David S. Lifton gives speech about Kennedy assassination at Cal Poly Theatre.

Author disputes evidence in killing

Book says Oswald didn't slay Kennedy

By Doug DiFranco
Staff Writer

Who really killed John F. Kennedy?
David S. Lifton, author of Best Evidence, doesn't know for sure, but he's willing to bet anything that it was not Lee Harvey Oswald.
Lifton, who spoke Monday in the nearly full Cal Poly Theatre, believes the Nov. 22, 1963 assassination was a conspiracy by top officials in the Kennedy administration — and was only made to look like Oswald did it.
In his three-and-a-half hour speech, Lifton presented findings he had uncovered during his own personal investigation of the assassination, many obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.
What Lifton found was the subject of his 1981 best seller. Lifton believes that Kennedy was shot from the front (not behind, as was believed), and that between the time Kennedy's body was taken from Dallas to Bethesda Naval Station for autopsy, the body had been altered to make it look like it had been shot from behind.

Much of Lifton's findings came from conflicting testimony of people who had viewed Kennedy's body, some of them in Dallas, and some after it had arrived at Bethesda. Photographs of the body, only recently released, also conflicted with verbal reports of the body's appearance.

For example, Lifton showed drawings of how Dallas doctors had described Kennedy's bullet wounds: small holes in the front of the left temple and neck where the bullets had entered, and larger exit holes on the back of the dead president's body.

But drawings and photographs of the Bethesda autopsy showed entirely different wounds: a large trachiotomy-like neck wound and a head wound four times larger than the Dallas doctors had measured. The head wound described by Dallas doctors was 35 square centimeters, while the same one described by Bethesda coroners measured 170 square centimeters.

"A trachiotomy and skull operation had been performed on Kennedy," Lifton said. "But not by anyone in Dallas."

The Dallas description of the wounds, Lifton said, proved that the direction of the bullets had come from the front of the motorcade, and not from a sixth floor window of the Texas Book Depository, where Oswald allegedly made the shots from.

However, the descriptions of the Bethesda autopsy were the ones the investigating body, the Warren Commission, used to determine Oswald had shot the president.

Lifton maintained that sometime between Dallas and Bethesda the body was altered to make it look like the shots had come from behind.

Ride-A-Thon benefits ranch for disabled

By Jeff Brunings
Staff Writer

Horses and riders in this year's Ride-A-Thon will head to the trails of Poly Canyon this Saturday with proceeds from the event going to the B.O.K. Ranch of San Luis Obispo.

The ranch, run on donations from the community, provides therapy for the physically disabled through horseback riding in an authentic ranch setting.

The riders will travel an eight-mile loop beginning at Cal Poly's horse unit and meander through hillside chaparral until returning to campus through Poly Canyon. Student volunteers who know the trails will guide the riders.

"It's going to be a real pretty trail," said Tori Lyon, an animal science major at Cal Poly who has been organizing the event for several months. "We want to make it a fun trail where it doesn't get too dangerous."

Lyon's involvement in Ride-A-Thon satisfies her senior project requirement. Aside from organizing the event, she distributed news releases and flyers and got prizes donated to participants who bring in the most pledge dollars.

Lyon has other expectations she hopes to produce from the undertaking.

"I want to help the B.O.K. Ranch bring their name out to the community and to bring more participation to the ranch program," she said.

Participation in the Ride-A-Thon is a great opportunity for the community to become involved in helping the disabled, said Diana Olsen, an equestrian therapist at the ranch, who is helping Lyon prepare for the event.

Last year's Ride-A-Thon raised about $6,000 in pledged support.

A barbeque will follow the three-hour morning ride.

IT MAY BE UGLY, BUT IT GETS HIM TO SCHOOL — Pete Norton of the campus recycling coalition rides his ugly bike during the UU Ugly Bike Contest held Tuesday as part of Ecology Awareness Week. Norton won a second place in the contest. Ecology Awareness Week is sponsored by Students for Social Responsibility.

Mastercard gives cat a purrfect account

HEMET, Calif. (AP) — A woman whose cat was offered a MasterCard with a $5,000 limit is wanted for questioning about thousands of dollars in purchases using her father-in-law's credit, police said.

Janet Ringgenberg, 36, became a celebrity of sorts in March 1988 when the Credit Card Service Bureau of Springfield, Va., offered to sign up her two-and-a-half year old tomcat, Fustace, for the card if he would buy the company's credit-card protection service.

Ringgenberg said at the time that she had been unable for years to get a credit card, adding, "I think it's a big joke."

"He doesn't even leave home, let alone leave home without it."

town about two weeks ago after Williams was confronted by his father, Lawrence, said Max Beamesderfer, a police detective in this Riverside County city.

"We know where they went," Beamesderfer said Monday. He declined to be more specific.

The couple left behind up to $27,000 in merchandise, including a car, along with a note saying it could be sold to repay debts, according to Beamesderfer.

He said the two allegedly got hold of the credit cards in the father's name by reporting them stolen and requesting replacements with new account numbers on them.

Beamesderfer said he would ask a judge to issue arrest warrants for the pair after he obtains reports from the credit card companies.

CSU Trustees join coalition to get more funds, modify Prop 98

The California State University Board of Trustees recently voted to join a coalition seeking a constitutional amendment that would modify the impact of Proposition 98.

The effect would be to make more funds available to colleges and universities like Cal Poly.

CSU is one of 18 higher education, business and labor groups supporting Project 90, a proposal developed by the California Taxpayers Association.

The coalition decided to seek help from the State Legislature rather than proposing an initiative of its own. Project 90's plan for altering the State Appropriation Limit is reflected in Senate Constitutional Amendment One, which is now before a committee of the State Senate.

Howard West, executive assistant to Cal Poly President Warren Baker, said the coalition thinks it will have more success through the legislative process.

Under the present Gann Limit, state spending is limited to a base year (1978-1979) plus annual adjustments for population, growth, and inflation.

Proposition 98 establishes a minimum level of available state funds for public schools and community colleges within the Gann Limit. It does not provide for four-year colleges or for universities like Cal Poly.

The coalition is proposing a broader plan to alter the State Appropriation Limit, giving more weight to economic growth, supporters say.

"If it were successful, it would provide state administration and legislation with greater flexibility for how funds are allocated for higher education," said West.

"It would also provide an opportunity for increased appropriations rather than reduced appropriations — which we have now — for state universities including Cal Poly," he explained.

Be creative to weather water rationing in SLO

While the discovery of cold fusion caused worldwide scientific brouhaha, here in SLO we have different concerns. Like if it's safe to buy grapes at Lucky. Or if it's safe to walk outdoors without getting sunburned. Or if it's safe to drink water without getting a huge fine slapped on you.

So far the town has responded by saying the sky's falling. That's the funny thing about water — once they're told to start conserving it, all the developers scatter hither and thither with a message of doom. The cry goes up at a typical city council meeting, "Foul! It's not the American way! It's not the Californian way! WE WANT CONDOS! WE WANT CONDOS!"

Though Donald Trump hasn't moved in for some new Nordstrom proposal, the local developers can live with some temporary pain. I was thinking about this the other day as I wetted down the dust on my front porch. Ya know, it's all of us pulling together to get through this drought thing. Let's all pitch in on this conservation deal.

But how should one go about it? I pondered this thought as I moved on to wash out the drains. The city is still not sure how to do it, especially in light of this 'mandatory' fiasco. Asking people to — out of the goodness of their hearts, mind you — conserve water is just not Californian. You might as well take away a man's Mercedes or his tan line. If you want conservation to work, you've got to point a gun at people's heads.

Luckily though, I went through the last drought in 1977. Northern California, where I formerly lived, had barely any water flowing to it in 1977 and was forced to conserve only because those RATS IN SOUTHERN CALI... Ahem. Excuse me. Hard not to get emotional about a bunch of THIEVES... I mean, fellow Californians.

But because I was guided (FORCED) through a previous

By Stewart McKenzie

drought, I have loads of advice on how to forstall this one ...

- All of your roommates, as well as yourself, save shower water for future use. Cost: depends how you reuse it. How can pouring coal-black water make plants ecstatically grow? And we're worried about grapes from Chile.

- Throw a textbook like "The Elements of Argument" or "The Irony of Democracy" into the toilet tank. Cost: Only a couple of bucks, since you won't see that money on the buyback from El Corral.

- Don't wash your car. No, scratch that. Completely impossible.

- Tell churches to hold off on the holy water for a while. Cost: negligible. We'll do a mass christening of babies in the fall.

- Take old tennis ball cans, put a hole in the bottom and stick them in various places in the backyard/garden. Then fill with water. It's the magic of drip irrigation. Cost: You look really cheap for not having some super-duper computerized watering system, but people will think you play a lot of tennis.

With these methods, we'll have enough acre-feet of water to serve millions. But that'll mean we've room once again to expand, triggering another new wave of ranch-style split-level developments with names like Lawnwood Garden Park.

I think I'll stop thinking about this and finish up washing off my roof.

Student housing is affordable in SLO

By George Moylin

"You're either part of the solution or you're part of the problem."

— Eldridge Cleaver

You are part of the problem. Despite what you consider a financial burden, you are much better off than most. I'm talking about affordable housing in and around San Luis Obispo. I hope you can also be part of the solution.

Remember as Henry Ford once said about the Edsel, "Everything is relative." And relatively speaking, you have a good deal. Four or five of you get together, throw in a $200 a month and, presto, you have a nice four-bedroom house in a very decent part of town. Or if you don't like group homes, a couple of you pool resources and have a decent two-bedroom apartment somewhere in the community for $250 a month, $300 a month tops.

Better yet, mommy and daddy, from their abode in Lalaland or the Bay Area, like the school, the community and the climate. They also like, by their standards, the low cost of single-family housing here. Before you can say Century 21, a property is bought up by mommy and daddy, and Billy or Sue or Ted and Alice have a nice home while they are going to Poly. Mommy and Daddy have a nice tax write off and great equity upon your graduation.

How many of you find housing in the community? Your campus housing office tells me there are about 16,000 full-time students, and Cal Poly provides on-campus housing for about 2,800 of you. That means there are some 13,200 of you out there competing on the private market. At four to a house, that means you are occupying 3,300 single-family homes. Or at two to an apartment, that means you are in 6,600 apartments. Neither of those is accurate because the majority of you are in a combination of housing situations. But the point remains the same. With 13,200 of you competing in a market where there are only a total of 16,987 housing units (source: Population Research Unit, California Department of Finance), you have a significant impact on the housing market.

Moreover, and please don't laugh me off the campus, you are a market of resources. I know that some of you are minorities, and some of you have low incomes. But you are bright, attractive, athletic and energetic. You make good employees. Restaurants and grocery stores hire you. You can work 20 or 30 or however many hours a week. You don't have to work 40 hours a week to support a family. Employers like that. They don't have to provide fringe benefits that they must for a 40-hour supporter of a family.

So you have the best of both worlds. At $200 to $250 a month, you have inexpensive rent and you are employable.

By most standards you are also wealthy. Not too many of you drive Corvettes, Porsches or BMWs, but you are wealthy. Remember mommy and daddy back in Lalaland? They are doing pretty well. Nice home, nice car, a few bucks here and there. By national standards Cal Poly's in-state tuition is home while they are going to Po-

dirt cheap, and there are plenty of college loans available.

The bottom line is that this community is in the middle of an affordable housing crisis. There are numerous reasons for the crisis. Obviously by your sheer numbers, you have a marked effect on the housing market and thus the crisis. It is time for the community, including city government, the Housing Authority, local businesses, churches and even Cal Poly to band together to address the issue.

Over the years many faculty members and students have served in the affordable housing fight, making valuable contributions to both the city and Housing Authority. It is now time, however, for the entire Cal Poly family to make a contribution to solving the community's housing crisis.

George Moylin is executive director of the Housing Authority in San Luis Obispo.

Campaign posters don't relate candidates' views

Editor — Recently I have noticed placards and campaign posters all over campus for candidates running for ASI offices. Of what significance is the name of the candidate without knowing anything else about the person? I realize that campaign posters are used in society to get people to know the names of the candidates, but this is an unfair, manipulative type of campaigning that is being overdone here at Poly. It is manipulative because the posters state nothing of what the people stand for, their values or anything else relevant to why a candidate should be voted for.

Instead, a name is put in front of your face wherever you turn so that when you vote, you will vote for the name that you remember. It is unfair because it gets the public to know only the candidate with enough money, time and gall to advertise his or her name. I am not stating that the candidates are running their campaigns wrong. I am just criticizing this particular method of campaigning. Perhaps in the future, campaigns on campus (and hopefully on larger levels) could be limited to a set of standards and rules with a purpose of getting the public to know what all of the candidates stand for instead of those who can simply advertise their names the most.

Wright may have broken House ethics rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Ethics Committee has concluded that Speaker Jim Wright probably violated the chamber's rules by failing to report benefits from a Texas business partner as gifts.

A source familiar with the investigation said late Monday that the committee has found "reason to believe" that Wright violated the gift-reporting rules on benefits given to him and his wife by the business associate in Fort Worth.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, declined to say how many instances of failure to report gifts had been identified by the panel.

But the number could easily be in the dozens, because several benefits Wright received continued over a period of years and would have had to be reported on each year's financial disclosure form. Among the benefits under scrutiny are his virtually free use of a condominium in Texas, an $18,000 salary for his wife, Betty, and use of a 1979 Cadillac.

CBS News reported Monday that the committee had found 30 instances of possible rules violations by Wright.

"We think it's an absurd report," said Mark Johnson, Wright's press secretary. "We have absolutely no information along those lines."

The committee, which resumes deliberations Tuesday in what is expected to be its final week before issuing a report, is engaged in a process not unlike that of a grand jury.

Finding "reason to believe" that rules have been violated would be equivalent to an indictment of Wright. The speaker would then have a chance to defend himself in a disciplinary hearing, the equivalent of a trial.

Wright reported his wife's employment with Fort Worth developer George Mallick on his financial disclosure forms as salary for her work. But the ethics panel's outside counsel, Richard Phelan, argued that the salary amounted to a gift because Mrs. Wright did little work in exchange for it.

Wright, Mallick and their wives jointly formed a small investment company called "Mallightco" and used it to make several investments. Mrs. Wright first drew her salary directly from Mallick's development company and then from the partnership between 1981 and 1984.

Wright made no mention on the disclosure forms of the car or the condominium, which he now contends were simply fringe benefits from Mrs. Wright's employment.

Remaining to be resolved are a number of more serious charges against Wright, including whether Mallick had "direct interest in legislation" before Congress. That would make any gift worth more than $100 improper under House rules.

Also remaining to be decided is whether Wright used his book, "Reflections of a Public Man," as a device to evade limits on outside income. In several instances the speaker made bulk sales of the book to interest groups in lieu of accepting speaking fees.

Honoraria for speeches are limited under the rules, but book royalties are not.

The committee is struggling with the question of whether Wright, in the committee's parlance, "recharacterized" money that was intended as a speaking fee into book income — or whether the book sales constitute an entirely separate and permissible business deal.

If the committee concludes that the allegations have been proven, it can recommend that the full House impose punishment ranging from a reprimand or denial of privileges to expulsion.

If the committee finds the violations to be only "technical," it may recommend no punishment. Wright, in recent weeks, has argued that any violations he may have committed would fall into that category.

U.S. officials praise arrest of drug kingpin

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Opposition politicians and U.S. officials praised Mexican authorities for the capture of a drug czar believed to control more than half of the cocaine shipped through Mexico to the United States.

Authorities seized some of Miguel Angel Felix Gallardo's assets Monday, including a hotel, pharmacy, real-estate company, bank accounts and various properties. Felix Gallardo, 43, was arrested Saturday night in Guadalajara.

No value was placed on the assets confiscated Monday, but Felix Gallardo's net worth is estimated to exceed $500 million, including at least 50 houses and 200 ranches.

Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo, at a news conference Monday, called Felix Gallardo "the No. 1 drug trafficker in Mexico."

He said that others arrested in the weekend raids included three of Felix Gallardo's aides as well as the chief federal anti-drug official and five other ranking police officers in Sinaloa, Felix Gallardo's home state.

"We congratulate the judicial police for the apprehension of the drug czar and we praise the role of the military in Sinaloa, where they detained police involved in drug trafficking," Alberto Noyola, spokesman for the conservative National Action Party, told the government news agency Notimex.

Cesar Yanez, a leader of the leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party, told Notimex: "We hope that this not only affects the circulation of drugs but that it attacks the problem starting with production."

Alvarez noted that President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who took office in January, has vowed to stop drug dealing and corruption.

The raids were the third dramatic example of Salinas' determination. In January he put the corrupt leader of the oil workers' union behind bars and in February a leading stockbroker went to jail.

Ed Heath, head of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in Mexico, told reporters, "The message ... is that President Salinas de Gortari means business."

"To pull this thing off the way it was done is a tribute" to Mexican authorities, he added. "The impact it has on the drug market, we can say, is extremely significant."

Felix Gallardo, thought to head a ring that smuggled up to 4 tons of cocaine a month into the United States, had been sought for years but "obtained protection from diverse authorities," Alvarez said.

Heath said Felix Gallardo "was as important as any major trafficker in South America" and "has been operating almost with impunity in Mexico because of the protection he received."

U.S. authorities believe Felix Gallardo was involved in the 1985 slaying of American drug agent Enrique Camarena Salazar. But Alvarez said Felix Gallardo opposed killing Camarena and that his office had no evidence linking him directly to the killing.

Alvarez added, however, that Felix Gallardo was the "intellectual author" of the organization that killed Camarena.

While Federal judicial police were arresting Felix Gallardo in the western state of Jalisco soldiers detained every police officer on the 80-member force in Culiacan, Felix Gallardo's hometown and the capital of Sinaloa in northwest Mexico.

As well as the differences in body wounds, Lifton said the mode of body transport was very suspicious. Why, Lifton asked, did Kennedy's body leave Dallas wrapped in bed sheets and placed in an expensive brass casket, and arrive at Bethesda in a body bag thrown in a drab pinkish-gray shipping casket? Unless, as he contends, the casket Mrs. Kennedy sat with on the plane was empty.

His intensive study of the shooting and its aftermath had revealed that the only time during which Jacqueline Kennedy left the casket, and the body could have been removed, was during the makeshift inauguration of Lyndon Johnson aboard Air Force One.

He added that the body was probably removed from the brass casket, placed in a body bag and stowed somewhere aboard AF-1 until landing in Washington, D.C., where it was snuck off the jet, altered and rushed to Bethesda before Mrs. Kennedy got there.

Lifton presented this, and a barrage of other findings, to the audience. "It's so obvious, you don't need to be an expert to see something doesn't fit here," he said.

Lifton is disappointed with the media for not paying attention to what he feels is an obvious conspiracy being covered up.

He added that Kennedy had received much criticism from people in his administration for his handling of the Cuban missile crisis, the Bay of Pigs invasion, and his peace talks with Khrushchev, among other events, and that there would have been many motives to devise "a plan to make the vice president president under circumstances which looked accidental."

If a conspiracy had occurred, Lifton said, "it was ingenious in conception, but bungled in execution."

Lifton has presented his findings to all three television networks, 60 Minutes, and 20/20, and he has received mixed feelings about it. He has compiled enough evidence for a second book, which he will publish next year, he said. He compares this event to Watergate, and said if the media paid more attention to it, some action would be taken.

Being a friend

Understanding and identifying bulimia

JULIE'S friends were aware of her problem. They used to talk about it with one another and they even brought it up to Julie a few times. But she would not even consider taking them seriously and would quickly brush their accusations off as "presumptuous" and "going overboard." They were concerned — afraid — yet, they felt as though there was nothing they could do. After a while, Julie's friends gave up trying to approach the topic. When she was around, which was never for long or often anymore, they played along and acted like there was nothing wrong, but gave one another knowing glances.

Julie was never a "perfect" student, but in the past, she had gotten good grades, been a good friend, and stayed active in school clubs and her sorority. But, over the past year, all of this — and other things — changed because Julie became a bulimic.

Julie's roommates, her two closest friends, could not decide what to do. Her symptoms were not obvious; she appeared outwardly healthy, happy and in control of her life ... but they knew that something was wrong. Their bathroom continually smelled of vomit, food was disappearing, Julie could be heard throwing up early in the morning and late at night almost daily, she began to spend excessive amounts of time in her room and made up excuses so she did not have to attend social events or go on visits home.

Her roommates began to worry even more, but Julie as usual, easily put their questions off. They decided to continue to ignore the behavioral changes.

Bulimia or bulimarexia (a combination of bulimia and anorexia) is also known as the "binge-purge syndrome" or cycle where a person eats excessive amounts of food and then purges (vomits). It is a serious eating disorder which is reaching epidemic proportions among college students, according to a pamphlet distributed by the American College Health Association (ACHA).

Julie's friends should not have ignored her problem because with this disorder, sometimes friends are the only ones close enough to a person to know that there is a problem.

Rita Rich, RN and mental health nurse at several bulimia groups, says that 50 percent of the people she sees have eating disorders, she receives at least two calls a week from people with a disorder and that there is a demand for more eating disorder groups.

There are many causes or triggers of bulimia. Rich says sociocultural issues often cause eating disorders.

The pressures to be "thin as a rail" that we are presented with in magazines and everyday life, creates stress and an image that some feel they must obtain. This image of the "perfect" woman is not reality and can not be obtained, said Rich.

Family pressures can also cause eating disorders.

Julie's mother loves to cook, so her family eats large breakfasts and dinners together everyday; but Julie's mother never eats much. She serves out large portions and gives herself a spoonful. During her teenage years, while observing her mother, Julie began to feel like she ate too much. Her father would jokingly say, "Lookin' kinda heavy there, Jul." To Julie it was no joke. She began to diet. Her parents passed off her diets as "phases" and ignored the signs of her compulsive eating. After all, they would say, she's a good kid, just a bit conscious about her weight like all girls her age.

Stress and pressure are key words when assessing bulimics.

"Students experience their college years in a series of transitions, momentous changes, reappraisals of family values ... everything from the initial insecurities and adjustments of the freshman year to the equally stressful anxieties of the senior year," states the ACHA pamphlet.

This stress on a person causes them to eat or binge. The binge is an insane free-for-all, a few minutes when the person eats whatever they desire — which are usually foods high in fats.

The binge leads to the purge, which gives the person an intense feeling of satisfaction. And the purge leads to a feeling of guilt, explained Rich.

"Bulimics know what they are doing, but they can't stop ... the purge is comforting to them," said Rich.

Symptoms of bulimia are seldom evident. A bulimic person is not usually overly thin and often is seemingly well adaptive into society or has a calm appearance. Most bulimics harbor their troubles internally. They have problems with self expression, are less assertive than average and almost always distort reality, according to Rich. A bulimic person may not think themselves fat, but their weight is "never good enough," said Rich. They tend also to distort their belief systems.

"It's all or nothing. They're either healthy or lousy, if they're not getting an A then they're getting an F, if 'I eat one donut then I may as well eat the whole box,' " is the way bulimic persons often think, said Rich.

"Bulimics often don't know how they feel," so it is even more difficult for them to express themselves, said Rich. It is common for them to make statements like 'I'm bored' or 'I'm lonely' rather than 'I am frightened and I don't know where to turn.'

Julie's roommates were "skinny-minnies," according to Julie. They had "toothpick legs," "tiny" waists and "no butt what-so-ever," Julie thought. They had "perfect" bodies — Julie's final observation. Julie's roommates began to realize that she compared herself to them continually. She noticed every detail of their anatomy — and readily pointed out the "flawlessness" of them. What Julie failed to notice was that she was the same size as them — even a little smaller than one roommate.

"(Bulimics) don't realize that you can't compare yourself to someone else," said Rich.

Since Julie's roommates chose to ignore the problem, it got worse. Had they sought information about Julie's problem, maybe they could have helped her.

"The responsibility that a friend has is that of educating themselves. (They should) encourage (the person) to get help. If we continue to deny the problem, it will continue to be a problem," said Rich. "But never try to control the situation by saying 'don't eat that' or 'should you be eating that?'" to a bulimic person, said Rich.

It is imperative that someone trying to help a bulimic person try to talk to them honestly, Rich stated. "Go to (them) with specifics: 'I smell vomit in the bathroom every morning,' 'my food is always missing'," she said.

"Some bulimics want help, they just don't know how to ask for it or can't ... You may get tears, anger, fear, denial ... it (the response) could be anything."

A friend of a bulimic person also cannot "expect changes overnight. It took them (the bulimic) a while to get there," it will take a while to recover, said Rich. "When they start to get better, they fear giving it up."

Rich feels it is not the friends' place to call a person's parents or try to force them to stop unless it is a threatening situation. A friend should provide support and information.

Julie could be a Cal Poly student. Julie could be a parent. Julie could be your best friend. Julie could be you. Whoever Julie is, she needs help. If you know Julie don't ignore the signs; it could save her life.

West warned that a long process lies ahead.

The senate constitutional amendment is now before the Senate Revenue and Taxation Committee, where it got a 4-4 vote on Tuesday according to Ann Maitland, consultant to the committee.

It will be heard again Thursday to allow more input from supporters of Proposition 98, such as the California Teachers Association and Superintendent Bill Honig.

Supporters of Proposition 98 will not allow the proposal out of committee until funding is guaranteed for public schools and community colleges, said Maitland.

If the proposal does get out of committee, it must be approved by two-thirds of both houses of the Legislature in order to win a place on the 1990 ballot.

If the committee rejects the proposed constitutional amendment, the coalition will fall back on the initiative process.

DRESS FOR SUCCESS.

As a Navy officer, pride and professionalism come with the territory.

You also develop the potential that you know you have and gain leadership experience that builds success.

In operations and management, in scientific and technical fields, you work with highly talented men and women committed to being the best.

You'll get a solid starting salary and additional allowances that add even more to your income. Plus, you'll get benefits like free medical and dental care, thirty days' paid vacation each year, and opportunities for postgraduate education.

To qualify, you must be a U.S.

citizen no more than 28 years old, have a BA or BS degree, and pass an aptitude test and physical exam. Get a leadership and management opportunity that makes a big difference in any career. Call Navy Management Programs: 543-1497 or (213) 298-6650.

LTJG Zolman will be testing on April 27 at the Recruiting Station on Foothill Blvd.

Seniors: Sign up for GWR by Friday

The final opportunity before June graduation to meet the Graduation Writing Requirement by passing the Writing Proficiency Examination will be next Saturday.

The WPE is not offered summer quarter and the next testing is scheduled for October.

The spring quarter Writing Proficiency Examination will be Saturday, April 22.

Deadline for sign-ups is this Friday, April 14 at the Cashier's Office. A $15 fee is required.

The Graduation Writing Requirement must be met before bachelor's and master's degrees are conferred. All students who have earned more than 90 units are eligible to take the WPE.

Students who plan to graduate in June and have not yet met the GWR should take this test.

Students who have not met the requirement are permitted to go through graduation ceremonies, but the diploma is withheld until the GWR is fulfilled.

Not everyone is cut out to change the world. After all, it takes education, skills and a spare two years.

Also a willingness to work. Hard.

This year 3,750 Americans will join the Peace Corps to do just that. They'll do things like build roads, plant forests and crops, teach English, develop small businesses, train community health workers, or even coach basketball. However, what they'll be doing isn't half as important as the fact that they'll be changing a little piece of the world ... for the better.

And when they return, these 3,750 Americans will find that experience doing hard work will have another benefit. It's exactly what their next employers are looking for.

So, give the Peace Corps your next two years. And while you're out changing the world, you'll also be making a place in it for yourself.
