Aaron Houston, Cal Poly construction management junior, takes time between classes to study and catch some rays at the same time. One reason his study topic is not ethnic studies is that Cal Poly does not require that course in any undergraduate GE curriculum.

Prof says lack of ethnic studies overlooks reality

By Christine J. Pocan
Staff Writer

Forty-nine percent of the kindergarten through 12th grade students in California are of ethnic origins. By the turn of the century these children will be college-aged.

Currently, six of the 19 CSU campuses require an ethnic studies course in their undergraduate curriculum. Cal Poly is not one of them.

Despite recent furor over the issue in the halls of California's higher education campuses, said a Cal Poly administrator, this campus has no plans in the near future to join them.

"Of all the CSU campuses, this is the whitest," said Alurista, assistant professor of Spanish at Cal Poly and founder of the nation's first Chicano studies program at San Diego State.

"This is not reality. It does not reflect California reality or U.S. reality," he said.

Alurista said he feels Cal Poly fails to educate students about the ethnically diverse world they live in.

"If we are not interested in giving people an education in the real world, then what in the hell are we doing?"

In the CSU system, minorities constitute 24 percent of the student population. CSU campuses at Northridge, Chico, Dominguez Hills, Fullerton, Hayward, and San Francisco all have mandatory ethnic studies courses.

Growing ethnic diversity has prompted three University of California campuses to add ethnic studies into their general education requirements.

Three weeks ago UC Irvine added two requirements to their general education curriculum, one course in multicultural studies and one in international affairs.

Last Tuesday UC Berkeley, which now supports a student body that is half non-anglo, decided on an ethnic studies requirement as a means of promoting "tolerance," according to the Los Angeles Times.

The UC Berkeley Academic Senate voted 227 to 194 to add a course into their curriculum. The requirement of "American Cultures" includes the study of Latin, black, Asian, American Indian, and Euro-American cultures.

Eleven UC Santa Barbara students held a hunger strike in late February to draw attention to growing ethnic diversity and the need to recognize it. The strikers who fasted from February 21 through March 4, asked for an implementation of a two-course ethnic studies program as one of their 24 demands to the administration.

The UCSB faculty legislature voted 31 to 7 last week to require a course in ethnic studies. Yet, the decision will be reconsidered in an all-faculty ballot by mail.

Here at Cal Poly, where minorities make up 21 percent of the student body, two ethnically-oriented courses exist, Sociology 315 (Race Relations) and Sociology 316 (American Minorities), but neither are mandatory or offered every quarter.

Alurista said he feels the classes offered here are not enough.

"The majority of anglo students, given the dearth of chicanos and blacks on this campus, have grown up with stereotypes," he said. "Required courses in ethnic studies would definitely constitute the beginning of a long trek to dispel these stereotypes."

William Rife, interim associate vice president of Academic Programs, said that he has heard nothing of a proposal of a curriculum change at Cal Poly. In his opinion, he said, the answer to the problem of educating students here in ethnic culture will not be found in a textbook.

"The issue of whether or not we should require an ethnic studies course ... (is like) asking if a group of starving people should be offered a course in dietetics," he said. "The core of the issue lies in Poly's need for ethnic representation. If our motto is 'Learn By Doing' then we need an ethnic mix on this campus."

On this campus, the student body is .9 percent American Indian, 1.7 percent black, 8.1 percent Chicano and other hispanic, 8.9 percent Asian, Philipino and Pacific Islanders, and 1.6 percent other minorities not specified.

Ronald Lemos, assistant vice chancellor of Academic Affairs for the CSU, said that in 1985 the CSU Board of Trustees

Poly faculty group says OK to condoms

By Laura Daniels
Staff Writer

The Academic Senate approved the installation of condom dispensing machines on campus Tuesday in a two-phase program proposed by Cal Poly's AIDS Prevention Task Force.

In phase one, condom vending machines will be installed in men's and women's restrooms in or near Mott Gymnasium, the University Union, Kennedy Library, the Computer Science Buildings, the Snack Bar, Vista Grande Restaurant and the Cellar.

In phase two, the task force recommends installing condom machines in male and female restrooms in the residence halls.

The resolution will now go to Cal Poly President Warren J. Baker, who will most likely make a final decision this quarter.

The resolution came under heavy fire during the reading of the proposal. Agricultural management professor Steve McGary presented an unsuccessful counter-resolution suggesting further study on the social and economic costs of condom vending machines while educating the university population on safe sex practices and where condoms are presently sold.

By asking for a show of hands, McGary demonstrated how only a handful of the senators realized condoms are sold in the Campus Store. This was a key point in the counter-resolution, showing a lack of education on the part of Cal Poly in the current availability of condoms.

But Dr. James Nash, chairman of the AIDS Prevention Task Force, said he has gone to look for condoms at the Campus Store and has been unable to locate them. "I even asked the manager once where they kept them (condoms), and I still couldn't find them."

Nash attributed this to either irregular packaging or hiding the condoms so effectively a person looking for them could not find them.

McGary said the proposed installation spots on campus are open fewer hours than the Campus Store, which is open from 6:45 a.m. to 10 p.m. everyday.

McGary is also concerned about the social and economic costs of installing the machines.

"I'm worried about the image portrayed to the public," he said. He also wonders what visitors to Poly Royal next year might think.

McGary said he is concerned about youths arriving on campus

2001: Two schools may be facing tighter budgets, fewer donations

By Kimberly Patraw
Staff Writer

This is part two in a three-part series looking at the future of Cal Poly.

Two of Cal Poly's seven schools are facing increasing demands and restricted budgets and resources, causing concern for the future quality of the programs and the ability to meet the needs of students.

The deans of the School of Liberal Arts and the School of Architecture and Environmental Design said the schools may not be fully prepared for the influx of expected students.

The Interim Dean of the School of Liberal Arts, Glenn Irvin, said because of the construction of a new CSU campus in San Diego, the state budget is very tight right now.

The Dean of the School of Architecture and Environmental Design, G. Day Ding, said his school must concentrate on offering the requirements. Although there are more courses he would like to offer, the resources do not exist.

Ding said his school receives fewer donations from industry than the Schools of Engineering and Business mostly because those two industries contain larger, richer companies. Architecture and Environmental Design does get forms of support from companies and alumni, but the financial contributions are much more modest, Ding said.

Money that does come to Ding's school is channeled into teacher programs such as field trips for classes and support for faculty.

Ding guessed that the average allotment of money for scholarly pursuits to each faculty member in the CSU system is $75 per year.

The School of Liberal Arts is also less endowed than other programs on campus. Yet, it supports most of the General Education and Breadth classes, for which there is more demand each year.

Interim Dean Irvin said California has "serious problems looming" because there will be an increase in the demand for a college education with a decreasing budget and increasing faculty retirement.

Irvin said in the next eight to 10 years, approximately 6,000 CSU faculty members will retire. He said Cal Poly must be competitive with industry and other universities in trying to recruit new professors but unfortunately, enrollment in graduate schools is low. This factor, coupled with low pay and little money for professional development makes Cal Poly less able to compete. Irvin also pointed out new faculty cannot afford the housing market in San Luis Obispo.

The concern for students getting their General Education and Breadth classes is also a problem.

"We're offering every GE&B class we can," said Irvin. "I don't know what else we can do."

Even simple solutions can have important ramifications. For example, using the theatre for classes allows fewer faculty to teach more students.

However, using it is not only against Cal Poly's attempt to keep classes small, but the school also loses money. The school is not paid for a class

Second Opinion

UC is only for wealthy

California's goal has been a democratic one of making higher education available to one and all. The reality, however, reveals a system that favors the rich and the few. The list of the feeder high schools that send more than 100 students each to the University of California reads like a social register. It includes Beverly Hills, Palos Verdes, Santa Monica, Rolling Hills, Palisades and, in the San Fernando Valley, Granada Hills, Birmingham and Taft. With the exception of San Francisco's Lowell and University high schools, the UC feeders are in predominantly, if not exclusively, white, affluent enclaves. Not surprisingly, the mean family income for freshmen at UC Berkeley last fall was nearly $60,000, well above the national average.

Statewide, the 106 community colleges in California sent a total of 189 blacks and 485 Latinos to the eight UC campuses, an average of six minority students from each college. Yet approximately 80 percent of underrepresented minorities who enter college in the state begin their studies in a community college.

While it is surely important to maintain high standards, the goal of a tax-based state educational system should be the development of talents and skills from all socioeconomic groups. Public education by its very nature must reflect the entire population that supports it. What California has, instead, is a perfectly correlated system of family income to educational benefits — that is, the wealthiest are rewarded with access to the University of California; middle-income students end up at the California State University; low-income students begin and end their higher education at community colleges.

Shouldn't a serious student at an inner-city school who graduates in the top 10 percent of his or her class have the same access to the benefits of California's post-secondary system as his or her counterpart in an exclusive private or magnet public school? If not, we should recognize that we are rewarding accidents of birth and that our current system of admissions to the University of California is, in truth, determined by ZIP code.

Commentary

Former SB chancellor still getting pay

What's $6,800 times 10: $68,000 so far for doing nothing.

Robert Huttenback, former chancellor of the University of California at Santa Barbara, is still receiving his $81,700-a-year salary as a professor from the UC system.

What's wrong with that, you ask?

Huttenback, who was given a professor of history job as a perk when he was chancellor, is now making history — not teaching it. His case is an example of what some call the justice of the rich.

Ten months ago, Huttenback and his wife Freda were convicted of embezzlement and tax evasion. He resigned as chancellor and was suspended with pay from teaching.

The Huttenbacks were accused of using $250,000 in university funds between 1983 and 1986 to renovate their home. Huttenback also failed to declare any expenditures as income on his state tax return.

In other words, Huttenback, a convicted felon, is out playing tennis while the taxpayers pay him $81,700 a year for betraying the public trust.

But there are two kinds of justice: that for the rich and that for the poor.

If you have money and steal, you are treated more leniently than if you don't have money and steal.

It's a simple matter of your status in society.

At Huttenback's trial, Santa Barbara County Deputy District Attorney Darryl Perlin recommended that the former chancellor and his wife be sentenced to more than four years in prison.

The judge, however, didn't think so.

He sentenced Huttenback to five years probation, a total of $70,000 in fines ($60,000 for him and $10,000 for Freda) and 1,000 hours of community service.

By Steve Harmon

And now we see the other side of "justice."

Holger Chris Ferdinandson, a UCSB facilities manager who supervised the renovations at the Huttenback home, was sentenced last year to four years and four months in prison for embezzlement of $250,000 from the university.

He's in state prison.

I guess he didn't have the clout of being chancellor. Granted, Ferdinandson did have a few prior convictions, but if he were rich, would he even have those?

And you know Ferdinandson is not getting $81,000 a year. He's paying for his crime, not getting paid for it.

Margaret Weeks, UCSB director of public information, said Huttenback receives his salary because he is a tenured professor. She said a faculty review committee will meet and decide whether or not to demote or dismiss or do anything at all with Huttenback.

That committee has made no public announcement of any decision or when and if there will be one.

The deputy district attorney expressed his disbelief at the lenient sentence the Huttenbacks received.

"They were not punished for what they did," Perlin said. "If you or I took $100 from our employer, we'd be history, we'd be gone, let alone $250,000."

Perlin is even more amazed at the continued salary.

"The victim (UCSB) is still paying him," Perlin said.

He said the university "wanted to sweep it (the Huttenback affair) under the rug. They tried to whitewash this."

America, where the hell are you?

Letters to the Editor

Abortion law repeal would mean 'slavery' of women

Editor — When I read about Eve and her experience with an unwanted pregnancy ("Unwanted pregnancies: women's stories," May 2), I wanted to cry. Each tear would be for every American woman who would have to endure what Eve did. If the Supreme Court repeals Roe vs. Wade, women will be forced to go back to coat hangers, back alley abortionists, crochet needles or any of the other "strange woman-held secrets." Could a country that prides itself in its freedom and equality regress and take these liberties away from women? Anti-abortionists want to do just that. They want to take back what has already been given, the right to control our own bodies. No matter what these people think, abortions will continue, legal or not. The point is that each person controls her/his own body and makes her/his own decisions on what to do with it. There is a name for the act of controlling another person's body: slavery.

African visitor says racism seems 'alive and well' in Cal Poly clubs

Editor — Visiting your beautiful campus during Poly Royal, I was saddened to see that racism is alive and well on the campus. This impression is due to the large number of racially-oriented clubs I saw. The only way to end racism is to stop making it such a factor, i.e., to de-emphasize it. If a White Engineering Students Club, for instance, was formed on campus, what would the reaction be? I rest my case.

"A lot of restaurant owners in town are miffed because, under Prop. 65, they have to post a notice reading "Warning: Chemicals known to the state of California to cause cancer, or birth defects, or other reproductive harm may be present in foods or beverages served here." Apparently there's nothing in the proposition that says you can't add a few words to that somber sentence, so the restaurateurs have appended this: "The management therefore discourages all reproductive behavior while eating or drinking on these premises."

SLO 'coffee klatch' turns romance into serious business

By Lynne Hasselman
Staff Writer

Their heroes have names like Thorn, Ridge, or Heath. They are strong, rugged and handsome and they always get the beautiful girl.

Romance novels have always been a big draw for the publishing companies, but in the past decade, romance novels have catapulted into a billion dollar industry. For one group of San Luis Obispo County romance writers trying to break into the market, romance is serious business.

The Central Coast Chapter of Romance Writers of America began in a living room where a group of several women gathered to discuss and critique each other's manuscripts. Today, the "coffee klatch" has grown to 14 members, has its own board of directors and is officially recognized by Romance Writers of America.

Vice President Jenny Perello has been writing romance novels for several years.

"I started by writing children's stories for my kids and I dabbled in poetry," she said. "I read a lot of romance novels and began to think if they can do it, so can I."

Perello has completed one manuscript that she is trying to get published and is partway through a second one.

"I had almost finished my first manuscript when I heard about the Romance Writers of America," she said. "When I began to find out more about romance writing and sent away for the publisher's guidelines on what they required, I realized that I was doing everything wrong."

Fellow member Helen Ann Thomas of Orcutt was the editor of her college paper and had planned to go into journalism.

"I started as a freelance writer and had several of my pieces published when I realized I didn't like to interview people," she said. "I tried writing television scripts, but I didn't have a knack for sitcoms. I came to California and began taking creative writing courses at UCLA and met one of the top romance agents who told me about an RWA conference. After I went, I decided that I could write a romance novel too."

It is a lengthy process from a novel's conception to its publication. When a manuscript is completed, a query letter is sent off to the publisher. If a publisher is interested in the book, they will ask for the first three chapters and if they are still interested, they will send for the whole manuscript.

"The process takes a long time," said Perello. "I am thinking of hiring an agent to be a liaison between me and the publisher. Some people say that if you are agented, the publisher will be more likely to take a look at your manuscript."

She adds that even the most successful and prolific writers have had their manuscripts rejected several times.

"The ones who make it big are the persistent ones," Perello said.

The romance novel has changed with the times, and today's romances are much different than the romances of yesterday.

"There are a lot of trends in romance," Perello said. "Many things are considered passe today. The emphasis is on realism and the types of heroes have changed. Each publisher has different style and length guidelines, and they vary in their sensuousness."

Romance can be a lucrative business. The two top publishers of romance, Harlequin and Silhouette, each publish about fifty romances a month, not including all the historical romances they release. If a novel is accepted for publication, the publisher will pay anywhere from $3,000 to $5,000 in advance for the first book, and the author receives a percentage of the book's royalties.

"There is good money to be found in writing romances if you are a prolific writer," said Perello. "The royalties add up when you consider the top publishers publish worldwide."

For those future Janet Daileys or Danielle Steeles, both Perello and Thomas agree that it takes commitment and dedication to write a romance.

"Writing a romance novel is a tricky business," said Thomas. "I am an erratic writer, sometimes writing eight hours a day and sometimes not at all. Good writers must discipline themselves to write everyday."

Lavish spread is no shed

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — A 92-year-old Fresno woman who was evicted from a storage shed she had lived in since renting her house more than three years ago has found "a lovely place" to live in the Sierra foothills.

The city last month ordered Gertrude Jason to move out of the shed and have illegal wiring and plumbing torn out.

So, she found an apartment in a new retirement home in Oakhurst, the Sierra town where she planned to move three years ago when she fell and broke both kneecaps. She already had rented out her Fresno home then, so she moved into the shed in back to recuperate and stayed there until the city forced her out.

Ms. Jason said she's delighted with her new home.

She said she plans to live there the rest of her life.

City building inspector Lee McCoy called her move "a good ending because no one got hurt."

Salcido's sheriff under fire

Accusations of investigation violations arise

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — Sheriff Dick Michaelson is being criticized by some members of his staff over his handling of the Ramon Salcido case, including charges he may have aided the suspected mass killer's defense, according to a published report.

The accusations are made in a letter drafted and approved by about 80 percent of the Sonoma County Sheriff's Department's approximate 16-member management staff and a small number of deputies, the Santa Rosa Press Democrat reported in Tuesday's editions. The letter is scheduled to be considered by the executive board of the Sonoma County Sheriff's Employees Association on May 18.

Among other things, the letter said Michaelson's public statements contributed to hysteria in the community, violated basic investigatory practices and may have aided the defense by lending credence to the proposition that Salcido is insane.

The letter said "a series of behaviors" by the sheriff were "inappropriate, irresponsible and unprofessional."

The letter attacked Michaelson's announcement at a news conference that two of the victims, both Salcido's sisters-in-law, had been sexually assaulted.

"Other than some vague

—Sonoma County Sheriff's Department

physical circumstances at the crime scene, there existed no proof" of sexual assault, the letter charged.

The letter says that Michaelson's announcement violated "rudimentary police investigative practices" by releasing information that only the killer was likely to know.

Further comments during press conferences by Michaelson that the suspected slayer must have been "insane" and "psychotic" caused resentment among department members.

"He's helping build their defense," one furious law official told the Press Democrat.

The official's opinion is reflected in the draft letter.

"The term(s) psychotic and insane have specific psychiatric and legal meanings. Sheriff Michaelson is not a psychologist or psychiatrist and is not in any position to offer an authoritative opinion as to the psychological state of suspects."

Salcido, 28, is charged with seven counts of murder and three counts of attempted murder.

The victims included his wife, Angela, two of his daughters, Sophia, 4, and Teresa, 1, his mother-in-law, Marian Richards, 47, and her two daughters, Ruth2, and Marie 8, and Tracy Toovey, who worked with Salcido at a winery. He allegedly slashed the throat of another of his daughters, Carmina, 3, who survived.

Police had royally busy weekend

By Mike McMillan
Staff Writer

Law enforcement officials both on- and off-campus had their hands full over the Poly Royal weekend.

"This was the busiest Poly Royal ever for the San Luis Obispo Police Department," said Stephen Seybold, crime prevention coordinator.

Police responded to 106 noise complaints, twice as many as last year. Only six noise citations were issued, however.

"It was difficult to identify who owned the houses where parties were occurring," said Seybold. Parties all over town had police moving quickly from call to call.

Vehicular crime is also typical to Poly Royal, and this year was no exception. Four cars were burglarized with stereo equipment and accessories reported stolen. Several more cars were vandalized; their paint was gouged and windows were broken. Seybold said BB guns were responsible for much of the damage. Ten bicycles, a motorcycle and a moped were also reported stolen.

Alcohol-related arrests were fewer for this year's Poly Royal than last year. Six people were arrested for driving under the influence. This is one-third the number of DUI arrests made last year. In addition, 30 minors were cited for possession of alcohol.

Cal Poly Public Safety made two arrests during this year's festivities. A 29-year-old woman was arrested Friday for being drunk in public. She was not a Poly student. Twenty-one-year-old Jay Dufour was arrested Sunday for assault with the intent to do great bodily harm after he allegedly pushed his girlfriend down a dorm stairwell. She sustained minor injuries. Neither Dufour nor his girlfriend are Cal Poly students.

Public Safety officers responded to reports of a large fight behind the Sierra Madre dorms last Saturday. According to Investigator Wayne Carmack, about 30 to 40 people dispersed by the time officers arrived and no arrests were made.

An inter-agency meeting between city and campus officials will take place later this month. Seybold said this year's Poly Royal crime problems will be evaluated and measures for next year's crime prevention will be discussed.

"Poly Royal should be fun, but the idea is to not let things get out of hand."

held in the theatre because it is conducted in a facility not designated for teaching.

Cal Poly President Warren J. Baker said he expects Cal Poly to grow 15 to 25 percent by the turn of the century. He said there will be a significant increase in demand over the next 15 to 20 years and Cal Poly will have to respond to it and this will result in an increase the demand for GE&B classes. Baker does not foresee a decrease in the number of GE&B classes required. He said most people disagree with reducing the requirements.

The School of Liberal Arts is getting seven new professors next year. Six are in English and one is in history. Also, the theatre and dance department is seeking another professor. Irvin was pleased that they were able to recruit more underrepresented faculty, despite the competition for these groups. Of the seven new hires, two are Hispanic females, one an Hispanic male, and two white females.

Impaction, growth limits and budget restrictions limit the School of Architecture and Environmental Design. Dean Ding said he believes some areas require growth. He pointed out that a small department cannot cover a discipline well.

For example, construction management is a small department that Ding would like to see stated its mission "to prepare students for an international multicultural society."

Not all CSU campuses institutionalize a required ethnic studies course into their programs because of different opinions on how this international awareness should be brought about, he said.

"CSU has really provided leadership in this program," Lemos said. "Berkeley does things and gets a lot of headlines about something we have been doing for a long time."

Alex Go, president of the Chinese Students Association said, "I don't think that Cal Poly would respond too well to a required course. If a student is made to take a course he won't get as much out of it as if he had chosen to take it."

Alurista stressed the importance of institutionalizing ethnic studies into the general education requirements.

"We must have this in order to move toward the future and keep in pace with concrete reality in the state of California."

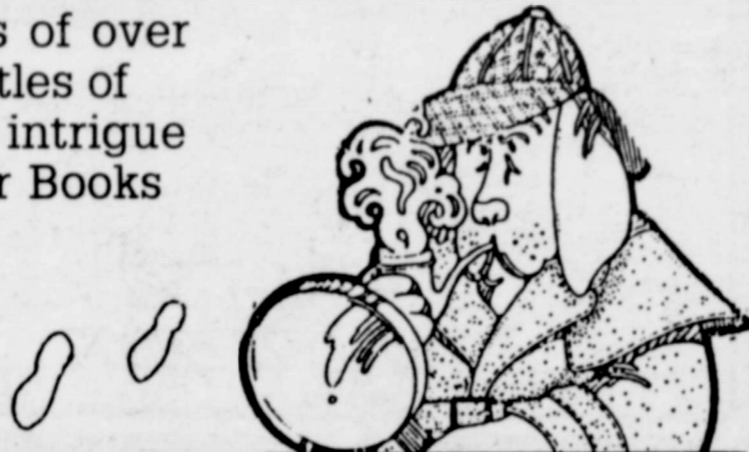

grow.

Baker said in the future, the schools will need to recognize where opportunities for growth are in programs like architecture and applied art and design. He said programs like these are not readily available in California and that makes growth even more important.

He believes any growth will have to go slowly and carefully because the school "needs to keep pace with the community and not become a significant burden."

Arizona tax plan raises concerns

Deukmejian says plan is unfair to some Californians

PHOENIX (AP) — California Gov. George Deukmejian has taken a swipe at a key element of Gov. Rose Mofford's $255 million tax plan, warning that it raises "serious concerns" for Californians.

Deukmejian wrote to Mofford, urging her to reconsider the tax plan, in which she proposed to make up a deficit some Republicans estimate at more than $300 million under her $3.26 billion spending plan.

The centerpiece of Mofford's plan is a minimum school tax, much of which would be paid by the owners of the Palo Verde nuclear plant, including utilities in California, Texas and New Mexico.

The proposed tax would raise an estimated $125 million, $94.2 million of which would come from the owners of Palo Verde.

Deukmejian said the plan would place an "inequitable" tax burden of $26 million on customers of the California utilities.

"If adopted, these proposals would jeopardize needed utility investment to the direct disadvantage of ratepayers of both states," Deukmejian, a Republican, said in the April 19 letter.

Mofford said Tuesday that she believed Deukmejian's letter is a "little strong," but said she understands his concerns.

If confronted with the same issue, Mofford said she "would write this sort of thing, too, to protect the interests of my state," she said.

Senate minority leader Alan Stephens immediately blamed the Arizona Public Service Co., Palo Verde's principal owner.

"APS is going out and instituting a campaign against the proposal and trying to incite fear in other states," the Phoenix democrat said.

Martin Shultz, an APS public affairs official, denied Stephens' claim, saying he had not seen the letter until Tuesday.

A man and his camera

University Art Gallery visitors will soon have the opportunity to see the often startling realities of life as seen through the lens of photographer Bruce Davidson.

Opening Friday and showing through June 4, 36 of Davidson's photographs will be exhibited. The works span Davidson's 40-year career.

"All of my photographs are my children ... once they're born they stand on their own," Davidson explained.

About half of the photographs come from his latest book, "Subway," a group of color pictures Davidson took on the New York subways.

"The subway is a great equalizer," said Davidson. "Once you step inside, it doesn't matter whether you are rich or poor."

Davidson spent two years travelling on the dirty, graffiti-strewn subways taking pictures of a wide range of humanity. He was mugged once and had a camera stolen but that did not stop him from completing the project.

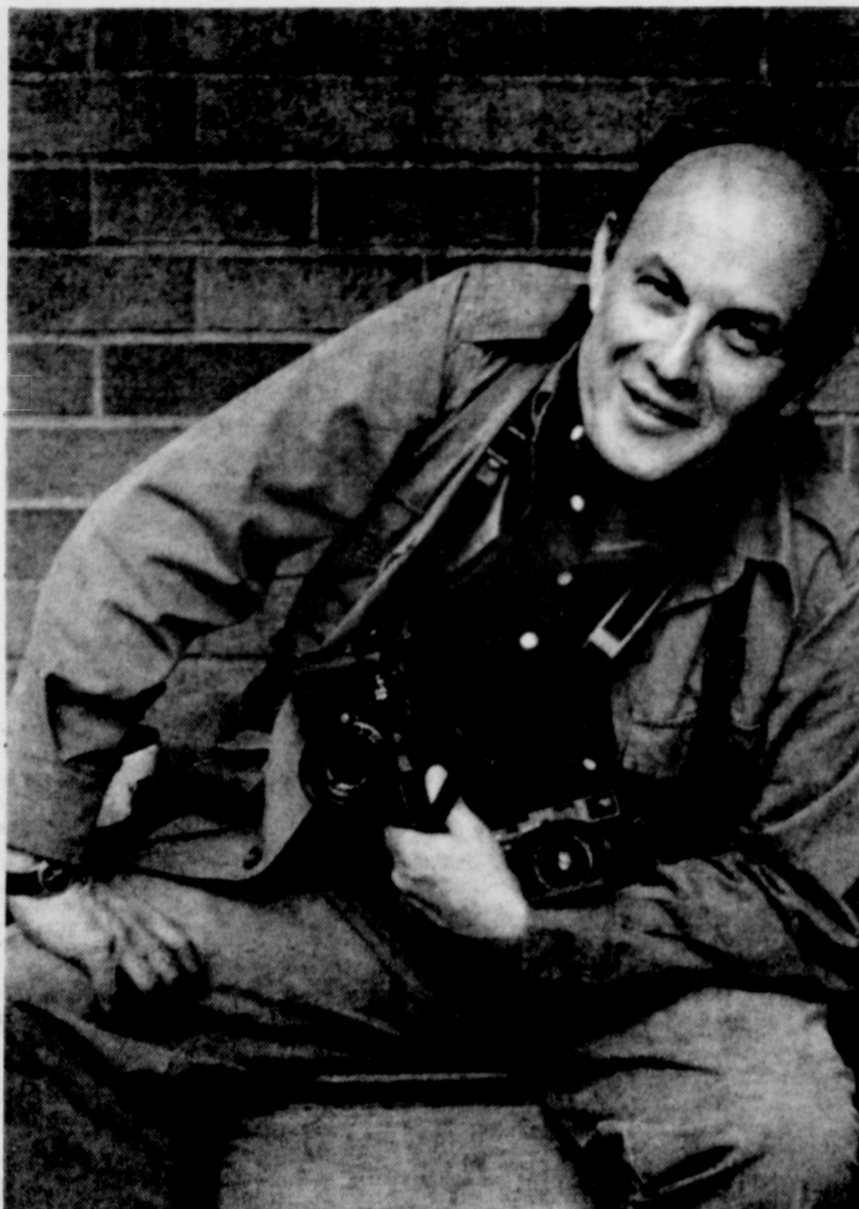

In the "Subway" text, he compares the often dark and somber mood of the scenes disturbed by the light of his flash to photographs of deep sea fishing, where things were exposed to light for the first time.

Davidson prefers taking pictures of people to landscapes because, "I have a closeness to people, I feel people," he said.

The other half of the exhibit consists of black and white pictures. Most are from the book "Bruce Davidson Photographs" a collection of 20-years' work that traces his artistic development from boyhood to maturity. The subject matter ranges from New York slums to Marilyn Monroe.

There are examples of series Davidson has done on street gangs in the 1960s, a coal mining town in Wales, an elderly woman in Paris, and a dwarf in the circus, among others.

Davidson explained how he captured the black and white shot of a horse laying down in a field. "I climbed over a stone wall and walked very slowly over to the horse until I felt a tension between my soul and his." Immediately after the picture was taken the horse moved on.

It's not just a horse, Davidson said, "it's the idea of the horse, it's spiritual and mystical."

Photographs from Davidson's book "East 100th Street" are included in the black and white pieces. Davidson spent two years (1966-68) photographing one block of a New York City slum. He believes the large amount of time he spent with the East 100th project and all of his other works differentiates him from other photographers.

Davidson is also a filmmaker — he has made two documentaries and one fiction film. His film "Osaac Singer's Nightmare and Mrs. Pupko's Beard" won first prize in fiction at the American Film Festival. The documentary "Living Off the Land" was based on a photograph Davidson took of a muskrat trapper and his family. The work was shown on CBS and received the Critics Award from the American Film Festival.

Davidson predicts more films in his future but prefers photography.

"I can just go to the drugstore and buy a roll of film and begin shooting." With films Davidson said, "there are so many steps till you actually get behind the camera."

Davidson values his private, quiet time and explained how it inspires him — "I build up a certain potential, and then I find myself photographing."

When asked what his personal favorite picture was Davidson replied, "My favorite one is the one I'm about to take."

Bruce Davidson will speak and show slides of his work Friday at 7 p.m. in Architecture Room 105, followed by a reception at the University Art Gallery, located on the first floor of the Dexter Building.

Auction to benefit Cal Poly Arts

Cal Poly staff and members of the community are banding together to raise money through Cal Poly Arts' second annual Art$alute, a benefit for creative arts programs that are held on campus.

The May 12 gala, which will include dinner, both a live and silent auction, and dancing to "The Diamonds," is similar to one held last year that netted $17,500.

"The vast majority of the money goes to underwrite arts programs that go on on campus," said Ron Regier, director of Cal Poly Arts. "That makes those performances available to students at reasonable prices."

WriterSpeak, a creative writing series funded by Cal Poly Arts, brings short story writers, novelists and poets to read their works on campus. As part of that series, William Stafford, poet and winner of the National Book Award, will be on campus May 16 at the Sandwich Plant at no charge to students and members of the community.

Additionally, Cal Poly Arts funds Special Arts Projects, a grant program for full-time students, faculty and staff. This year two art and design students received money to design and construct a structure for the Dexter building plaza.

During the 1988-89 school year, Cal Poly Arts has also donated $3,500 to the University Union Galerie, which is run by ASI, and an equal amount to the art and design department's University Art Gallery in the Dexter Building.

The gala is Cal Poly Arts' main fundraiser for next year's programs that are scheduled to include a Cajun music performance and a presentation of native dances from South Africa, both to be sponsored in conjunction with ASI Fine Arts.

Some of the more than 40 items listed for bidding in the Art$alute auctions are the chance to name a street in San Luis Obispo, a gold pendant, a fully furnished doll house, 12 bottles of Chardonnay, a Mid-State Fair package, ballroom dance lessons, a $500 shopping spree and a trip to Disney World/Epcot/Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park, to name a few.

Steve Thayer, Art$alute ticket sales committee co-chairman, said about two-thirds of the ticket revenues will pay for the cost of the evening. The remaining one-third of ticket sales and the money raised from both the live and silent auctions will go toward creative arts programming.

"We haven't had to promote this very much at all," he said. "This has pretty much sold out on its own."

About 50 tickets remain of the 400 offered at a cost of $60 per person. Those scheduled to be in attendance include: Cal Poly Vice President Malcolm Wilson, City Administrator John Dunn, San Luis Obispo Police Chief James Gardiner, and District Attorney Barry LaBarbera and his wife Jeanne, the UU Galerie director.

"It's a real mix of people," said Art$alute general co-chairwoman Maggie Cox. "It's a lot of community leaders."

Director Regier said that 95 percent of the people serving on the committees are community members, and Cal Poly Arts has found people to be very cooperative with donating items for the auctions.

"Cal Poly Arts and Art$alute couldn't be possible at all without community involvement," he said. "The fundraiser is common ground upon which the interest of the university and the interest of the community come together."

He added that the committee members have focused on making the event enjoyable and kept money secondary. "We want people to come because it's fun, it's enjoyable," he said, in addition to the fact that it is "also a good cause."

The entertainment for the gala will be provided by "The Diamonds," a group that performs '50s music and made famous the song "Why Do Fools Fall in Love?"

Thayer said he thinks the gala has benefits which go beyond the financial ones — it brings community members onto the campus and involves them in what is going on at Cal Poly.

"The more you connect community people in any way, shape or form with the university, the more that the students benefit by having those close community ties," he said.

And Cox agrees.

"I think sometimes the campus and the community can move in different circles," she said, "and I think this is a really terrific time they intersect."

'Roger Rabbit' vet designs set for play

Puppeteer also creates costumes

By Julie Schmidt

For the past three years, she has been the animation behind the Saturday morning cartoon Animal Crack-Ups as "Reggie the Hedgehog." She also spent three months as the hands of Howard for the movie Howard the Duck, in addition to working on the animation for Who Framed Roger Rabbit.

Cal Poly has acquired the world class puppeteer, Lisa Aimee Sturz, to design the set, costumes and makeup for next weekend's world premiere of "Pirandello's Wife."

The Cal Poly theater and dance department hired Sturz as a guest faculty member for spring quarter, and in addition to her work on "Pirandello's Wife," she is teaching the Intro to Theatre class and the StageCraft class.

"Disney hired me as a sculptor, not necessarily to make puppets, but certainly if you can sculpt puppet heads," she said, "you can sculpt other things."

"Other things" include sets for the Cal Poly play, which takes place in an insane asylum in Rome. In the play, Antonietta Pirandello is 88, confined to the asylum and writing a short play about her life. A rather inept nun has decided to stage the play with the inmates assuming various roles. Reality and illusion are often confused.

"In puppetry, you always design your own sets and costumes," Sturz said. "The only change between that and theater is that it's on a larger scale."

Sturz explained how her puppetry background helps.

"It comes into play especially for the masks and sculpted details (on the set of 'Pirandello's Wife')," she said.

Sturz began designing the sets and costumes as soon as she got the job at Cal Poly in late February. With assistants, she began to put together the set at the beginning of this quarter.

"Professionally, I do a lot of work for other people," she said. "Live theater is different — it's all coming from you."

Sturz is happy to have the chance to try teaching on top of her work on the play.

"I hadn't really thought about doing this teaching, but it seemed attractive to me because it's only for one quarter," Sturz said. "I'm not ready for a 10-year commitment, but I wanted to take the chance to try it."

Sturz is no stranger to San Luis Obispo. She first came here in the early 1980s when a national puppet conference was held in San Luis Obispo. "I fell in love with the place. I knew Al (Schnupp, the play's director) from UCLA and I was so happy that he moved here so I could bring my bike up."

"But I've been so busy since I've been here, I haven't had time to really appreciate it (bike riding)."

Sturz said the teaching aspect was a definite change for her. "In the beginning, since I hadn't taught before, it was taking me 15 hours just to get ready for my lecture," Sturz said.

"It's finally getting to the point where I feel relaxed. I met a lot of blank stares at first, saying, 'Why do I have to take this class? I'm an engineering major,'" Sturz said.

Sturz said she has been involved in theater ever since she can remember. After experiencing acting and designing, she decided to concentrate on puppetry as "it has everything, acting, designing, choreographing and directing."

She came to California from

K.M. CANNON/Mustang Daily

her hometown in New Jersey to get her master of fine arts in Theatre Arts with an emphasis on puppetry from UCLA. "There were only three places in the country that you could go to do graduate work in puppetry," she said. Sturz had her choice between UCLA, Hawaii and the University of Connecticut. Today only the program in Connecticut remains an independent program apart from the campus. "There's not enough students and it's expensive to do," Sturz explains.

Sturz specializes in consulting entertainment centers on use of puppets, especially with new technologies like telemetry.

Telemetry is the measured movement with robots. Puppetry comes into play as models for the robots. "A robot would imitate my movements as I walked on a treadmill," Sturz said.

Sturz said there is a definite need for puppetry in the entertainment field. "I really see a need for puppetry in the film industry because often the people that build the technical aspects will wind up operating it. They have no theater background so they don't know the importance of timing and drama."

"I'm not an engineer, but I can tell you if it's going to be too heavy or that it is not responsive enough," Sturz said.

Sturz has worked for Walt Disney Imagineering, NBC studios, and for numerous films and television projects. She also spent a year in Jordan as the Director of the Haya Puppet Theatre run under the auspices of King Hussein.

She presently has her own corporation, Red Herring Inc., in which she consults Disney and other companies in puppetry.

Sturz hopes she can return to San Luis Obispo to stay some day. "It's definitely making me think about my priorities. If I get to the point where I really want to have kids and settle down or something when my career isn't top burner, it would really be a great place to live."

State water resources chief says mid-valley needs irrigation canal

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — The Mid-Valley Canal must be built "in some form" to provide the San Joaquin Valley's east side more irrigation water, state water resources chief David Kennedy said Wednesday.

Kennedy, in Fresno for a conference on agriculture, noted that "it is frustrating down here" to have Sierra snow runoffs running 35-50 percent of normal while the Sacramento River system can provide full water deliveries because of heavy Northern California rains.

May snow surveys had just been released indicating the three-year drought got worse in the San Joaquin Valley during April despite one snowstorm in the Sierra.

Kennedy said one benefit of the long-discussed Mid-Valley Canal would be the ability to use excess water in wetter than normal years to recharge the underground supply that drops rapidly during drought periods such as the valley is experiencing now.

Kennedy cited other projects designed to move water from the Sacramento River system during wet times to the valley for use in dry times. These included increased pumping capacity in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta, a new reservoir on the valley's west side and an underground water bank in Kern County, he added.

"It is fair to say that we're not through with development of the water supply in California," Kennedy said.

"We have enough water in this state to meet everyone's needs for the foreseeable future. We have to develop it, manage it and use it wisely," he added.

Kennedy said during a press conference that "projects put on the shelf tend to come back during drought periods." He cited enlargements of Don Pedro Reservoir east of Modesto and Hogan Reservoir east of Stockton.

"One of the lessons of California water is that nothing is ever really over, really finished," Kennedy said.

And he felt farmers and water officials can learn to work with environmental groups without continual rancor.

"I don't think there has to be a contest all of the time," Kennedy said. "I think there is enough water to meet everybody's needs if everyone sits down and works things out."

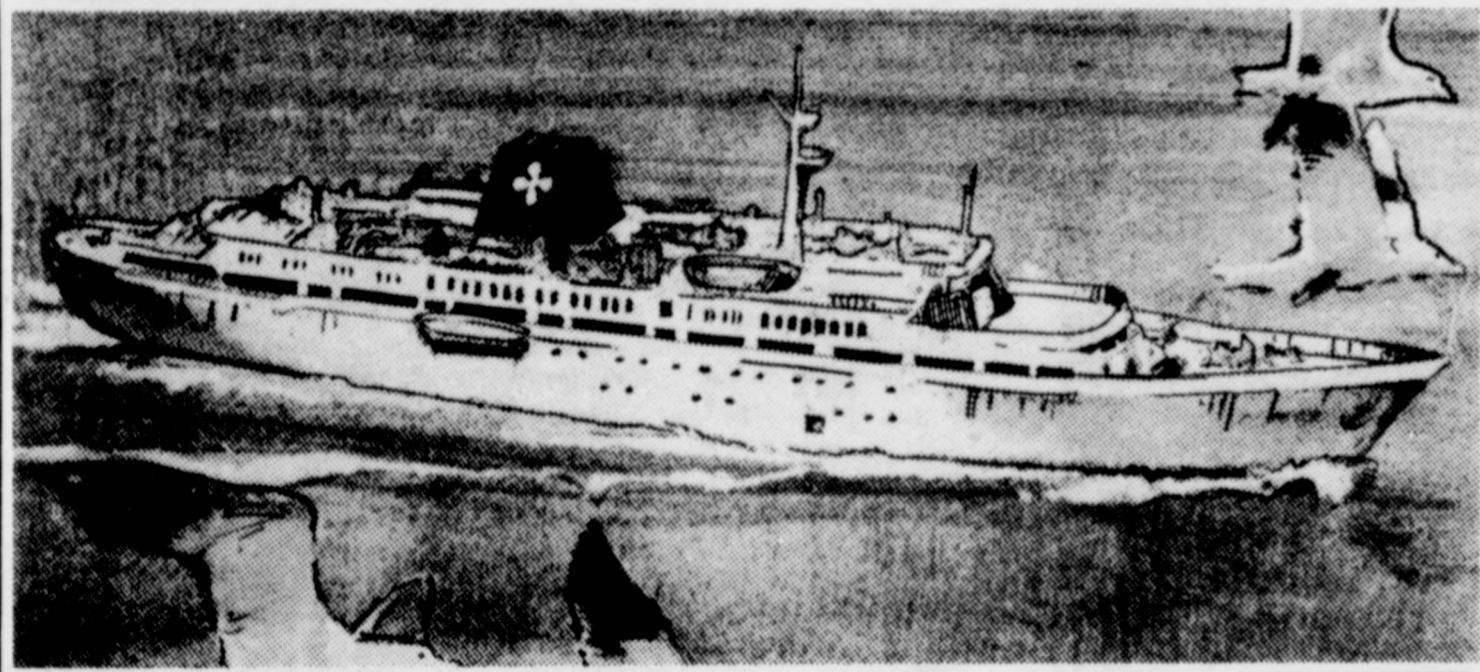

He said there are "win-win type projects" that can satisfy all sides.

"I don't feel it is necessary to get in a confrontation over every water project that needs to go forward," the director added.

Kennedy was the luncheon speaker at a seminar presented by the Central Valley Awareness Committee.

Kings' coach canned after successful season

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Robbie Ftorek, who guided the Los Angeles Kings to their third-best regular-season record ever this season, was fired Tuesday after nearly two years as the NHL team's head coach.

Kings general manager Rogie Vachon said at a news conference that he will begin compiling a list of candidates to succeed Ftorek and hopes to have a new head coach before the NHL Entry Draft in mid-June.

"It was the feeling of the club that at this time, it was in the team's best interest to make this change," Vachon said. "We felt that he (Ftorek) was not the right guy for the team at the moment."

The Kings, who acquired center Wayne Gretzky last August in one of the most significant trades in sports history, went from 30-42-8 in 1987-88 to 42-31-7 this season, fourth-best record in the league.

After finishing second in the Smythe Division — the first time they had ever finished higher than fourth in the division — the Kings came back from a 3-1 deficit to beat Gretzky's former team, the two-time defending Stanley Cup champion Edmonton Oilers, in the first round of the playoffs.

It was the first time they had won a first-round playoff series in seven years.

Los Angeles was then swept in four games by the Calgary Flames in the division finals, which ended April 24.

Vachon also said that the Kings would not renew the contract of assistant coach Bryan Maxwell, but would retain the services of the other assistant, Cap Raeder.

Throughout the season, Ftorek was criticized for his juggling of line combinations — often teaming the prolific Gretzky with low-scoring wingers — and alleged favoritism.

In addition, there was a reported rift between Ftorek and Gretzky during the season and, late in the year, high-scoring center Bernie Nicholls complained about a lack of ice time.

Cowboys lose final link to past

Long-time scouting chief put to pasture

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Gil Brandt, the last member of the original group who built the Dallas Cowboys from scratch, was dismissed by new owner Jerry Jones on Tuesday.

"He (Jones) told me finances was the reason, that he's losing $29,000 a day," Brandt told The Associated Press. "He'll probably fire four or five scouts including Bob Griffin."

"I told him I know I did as good a job as possible. I feel good about the 29 years I had with the Cowboys. But it's a bad way for it to end. He didn't even shake my hand."

Brandt was a photographer who dabbled in evaluating professional football talent when he was hired by club president Tex Schramm as the Cowboys' chief talent scout.

Schramm, Brandt, owner Clint Murchison, and coach Tom Landry built the team in 1960 starting with an office in an Automobile Club building.

Murchison died several years ago after he had sold the team to Bum Bright.

Jones, who bought the team from Bright on Feb. 25 for $140 million, fired Landry, and Schramm resigned to become president of the International Football League.

Brandt's brainstorms included drafting track and basketball stars and using computers to analyze talent.

"He said leaving the team will be like going from 'a mansion to a pup tent. But anything beats the water torture of the last few days. You'd jump every time the telephone rang."

The triumvirate management team of Schramm, Landry and Brandt took the Cowboys to 20 consecutive winning seasons (1966-85), including two victories in five Super Bowl appearances.

Brandt said he had no immediate plans.

"I have no plans to join another NFL team," Brandt said. "I have had an offer to write a book."

Brandt evaluated the talent for Landry, who made the calls. In the 1970s, the Cowboys were considered the sharpest organization in the NFL at judging talent.

In recent years, however, the formula didn't work. Of the last 15 players drafted in the first three rounds by Brandt, only four are now starters.

The Cowboys haven't had a winning season since 1985 and finished 3-13 last year — second worst in their history.

Mayors lead economic delegation

California group visits Hong Kong to plug Bay Area

HONG KONG (AP) — An economic delegation from California, led by the mayors of San Francisco and San Jose, arrived in Hong Kong Wednesday to promote business opportunities in the San Francisco Bay Area.

will be a series of productive meetings," said San Jose Mayor Tom McEnery on arrival from Taiwan, where the delegation spent two days as part of an Asian tour that will also include China and Japan.

"The Bay area, with San Francisco's service industry base, and San Jose, the capital of Silicon Valley, long recognized as the world's leading high-technology center, represents one of the most important economic regions in the United States," he said.

San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos said one of the delegation's prime objectives is to develop relations with Bay area expatriates who now live in Asia.

"These former Bay area residents can help us cultivate closer ties in the Pacific Rim," he said.

The two mayors are scheduled to meet Hong Kong Governor Sir David Wilson, address a meeting of business executives, and attend receptions to discuss business opportunities.

McEnery is scheduled to leave for China on Thursday and Agnos on Friday. They will then visit Japan before returning home.

Lottery officials accused of shortchanging schools

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A state watchdog panel criticized the state lottery Wednesday for a policy it says short-changed schools between $13.8 million and $34.6 million in little over a year.

The Commission on California State Government Organization and Economy, better known as the Little Hoover Commission, said ambiguity in the statute allowed the lottery to divert some small unclaimed prizes back into jackpots instead of giving the money to education.

A six-page commission report backs up allegations by state Controller Gray Davis, who released an audit last month showing $5.9 million in unclaimed $5 Lotto 6-49 prizes from 3-of-6 winners was channeled back into scratch-off ticket prizes instead of allocated to schools.

The Little Hoover Commission said another $13.8 million to $34.6 million was diverted in unclaimed scratch-off ticket prizes from the time the games started in November 1985 through December 1986.

Lottery officials have said there's nothing illegal about the practice, but they froze the disputed funds until they receive an opinion from the attorney general.

The dispute centers on the interpretation of language in the 1984 initiative establishing the lottery that refers to unclaimed prizes which must be turned over to education as those prizes "directly payable" by the Lottery Commission.

Lottery officials said small lotto and scratch-off ticket prizes aren't directly payable by the commission, but instead are paid out to winners by lottery retailers.

Court rules in favor of gay soldier

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court on Wednesday ruled in favor of a homosexual soldier who was denied re-enlistment after 14 years, but avoided the larger question of whether discrimination against homosexuals is constitutional.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decided the closely watched case of Perry Watkins on narrow grounds, ruling that he was entitled to reinstatement because the Army was aware of his homosexuality when he had re-enlisted in the past.

Watkins, of Tacoma, Wash., relied on the Army's representations in choosing a military career, and "has greatly benefited the Army, and therefore the country, by his military service," said Judge Harry Pregerson in the majority opinion.

Seven of the 11 judges voted in Watkins' favor, but only two reached the constitutional issue that a smaller panel of the court had cited in a now-withdrawn February 1988 decision.

That earlier ruling was the first by any federal appeals court to declare that homosexuals, because of longstanding persecution and political powerlessness, were entitled to be protected against discrimination to the same degree as racial minorities.

By sidestepping that issue Thursday, the court left it unresolved.

Nonetheless, Watkins called the latest decision a "wonderful ruling." Civil rights lawyers who supported his case said the ruling was important despite its limited scope.

"It is not a sweeping constitutional decision, but it is a first step that recognizes the value of the services of openly gay soldiers," said Nan Hunter of the American Civil Liberties Union's Lesbian and Gay Rights Project, which helped to represent Watkins.

Lt. Col. Greg Rixon, an Army spokesman, declined comment on the ruling, but said there had been "a number of (other) cases that have supported the government's position" banning homosexuals from military service.

SF, lawyers fight over millions

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The 12 lawyers who fought to desegregate the San Francisco Fire Department say their $4 million in fees is reasonable, while the city claims the bills are padded by no less than $3 million in unjustified charges.

The attorneys, in papers filed in U.S. District Court, called the hard-fought case complex and demanding on their courtroom skills. The city says $200 an hour per attorney, including time at news conferences, commuting to work and meeting with one another, is too much.

The city last week asked U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel to slash the lawyers' fees to $1 million, contending the bills had "excessive redundant and otherwise unnecessary" charges.

"The lawyers did a good job and they deserve to be paid, but that doesn't mean they get a blank check from the city coffers," said Assistant City Attorney Dan Siegel.

On the contrary said lawyer Richard Pearl, "there is no element of padding in this." He said the city fought to avoid integrating the department, and that if the city thought the charges too high, then it should have settled years earlier.

In November 1987, after the cases were joined and set for trial, the city caved in and signed a consent decree providing for the hiring and promotion and hiring of minorities and women in the fire department.

Siegel said he figured the city was billed for almost 2,000 hours of "co-counsel" conferences at a rate that came to $837,000.

Accused sex killer loses appeal to halt extradition

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — A Canadian convict accused in the sex-torture slaying of a Michigan woman and a series of similar killings has lost his appeal of an extradition order to face charges in the United States.

The Alberta Court of Appeal on Tuesday rejected Charles Ng's appeal of the order after his attorney, Don MacLeod, argued unsuccessfully that Ng's rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms had been breached during the extradition process.

Ng, 28, faces capital murder charges in California, which carry the death penalty. Canada lacks a death penalty and can refuse to extradite a person to a jurisdiction where the person faces execution.

His alleged victims include Brenda O'Connor, a native of Coldwater, Mich., who died four years ago in California.

The woman, her fiancé, Lonnie Bond, and their 14-month-old son, Lonnie Bond Jr., were killed in a sex-torture chamber in the Sierra Nevada Mountains about 140 miles east of San Francisco, police said. The bodies of the woman and her child never were found.

MacLeod said Ng, a Hong Kong native and former U.S. Marine, probably would ask him to pursue the matter in the Supreme Court of Canada. Such a motion could be made within two weeks, MacLeod said.

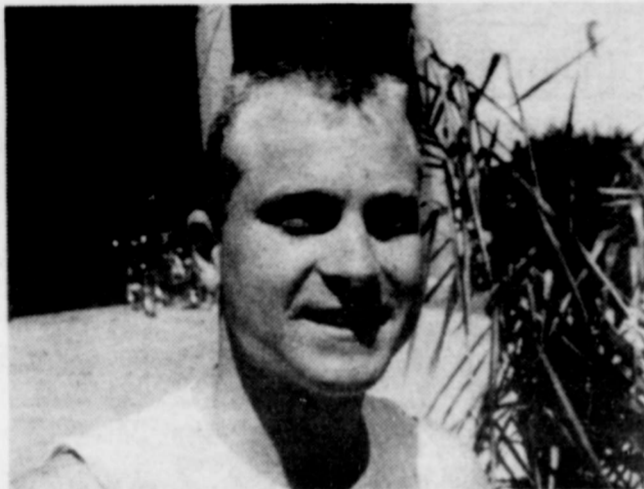

If the Supreme Court were to clear the way to extradition, the case would go before federal Justice Minister Doug Lewis, who could order Ng extradited. Ng, however, still could appeal that decision.

Ng is accused of 12 murders in the Calaveras County case.

Berkeley grad student assistants strike

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — With final exams just two weeks away, a union of 3,200 teaching and research assistants walked out of classrooms and onto picket lines on Wednesday to press a demand for recognition as employees.

The Association for Graduate Student Employees here is the vanguard of a burgeoning movement on the nation's campuses that is challenging the traditional view of them as scholars living off stipends.

"This is not a question of mainly getting more money for me, it's a matter of justice," said James Martel, a 24-year-old teaching assistant in the political science department.

"We're not a bunch of Berkeley radicals demanding a change in foreign policy; we just want to exercise a basic American right to join a union and have our concern represented at a bargaining table," added Martel, who joined about 200 pickets as classes were scheduled to begin.

Union representatives claimed hundreds of classes were canceled for the two-day strike. University officials called the labor protest largely symbolic, although they did not check the number of canceled classes.

The graduate students here, whose association is affiliated with District 65 of the United Auto Workers, represent a rising tide of student-educators nationwide who say they are underpaid, overworked and often forced to go without health and other benefits.

During the last decade, at least five major universities have recognized graduate student assistants as employees, including campuses in Florida, Wisconsin, Michigan, Oregon and New Jersey.

The debate has cropped up at many more campuses and a victory at Cal, one of the nation's most prestigious universities, could legitimize graduate students' demands, said David Lambert, an association executive board member.

Teaching assistants at the University of Wisconsin in Madison won collective bargaining rights from the Legislature in 1985. Now represented by a union affiliated with the American Federation of Teachers, they are negotiating their second contract.

CONDOMS

and buying condoms.

"I wonder what will happen if one of President Baker's 12 or 13-year-old sons goes to one of these machines and buys a condom," he said. "I wonder what President Baker is going to say about it."

Issues of possible increased promiscuity and a negative impact on the school's image caused McGary to worry Cal Poly might present a "truck-stop image."

Senator Nishan Havandjian, a journalism professor, asked, "What about the cigarette vending machines? What image does that give? Does it mean that Cal Poly is promoting lung cancer?"

Of the failed counter-resolution, one senator said it seemed to "study it (the condom issue) to death. I'm more interested in preventing death."

Nash said nine out of 10 professors who have approached him about condoms are intimidated enough not to buy condoms themselves.

"There's a tremendous element of embarrassment in buying condoms," said Nash, who also said he can subsequently understand students' hesitancy.

The judge had heard the testimony and seen the evidence. It was now up to him to determine if Billy was guilty of vandalizing public property. The ball was in his court.

"The more hours they're offered, the more they'll be used," said Nash.

McGary said it is the faculty who will have to "suffer the consequences, whether they're good consequences or bad consequences," because the faculty will still be here after the students who are currently attending leave.

"We're letting the machines do the educating for us," said McGary.
