re-establishment of the free enterprise system, free of harmful government meddling. Note that if all taxes were removed from the production and marketing of energy, gasoline would sell for just over 20 cents per gallon. A loaf of bread likewise would sell for a small fraction of the current price.

To those citizens who believe more government is the answer, I would like to suggest that you remove your rose-tinted glasses, open your eyes (take your head out of the sand first), wake up and smell the coffee and join the growing ranks of freedom-loving Americans.

Fun with turkey

Editor:

I was surprised to see an article in today's (Dec. 3) newspaper about student Jay Blahnik and his success on the game show "Win, Lose or Draw."

I was also on that show, although my segment aired Nov. 27. I lost my game, but I still won $1,300 and I had a great time playing. (I'll lose like that any time!)

My moment of glory was identifying a much-protested phrase drawn by Jill St. John: "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen." A moment of glory, a day on national television and $1,300 — what a fun experience for a Cal Poly student. What I'm really looking forward to, though, is my parting gift: $25 worth of Swanson canned turkey!

Principal backs out of ban as students cry constitution

SAN LORENZO (AP) — San Lorenzo High School officials rescinded a controversial ban on T-shirts and other clothing articles that advertised beer because of fears of costly legal battles.

"The law is open-ended and gray instead of black and white," said Principal Joanne Knowles, speaking Tuesday night to school trustees.

"I sincerely believe that the matter will eventually go to the courts, particularly in light of the statements made on the foor of Congress condeming the exploitation of minors by the advertising agencies," she added.

Some students had called the ban an infringement of their rights to free speech and the American Civil Liberties Union had sent the district a letter last month claiming the ban violated the First Amendment.

Pictures of proud pot grower harvest a county court date

WALLED LAKE, Mich. (AP) — A man who proudly posed for pictures in front of his 10-foot-tall marijuana plants was arrested after a drugstore that developed the film turned the photos over to the police.

Christopher Aaron, 28, his girlfriend and four neighbors were charged Wednesday in state district court with manufacturing a controlled substance.

Police traced Aaron, of White Lake Township, through a photograph of the license plate on his pickup truck.

"I guess they figured they were on a dead-end street and no one would notice," said Bob Mendham, a member of the Oakland County Narcotics Enforcement team.

Mendham said Aaron "just wanted to show off, but he realizes now it was pretty stupid."

Officers found 80 pounds of marijuana growing near the suspects' houses.

S. Korea warns that bombing could endager Olympic talks

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The government searched today for proof of North Korean involvement in the suspected bombing of an airliner after warning it was ready to end talks with its communist rival on sharing the 1988 Seoul Olympics.

Government officials said they believed a sophisticated plastic explosives bomb was planted on the Korean Airlines flight that vanished with 115 people aboard. They were checking to see if a third person could have been involved.

Officials in Bahrain were still trying to identify an Asian couple who took poison just before they were to be questioned about the missing jetliner. The man died. The woman was reported today to be conscious after having been in a coma. Both were carrying forged Japanese passports when detained at the Bahrain airport.

fine!'' ' Bly said, throwing up his hands. ''That's a sure way to spot an American in Europe. The one that has the idiotic smile on his face. Often if you ask a Frenchman how he is, he'll say 'I feel really awful.'' '

Bly said that one way this denial has been used by the nation is in its inability to take in the lessons offered by the Vietnam War.

''I was in the second world war in the Navy,'' Bly said. ''We regarded that as a just war, and I still feel that to some extent. The mood was that it was hard work well done. The Germans were down, a lot of Jewish lives had been saved.

''When I got back to San Francisco, I went to get a haircut and the barber wouldn't let me pay because I was a veteran. But there are some disadvantages about winning World War II. When you win a war you have arrogance. It was that arrogance that led to the Vietnam War.

''We decided that they had a wrong government, and that we were going to straighten them out. We couldn't even speak their language, and we decided that. When you lose a war, you don't have that arrogance.

''Reagan was hired to prevent us from taking in the lessons of the Vietnam war,'' he said. ''That means that all that fighting and all those people who died and whose names are on the memorial wall, all that was done for nothing. If we did all that suffering, at least something should come out of it that is good for the American soul.

''But Reagan says Russia is an 'evil empire' and that the United States is number one. He's pitiful. He's an anti-statesman.

''Who has the right to make a war? Does the president have the right all by himself to make a war? Are you kidding?''

That's why the framers of the Constitution built into it the balance of powers, Bly said.

Professor's book on geology shows structure and routes

By James Welch
Staff Writer

A new book by a Cal Poly professor details San Luis Obispo County's geology and marks out driving and walking trails to get a firsthand view of the area.

David H. Chipping's ''Geology of San Luis Obispo County'' includes sections on the county's geological history, its formations and faults, ground water distribution, mining history and a large annotated bibliography of local references. The largest section of the book is the set of 33 road tours and 14 trail guides.

A member of Cal Poly's physics department faculty since 1971, Chipping said he wrote and produced the 200-page volume because he has been deluged with questions on local geology.

''I've included information about formations,'' said Chipping, ''so people can look at this and that and know what it is.''

All of the road logs are original. Chipping has traveled every one of them, including the 14 trails he mentions.

Much of his geological sources are from existing local references which until now were not very accessible. His book is an accurate compilation of the geological history of the county.

Chipping earned his bachelor's degree, what is called a Tripos, at Cambridge University in England, and his master's and doctorate at Stanford. He did his master's on ground water distribution and his thesis on the rock formations of the La Panza Range.

Chipping is also a consultant to the county on geology and ground water problems.

''Geology of San Luis Obispo County'' is available at local bookstores for $19.95 and at El Corral for $17.95.

Christmas ballet returns for biggest year ever

K.M. CANNON/Mustang Daily

A scene from The Nutcracker

By Kristine J. Abbey
Staff Writer

K.M. CANNON

The Christmas season is here and with it come the annual performance of The Nutcracker by San Luis Obispo's Civic Ballet.

For the 10th season, members of both the Civic Ballet and the Academy of Dance will perform the classic ballet Dec. 4-6 at the Cal Poly Theatre, but for the first time since the debut season, all performances are sold out.

The Nutcracker is a classic story of a small girl who receives a wooden nutcracker for Christmas. That night she dreams the nutcracker leads toy soldiers in a fight against the mice and the Rat King. She ends up saving the nutcracker's life, and in return, he takes her to his kingdom in Candyland where she meets the Sugar Plum Fairy. At the end of the performance she wakes up only to find her nutcracker is small and wooden again.

This year's performance will feature San Luis Obispo's own prima ballerina Jackie Lee, who danced the role of the Sugar Plum Fairy in the debut performance 10 years ago.

Lee has performed major roles in the Civic Ballet since its beginning in 1978. Besides dancing throughout the year with the Civic Ballet, she is also an instructor at the Academy of Dance and a choreographer.

Dancing opposite Lee as the Nutcracker Prince will be guest artist Paul Giovanazzo of the San Diego Opera Ballet. Aside from Giovanazzo, all performers are local. Jim Brosnahan and Terry Slobodnik have been cast as the Snow King and Snow Queen. Sanford Smith will perform the parts of the Spanish Prince and the Rat King and character actor Charles Braun will be Drosselmeyer.

> "You may have seen The Nutcracker, but you've never seen it like this."
> — Bonnie Garritano

Some changes have been made in the children's roles as several baby doll rolls have been added. The Christmas Dolls will be played by Robbye Snider of Los Osos and Banessa Pokorny of San Luis Obispo. Johanna Astaire and Robin Muriset of San Luis Obispo and Renee Haidet of Los Osos will accompany the Sugar Plum Fairy in a newly choreographed scene.

Bonnie Garritano, media chairman for the Civic Ballet, said there may be some other new additions, as artistic director Lorilee Silvaggio is keeping many changes a secret. Garritano added that Tchaikovsky's music that traditionally accompanies the ballet will be "pepped" up for this year's performance.

This year's festivities began last night with a Black and White Ball for patrons donating $100 per couple. The evening began with a cocktail hour and included an exclusive performance of The Nutcracker followed by champagne and dessert at the Embassy Suites Hotel.

Garritano said The Nutcracker performance has come a long way in 10 years. The first few years there was only a chair and one backdrop for a set, now there is a full, beautiful set in each scene, she added.

"You may have seen The Nutcracker," she said. "But you've never seen it like this."

'Tis the season for singing about holiday joys

Chaunticleer

Described as one of the best vocal ensembles in the world, Chanticleer will return to the Cal Poly Theatre for a memorable concert of Christmas music.

Named after Chaucer's lusty rooster, Chaunticleer plays traditional music of the 15th and 16th centuries, as well as the latest in pop and avant-garde. With such artistic variety and stylistic integrity, the group has become one of the most sought after groups of its kind in the world.

Some of the pieces Chaunticleer will perform for the Dec. 8 concert include "Plainchant," a mass for Christmas day by William Byrd written in 1607, "A Spotless Rose" by Herbert Howells writen between 1918-20 and "A Hymn to the Virgin" written by Benjamin Britten in 1930.

Tickets are prices at $8 and $6 for students and $12 and $10 for the public. All seats are reserved for the performance that begins at 8 p.m. Call 756-1421 for ticket reservations.

Handel Oratorio Choir

Featuring a complete broken ensemble as well as 75 singers from the local area, the Handel Oratorio Choir and Orchestra will present three performances of Handel's Messiah during this holiday season.

The acclaim and tradition of Handel's masterpiece will first be performed at the New Life Community Church of the Nazarene at 990 James Way in Pismo Beach. This performance will begin at 7:30. On Dec. 6 the choir will perform in Atascadero at the Church of the Nazarene on El Camino Real at 7 p.m. The choir will travel to San Luis Obispo Dec. 11 for a performance at the United Methodist Church at 1515 Fredericks St. at 8 p.m. All performances are free.

Performance of the Messiah in San Luis Obispo County was first started in 1966. The presentation has been made every year since under the direction of local conductors. This year Hendrik Hielkema will conduct the choir for the fourth year in a row. A retired businessman, Hendrik serves as music chairman for the Church of the Latter Day Saints in San Luis Obispo.

A member of the Handel Oratorio ensemble rehearses.

Cal Poly Choirs

The Cal Poly choirs will present holiday music in "A Christmas Celebration" this weekend. Featured will be the Mens's Chorus, Women's Chorus, University Singers and the Madrigal/Jazz Ensemble, all of which will perform 16th century works as well as modern compositions and classic folk Christmas carols.

The choirs are led by Thomas Davies, director of choral activies at Cal Poly. The Madrigal/Jazz Ensemble was created by Davies last year to perform madrigals, French chansons and German leiders of the 15th and 16th centuries. In contrast to these styles, the group performs modern jazz arrangements with the accompaniment of a small rhythm section.

Tickets for the performances on Dec. 4 are $5 for the public and $3 for students. The 8 p.m. program will be held at the United Methodist Church, 1515 Fredericks St.

Top of the Pops

UK legend makes pop history in US

Becoming a pop star could be as easy as forming a band, learning how to play an instrument, putting out a song or two with a catchy dance beat, and for a spicier career twist, perhaps getting the record banned so everyone would want to hear the forbidden. But how would an up-and-coming pop star measure success once following these easy steps?

Well, for 23 years British bands have measured their success by the opportunity to appear on Top of the Pops, the legendary BBC-TV show that features live performances from the commercial tops in the music industry.

American artists now have the same opportunity for the Top of the Pops experience with the shows recent Atlantic crossing to the CBS studios of Hollywood.

Airing Friday nights at 11:30, the new hour-long version of the show features live performances by top pop artists in England and America through a satellite hookup. For the show's U.S. debut, Mick Jagger and David Bowie performed live. It was Jagger with the Rolling Stones in 1964 who performed in the show's UK premier.

Hosting the show on the American side is Nia Peeples, who many might remember as Nicole Chapman on the TV series Fame, as well as a starring role opposite Gregory Harrison in last summer's movie North Shore. Peeples has also embarked on her own music career.

"I'm convinced that my career in music helped me get the job," said Peeples in a phone interview from Hollywood. Her debut album on Polygram Records is set for a spring 1988 release.

Peeples performing experience has also helped her form a perspective on an interesting aspect of the U.S. show — the independence from lip-syncing (the historic performing method on the UK version).

"I would rather hear the artist singing live, even if they are dancing around and out of breath ... it's much more exciting," Peeples said. "Most artists prefer to perform live because they can talk to the audience. I would rather sing live — unless I'm really sick."

Producers of the show have taken a strong stand on this issue, passing on bands that only lip-sync to help maintain the unique personal feel inspired from the U.S. version.

U.S. pop hostess Nia Peeples

But the U.S. show has run into controversy with the CBS network over a problem more fundamental than lip-syncing — namely band names. One problem arose when Peeples was not allowed to introduce the Jesus and Mary Chain, ironically a UK band.

"It's tough to introduce someone named Jesus on network television," Peeples said. "A lot of people could be offended." CBS is the also the most conservative network, she added. "You have to remember we're working with a network that counts 'hells' and 'damns' ."

The Jesus and Mary Chain declined to be introduced as the "J and M Chain" because they apparently thought it sounded too much like a shoe store. Names, though, aren't the only obstacles facing new artists in

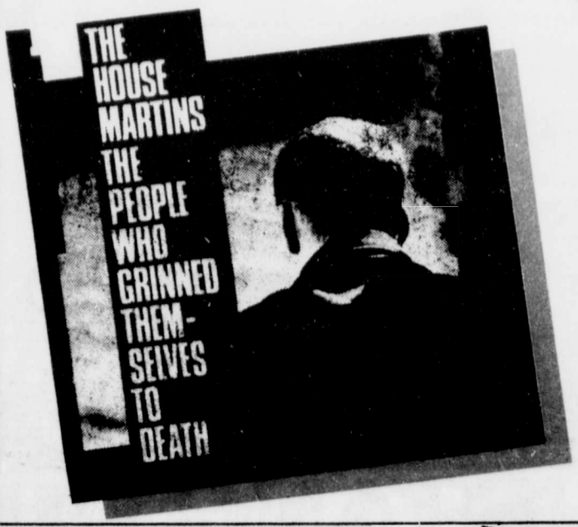
Housemartins

The People Who Grinned Themselves To Death

Go!/Elektra Records



British popsters The Housemartins, often called a weaker, Christian version of the Smiths, have just released their second full length album, titled The People Who Grinned Themselves To Death. Although not quite as brilliant as their debut album from last year, London 0 Hull 4, it's still worth buying for fans of the band.

Their punchy, folksy, guitar-based music is filled out a little more with sparse additions of trumpet and piano. The trumpet and harmonica parts in the title track work well to produce a happy-sounding song with not so happy lyrics. It's about people, "Who smiled so much they failed to take a breath/ And even when their kids were starving/ They all thought the Queen was charming." The song "Bow Down" is another piece that benefits from catchy horns.

The singles "Five Get Over Excited" and "Me and the Farmer" are the highlights here. Interest is lost on the slower songs like "The Light is Always Green." It's not that the band can't do slow songs, however; "Flag Day" from the first album was fantastic, with its heartfelt singing and piano playing.

Lyrically, The Housemartins cover the same anti-Royalty, pro-socialist themes well, especially in "You'd Better Be Doubtful." As they said on their first album: "Take Jesus, take Marx, take hope."

The Christian songs are mostly left to non-album singles like their versions of "People Get Ready" and "Caravan of Love," songs the band intelligently decided (against their label's wishes) to leave off the album because they just would not fit in. Record companies are often stupid.

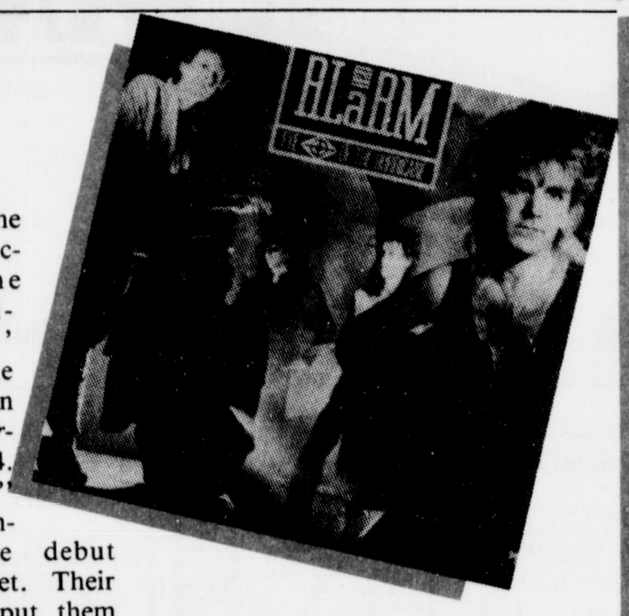
The Alarm

Eye of the Hurricane

IRS Records



It's too bad that the Alarm had to succumb to the "good-band-gone-bad-on-their-third-album" syndrome. I used to like this band back when their first album Declaration came out in 1984. Songs like "68 Guns" and "The Stand" constituted an impressive debut from this Welsh quartet. Their second album Strength put them more firmly into the AOR/Hard Rock format. And now their third effort brings them to the next phase of money-making: pop music, commonly known as Top 40 or "sell-out rock." Although Eye of the Hurricane hasn't actually spawned a popular single yet (in the Casey Kasem sense), the single "Rain in the Summertime," with its dancy beat, keyboards and bass-synth is the most likely hit candidate, but must also be said to be the biggest embarrassment to this band — ever.

This seems like the crossover time for "alternative" bands on the Alarm's label IRS. REM, another big "alternative radio" band on IRS Records, is finally breaking into the Billboard Magazine Top 20 singles chart.

The lyrics are standard Alarm fare with a heavier (or at least

Candy, Martin show turkeys can be cool

By Ken Miller, Special to the Daily

John Candy and Steve Martin hitch a ride in a cheese truck.

For almost every college student, Thanksgiving means traveling moderate distances to be with the family to enjoy the turkey. It is this incarnate problem that John Hughes draws on for success in his new film Planes, Trains and Automobiles.

The story revolves around Neal Page (Steve Martin), a businessman who must travel from New York to Chicago to enjoy this proverbial meal with his collective family. The problem in this case is he can't seem to get there. The mass transportation system has gone haywire, as has Page's life, thanks to obnoxious shower curtain ring salesman Del Griffith (John Candy) who proceeds to, inadvertently, make a shambles of Page's trip home.

And of course, as movies will go, contempt breeds closeness, as Page and Griffith become the best friends since Horowitz and the Steinway.

What this film basically amounts to is a series of revue sketches, some of which are very funny. The problem is that it has a tendency to pause too long in between bits, and is not above being boring the rest of the way.

Also, (and perhaps this is an unavoidable problem) there is way too much straining for pathos on the part of all the major talents.

An interesting point(?): In one single scene, Steve Martin probably sets an unneeded record for saying a certain four-letter word more times than Richard Pryor could in a whole monologue. In films such as this, the main thing to be hoped for is that it will become a perennial (because it revolves around Thanksgiving), but thanks to Hughes' penchant for bad language and worse taste, this film is seldom elevated to the realm of quality entertainment.

Still, thanks to the talents of Martin and Candy (two Canadian performers whose "Second City" beginnings have probably fostered a strong working relationship), the movie is carried all the way to an ending in which Candy's face directly mirrors Charlie Chaplin's in City Lights.

Hughes, who should be very well-known for his coming-of-age films, has managed to make a film that doesn't mirror his past ones. Only one element remains, and that should be changed: the score. For a story like this, is it really necessary to have a Jimmy Iovine-inspired soundtrack? Fine if you like that sort of thing, but Elmer Bernstein would have been this reviewer's choice.

Hughes has the potential to become a very competent artist if he's can shake his obsessions.

This is not really all that bad of a film, but as Martin says, "When you tell a story, have a point!" and Planes seems to have no discernible point except to never visit Wichita, Kan.

America, Peeples said.

"America is really tough on new artists," she said because of the country's huge size and countless artists. "Top of the Pops in England shares a time slot similar to that of the Cosby Show here. England is such a tiny place ... people really cling to their artists — they're more proud of their artists."

Despite differences, however, CBS is optimistic the U.S. version will become as successful as the UK production. The network has ordered a 26-show option, and is reportedly paying one of the highest liscensing fees they've ever paid for a late night television show.

Tonight the U.S. version of the show will feature Def Leppard, Ice House and Richard Marx. A Dec. 23 Christmas special will feature the real heavyweights of the music industry including Sting, U2 and Run DMC, performing material from A&M Record's holiday charity LP.

more apparent) Christian tone than before, making U2 comparisons more real. If the song "One Step Closer to Home" from the new Alarm album isn't meant to be played to huge stadium crowds, I don't know what is. It even has fake mass-cheering subtly mixed into the background of the song. With the Alarm currently on tour with labelmates Concrete Blonde we'll (well ... not me) get a chance to see if they still put on a decent live show as I had the pleasure to see on the Strength tour two years ago.

Tom Carey

Just a junior, Tom Carey has established himself as one of the top defensive linemen in the Western Football conference.

He recorded a team-high 82 tackles this season, 38 unassisted. Twenty-one tackles were for a loss of 127 yards. He also had 17 sacks, a blocked punt, fumble recovery and deflected pass.

He was a WFC player of the week earlier this year, and was named to the all-conference second team for the second straight year.

His exploits helped the Mustangs complete a 7-3 record, their best season since 1980.

Jeff Meyer

Jeff Meyer was a vital cog on the soccer team, which posted its best record ever.

The Mustangs were 11-5-2 and second in the California Collegiate Athletic Association. They also earned their first trip ever to the NCAA playoffs.

Meyer, a senior, anchored the defense, which posted six shutouts. The role of the defense was especially important after the loss of leading scorer Dan Campbell.

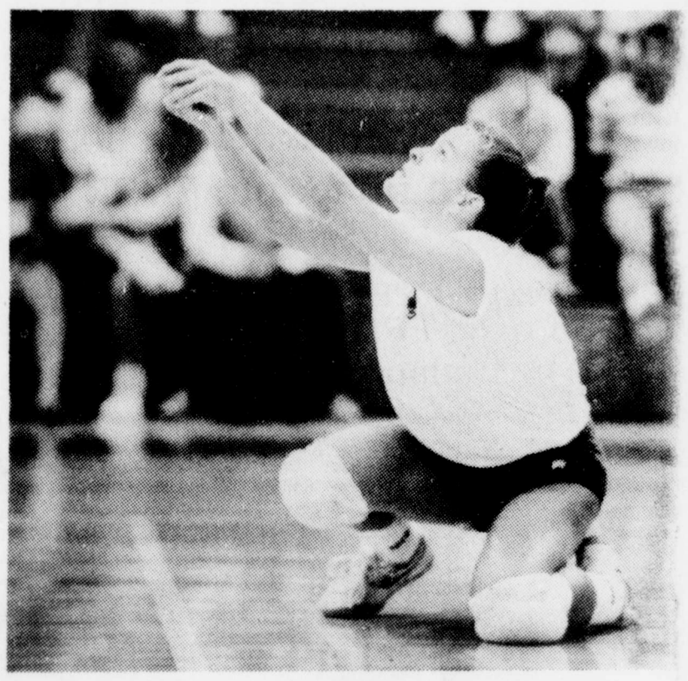
The CCAA named Meyer, who scored three goals, to the all-conference first team.

Claudia Hemmersbach

Despite a lingering back injury, Claudia Hemmersbach led the volleyball team to a fifth-place finish in the rugged Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

Hemmersbach, who considered sitting out this season, is the only Lady Mustang to have played every game. The senior setter anchored a young team many thought would finish in the PCAA's bottom half. She led Cal Poly in digs.

Hemmersbach, who played for the West in the 1985 National Sports Festival, was named to the all-PCAA second team.



Gladees Prieur

Although she failed to defend her national individual title, Gladees Prieur led the women's cross-country team to its sixth straight NCAA championship.

After winning last year's national meet, Prieur was fourth in this year's race.

She broke two course and two meet records this season. In the six races she ran, the senior gained two firsts, a third, fourth, sixth and 19th.

Prieur, a three-time all-American, has consistently been Cal Poly's top finisher the past three years.

Mike Livingston

After finishing 30th in last year's NCAA meet, Mike Livingston jetted to a 14th-place finish this season, the best national performance by a Mustang since 1981.

He led the Mustangs to a seventh place. Livingston also was Cal Poly's top finisher in the regional and conference meets placing third and fifth, respectively. Those performances helped the Mustangs finish fourth in the region and second in the conference.

Livingston, a senior, is a two-time all-American.

Lance Harter

Under Lance Harter's guidance, the women's cross-country team won its eighth straight conference title, seventh straight regional crown and sixth straight national championship.

The Lady Mustangs won six of the eight races they ran. The other finishes were a third and a seventh.

Five runners — Gladees Prieur, Noreen DeBettencourt, Pauline Stehly, Sherri Minkler and Teena Colebrook — were named all-Americans.

Lyle Setencich

Lyle Setencich, who became head coach in January, led the football team to a 7-3 mark, its best record in seven years.

The Mustangs began the season with six consecutive victories, the team's best start since 1973. Cal Poly also registered on the Division II top-20 poll for the first time since 1980, and rose as high as No. 8.

Seven players — five offensive and two defensive — were named to the all-Western Football Conference team.

ASI Annual Audits

The Annual Audits for Fiscal Year 1986-87, for the Associated Students, Inc., University Union, and the Children's Center, at California Polytechnic State University, have now been completed and approved. Copies for public information are available for review in the ASI Business Office, University Union, Room 202.

Seven Mustangs — five offensive, two defensive — named all-WFC

FOOTBALL

The Western Football Conference named seven Mustangs to its all-conference teams.

Tackle Eric Tautolo, guard Robert Staack and defensive back Rene' Oliver made the first team. On the second team are running back Allen Survia and defensive lineman Tom Carey. Quarterback Tom Sullivan and center Herb Smith received honorable mention.

Portland State, which won the WFC title, swept the top honors. Chris Crawford and Tracey Eaton were named co-players of the year, and Pokey Allen is coach of the year.

Tautolo, a senior, also was an all-WFC player last year. A four-year starter, he has received attention from several NFL teams. Staack also is a senior.

Oliver, a junior-college transfer, led the Mustangs in interceptions with four. He also had 39 tackles and five pass deflections.

Survia, who transfered from Taft College, led the league in scoring with 78 points. He also led Cal Poly in rushing, carrying the ball 159 times for 861 yards. Survia averaged 88 yards per game.

Carey also was on the all-WFC team last season. He led the Mustangs in tackles with 82, 38 of them unassisted. He also was the team leader in sacks with 17.

Sullivan completed 117 of 235 passes for 1,705 yards and 12 touchdowns.

Smith, a junior, was a two-year starter.

Gymnastics team performimg in exhibition Friday

GYMNASTICS

The Cal Poly gymnastics team will perform in a preseason exhibition Friday night in Crandall Gym.

The show begins at 7 p.m.

"It's to let the community know that gymnastics season is starting soon," said head coach Tim Rivera.

The Cal Poly men's club and four junior teams from throughout the county also will perform.

The Lady Mustangs, who were sixth at last year's nationals, return all but one gymnast.

"The team is looking good," Rivera said. "The show will allow the girls to get their routines ready for the season."

First meet is in January.

judged on uniqueness, ingenuity, best graphics, least feasible and most commercially feasible.

Designs ranged from two pieces of foam with indentations for the eggs inside to a triangular support frame with the wrapped eggs suspended inside. Usually the simpler packages survived, while the elaborate frame system lost an egg.

"Some of these are overkills. They're just too large to ship," said Harry Larimer, a judge from the Zellerbach Paper Company in Los Angeles.

Last year, some students used parachutes on their boxes or springs on the outside to help the eggs survive the impact, said Kerry Azelton, one of the contest coordinators.

Different types of packaging material were used to protect the eggs.

One was made by Mai Vu, a mechanical engineering student, with a box containing a loaf of bread with small hollow places for the eggs. It survived all three drops.

"I was originally going to try Jell-O, but it didn't work. So, I checked the house and found the bread. It's different from foam," Vu said.

Another variation on that theme was a box with balloons and croissants for padding.

"It was originally supposed to have a foam divider," said Gary Minnich. One of his eggs broke.

Only eight of the 28 entries made it to the final judging. Winners will receive either dinner at McLintocks restaurant, lunch at Champions, or a free airplane lesson from Air San Luis. Each contestant will receive an egg drop contest T-shirt.

"I would like to see more diversity in the packaging materials next year. (The students) are using mostly packaging foam," said Jerry Shea, a judge from the Richter company in Pomona.

"They learn something from this and it's fun," said Larimer. "Even at Los Angeles campuses they hear about the Cal Poly egg drop contest," he said.

Poly trying to rescue Morro Bay's rowdy rats

By Diane Wright
Staff Writer

Project director Aryan Roest oversees a breeding facility on campus for an endangered species called Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rats.

Roest said there are around 20 different kinds of kangaroo rats, and the Heermann'a Morro Bay species is one of the four kinds that are on the endangered species list.

The Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rats are native to Morro Bay and live in the wild to the south and east of the city.

"These rats are not found anywhere else in the world," said Roest.

The Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rat does not look like an ordinary mouse. The rats are called kangaroo rats because they have large hind quarters and they hop. The kangaroo rats have a brown back and a pure white underside. Their tails are brown with a lateral white stripe on each side.

The rats also have pouches in their cheeks for storing seeds to carry back to their burrows.

Roest said he became interested in kangaroo rats in 1956, when he helped a student map where different kinds of kangaroo rats lived in the wild for a senior project. About seven years ago, another student set up a breeding facility for Heermann's Nimpomo Kangaroo Rats, which are not an endangered species.

Heermann's Nipomo Kangaroo Rats differ from Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rats physically. A white stripe on the hind legs is complete on the Nipomo variety but not on the Morro Bay variety.

Roest said the U.S. Federal Wildlife Service approached him in 1984 and asked him to try breeding the endangered Morro Bay Kangaroo Rats. He said the service funded the project with a three-year grant beginning June 1, 1984. A license was issued for the facility by the California Department of Fish and Game.

Funding ran out in June and the grant was not renewed due to federal budgets cuts. Roest said all the money received was not used when the grant expired, and the facility is being kept open with what is left from the expired grant.

Two Cal Poly students, Bob Hole and Karen Rice, are taking care of the kangaroo rats. The rats are only fed twice a week, but are checked on every day to determine if they are ready to breed.

The original intent was to get the rats to successfully reproduce so that the rats could be turned loose in the wild.

"We haven't produced enough to do that," said Roest. "We originally had 12 from the wild and now we have 29." It took more than three years for this amount of reproduction.

"The rats are very anti-social. When you put them together, they fight," said Roest. One female rat has killed a male.

Breeding is done at night in a large pen in the center of the room. If the rats get violent, the students have to separate them. He said different things have been tried to calm down the rats such as playing soft music, but nothing has really worked. "If the rats don't like each other, that's it," said Roest.

Roest said the females generally take care of their young, but not always. "We have one mother who had three litters and killed them all," he said.

There are 18 Heermann's Nipomo Kangaroo Rats in the breeding facility with the 29 Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rats. Roest said the Nipomo rats are kept so that experiments such as changing feed can be done.

The rats eat a mixture of hamster chow, sunflower seeds, rolled oats, lettuce and carrots. No water is given to the rats. A leaf of lettuce twice a week provides all the liquid the rats require.

In the wild, kangaroo rats burrow underground and live alone, not in groups. In the breeding facility, each rat is in a separate fish aquarium cage filled with sand and there is a plastic pipe in which they hide. The female rats shred sunflower seeds into what looks like loose cotton to form a nest when they are expecting. Roest said expectant mothers are given a paper towel to shred for their nest as well.

Heermann's Morro Bay Kangaroo Rat is in danger of extinction for two reasons. One reason is that their habitat is being destroyed by building. "They don't live well in backyards," said Roest.

The second reason is that there has not been a major fire in the Morro Bay area for 50 to 60 years. Roest said kangaroo rats need new growth to feed on in the wild, not tall brush.
