Faire takes journey back to medieval old England

By Kathryn Hulst
Staff Writer

Queen Elizabeth I is currently on tour and will visit her faithful subjects of the Fair Shire of Donneybrooke on the Thames River on July 15 and 16.

Actually, it's El Chorro Creek in San Luis Obispo, but it will seem like the year 1565 in an Elizabethan village.

"We re-enact an Elizabethan village during the Renaissance period," said Esther Smith, Central Coast Renaissance Historical Society board member. "The performers take on actual roles, they know the history and they must be able to spar with others."

"This year, the Faire is quite a bit larger. There are more booths and more entertainers," she said.

For the 5th annual Renaissance Faire, Esther's husband, Entertainment Coordinator Rick Smith, arranged for over 800 entertainers to roam the streets of Donneybrooke.

There will be acrobats, jugglers, storytellers and some larger entertainers as well.

Shakespearean impersonator Greg Bell from Los Angeles will perform a shortened version of Shakespeare's Taming Of The Shrew, Esther Smith said.

Actors play traveling gypsies from the far east will be camping in Donneybrooke and attract attention with bellydancers, she said.

Throughout the weekend, English, Scottish, Irish and German military groups will parade through town.

In addition to the obvious performers — storytellers, jugglers and actors, there will be peasants

Six inches.

For Steve Horvath, Cal Poly's three-time All-American pole-vaulter, this distance is crucial to his athletic future.

Horvath's best vault is 18 feet one-half inch, an excellent height considering that 18-3 was the qualifying standard to compete in the 1988 Olympic trials.

But Horvath believes he needs a vault of 18-6 at the upcoming Olympic Sports Festival in Norman, Okla. to catch someone's eye. Someone with money.

"I'm hoping to get picked up by a (track) club when I'm there — get some sponsorship," said Horvath.

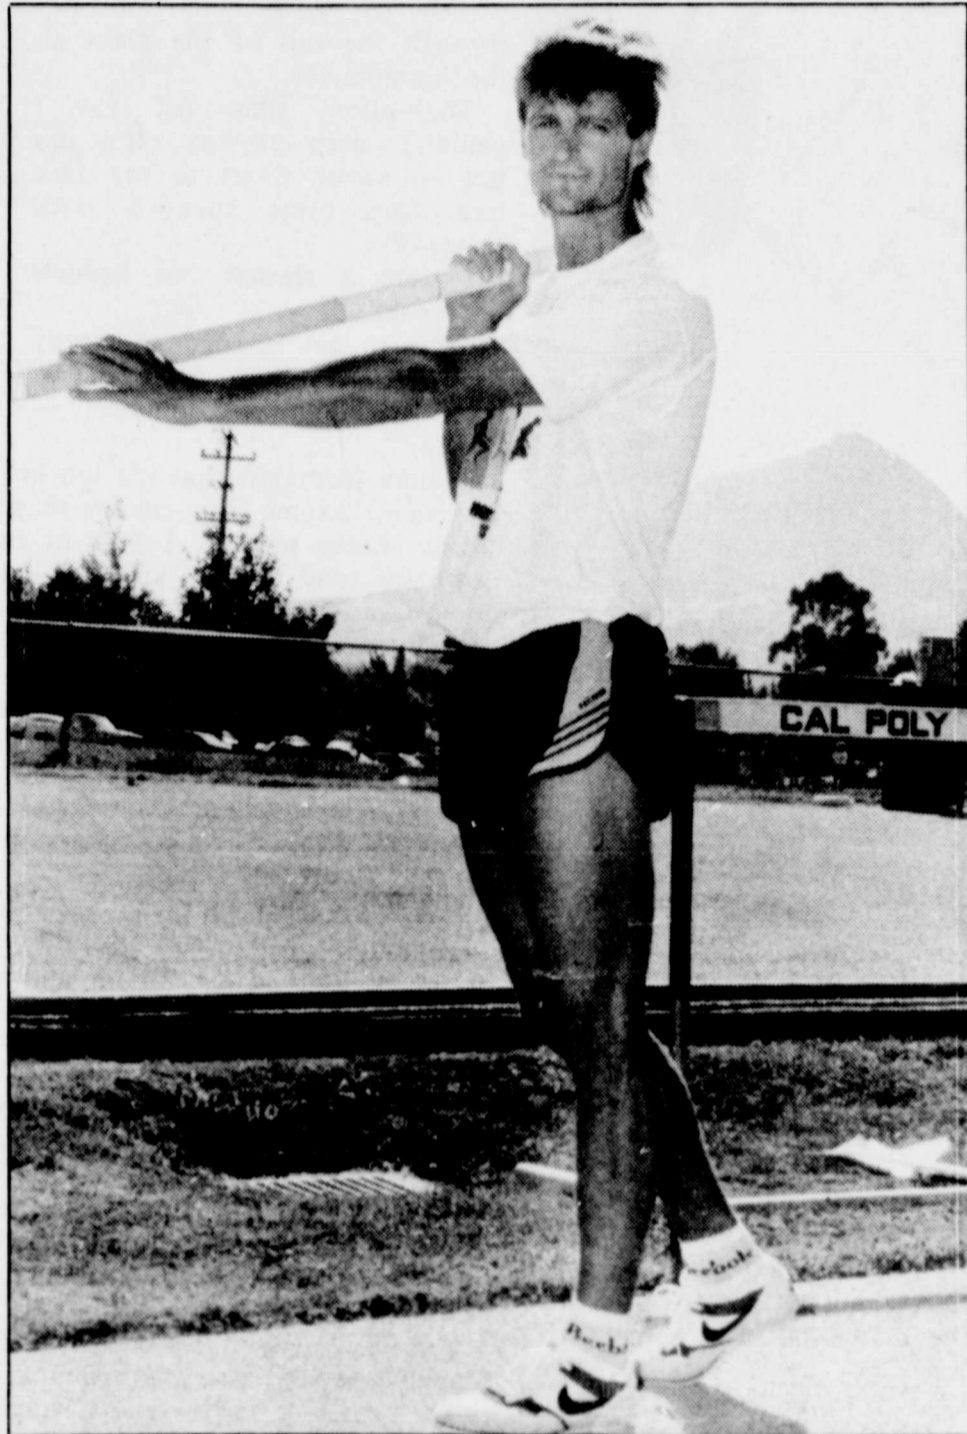

The Olympic Sports Festival is an international meet, held July 29-31, sponsored by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Because Horvath has exhausted his collegiate eligibility he needs money to train and compete.

"It's really hard to get money to travel to meets; it's almost impossible," said Horvath. "There's no way I'd be able to pay for plane tickets. And one pole costs $250. If I broke one of my poles..."

Jan Johnson of Atascadero — who won the bronze medal for pole vaulting in the 1972 Olympics, and is Horvath's part-time coach — said Horvath has a "good chance" to clear 18-6 in Norman.

In fact, Johnson believes if Horvath prepares to vault. With his personal best at 18-1½, many believe he could qualify to go to the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

Horvath had not been plagued by injuries this past year he would already be vaulting well into 18 feet.

"He's got a ton of ability," said Johnson in a telephone interview from Virginia. "But he had a disappointing year. He didn't jump as high as I

Student dies near summit

By Kim Stone
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly mechanical engineering student died last weekend when his pick-up truck went over a cliff atop Cuesta Ridge.

Robert William Johnson, 26, was found dead Saturday at about 8 p.m. by a group of hunters. The hunters discovered the body near the truck 300 to 400 feet down a ravine, Frank Stricker, a CHP officer who was at the scene, said.

Stricker said the reason for the accident is unknown. There is no indication of speeding or reckless driving. No alcohol or drugs were found.

"We don't know what happened up there," Stricker said. "He must have swerved or something."

Michelle Goodrow, one of Johnson's roommates, had filed a missing person's report Saturday about 4:30 p.m. when she became concerned after last seeing him at a barbecue Friday night.

"He left the barbecue and just felt like going for a drive," said Goodrow.

Police said it looked as if he was on his way home when the accident happened.

Goodrow described her roommate as being "very outdoorsy." She said Johnson liked to water-ski, scuba dive and go four-wheeling.

"He was just a crazy kid," she said, "and I do mean kid. He acted like a kid a lot of the time. He was always making people smile and playing practical jokes on them."

Johnson was also involved in the mechanical engineering department's human powered submarine project. He recently traveled to Florida with a group of other students to test the submarine.

"He was actively involved in

New retail center coming to downtown SLO

By Jeff Brunings
Staff Writer

Downtown San Luis Obispo will soon experience a multi-million dollar taste of European flavor.

Construction for the first phase of French Pavilion, a four-level glass atrium shopping gallery, will begin next month.

"We decided to develop the project in a true European spirit," said Randy Potl, project leasing manager, as he reviewed the final architectural revisions of the center Tuesday morning, slated to open in January 1991.

"There are retailers that recognize that downtown San Luis Obispo is just starting to blossom," Potl said. "It is really starting to have a life of its own."

The French Pavilion, covering over 150,000 square feet of retail space and occupying a half-block of Higuera between Chorro and Morro Streets, will combine a variety of national and regional retailers with smaller specialty shops, cafes, and international eateries.

In its entirety, the project will encompass some 60 individual retailers.

So far two businesses have signed leases: Gary Paul, a men's clothing store currently located in San Luis Obispo; and The Gap, a national clothing retailer.

While the project may take on characteristics similar to European-influenced architecture, the design incorporates classic features of other surrounding downtown storefronts.

A luminescent skylight, which runs the full length of the pavilion's interior, will be supported partially by metal columns rising from the first floor to the highest ceiling above the courtyard. This is similar to those on the Sinsheimer building on Monterey Street, Potl said.

An art-deco style on areas of the project's facade will be much like that seen on the exterior of the nearby County Courthouse.

"I think they have been careful enough with the architecture that it will fit right in, it's not going to stand out," said Dodie Williams, administrator of the Business Improvement Association (BIA), a group that represents local businesses and acts as a liaison between retailers and the community.

"It's going to nestle right in there and probably be one of the high points of visiting downtown," she said.

The driving force behind the Pavilion is the French family, longtime landowners throughout San Luis Obispo County. Once the owners of French Hospital, the family is primarily involved in residential development. John and Chuck French, developers of the project, were unavailable for comment.

Cuesta Valley Development, formed by the Frenchs' to oversee the project, is expected to remain insoluble and to begin other commercial projects when the pavilion is completed, Potl said.

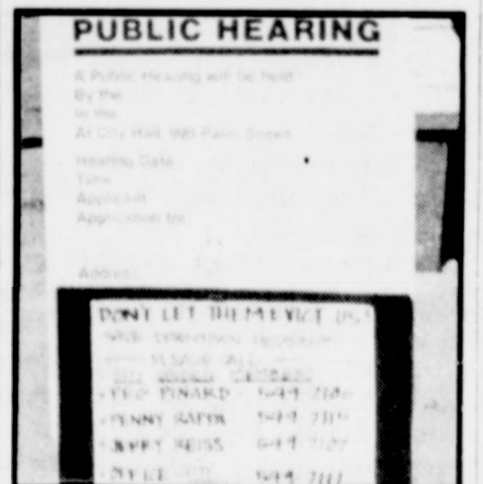

The Pavilion will replace Cuesta Emporium, the former home of Korb's Trading Post, the previous location of Cheap Thrills Records and The Sub, which are currently vacant. Adjacent retailers are also being af

Botha-Mandela meeting: Just South African PR?

Outlawed South African anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela met with South African President P.W. Botha last week — the first time the two have ever met.

The 45-minute meeting was kept secret but officials close to Botha were quoted as saying that the discussion was aimed at the future of South Africa.

South African Justice Minister Kobie Coetsee, who attended the meeting, said no policy matters were debated and no negotiations were conducted but that the two men "availed themselves of the opportunity to confirm their support for peaceful development in South Africa."

Mandela, 71, who is serving his 27th year of a life sentence for plotting to overthrow the government in 1964, has become a folk hero worldwide for his efforts to end apartheid.

Mandela has drawn up a statement concerning the meeting but he is seeking permission to release it.

Obviously, if Mandela needs permission to release the letter, is still in prison and his organization, the African National Congress, is outlawed, then the talks with Botha are just dust in the wind.

South African Minister of Information Stoffel van der Merwe said the meeting was a "very positive step."

Anti-apartheid leader Rev. Frank Chikane told reporters in Johannesburg that the government was using the meeting as a form of propaganda "to give the impression that South Africa is changing and is negotiating."

Chikane added that there can be no negotiations between the white-run government and the 28 million black majority until Mandela and other political prisoners are released and the ANC is legalized.

The government wants the ANC to renounce violence but the ANC says that the government's policy of apartheid is the real violence.

The question is, did the talks do anything or was it like Adolph Hitler meeting with a rabbi while the millions went off to the death camps?

There are more parallels between South Africa and Nazi Germany. Both are racially and ethno-centrally oriented and both oppress the masses for the benefit of the few. But the biggest similarity is both have committed crimes against humanity.

The conditions in South Africa and wrong. Botha knows this and that's why he's trying to appease the world with this meeting. Maybe corporate disvestiture is finally taking its toll on the South African economy. Maybe Botha hopes to buy Mandela and nullify Mandela's ability to lead his people out of South Africa into the promised land of equality.

On the optimistic side, perhaps the meeting will have some positive effect on the evil of apartheid. Banner headlines around the world would gladly exclaim its fateful end.

Millions, if not billions, of people around the world are watching to see what, if anything, the meeting has accomplished. More importantly, what will happen in the next twenty or so years?

Maybe Botha fears the growing unrest amid blacks and others who are sick of oppression without representation. Maybe it's time for South Africa's government to be held accountable for its crimes against humanity.

Either that or they should change South Africa's flag to a swastika.

Carpe Diems, seize the summer

Maybe they should ban summer school. After all, there are just certain times of the year when one's brain just cannot function effectively.

Take the other day as a case in point:

It's 7:30 in the morning and the morning heat seems like it wants to push the mercury through the top of the glass on the thermometer.

The alarm went off but I couldn't sleep anyway. It's too hot — sweat clings to my face like I've been sprayed with Krazy Glue.

I need a shower but haven't got the time.

Time to get up and get ready for the last thing most of us want to do this summer — school.

I think to myself that it's too hot and too nice to be pent up in some filing-cabinet-shaped classroom.

But reality sets in. I hop in my car and rush down the road to Cal Poly. As I drive I notice the horses, mountains, sky, other people going about their lives. I ask myself: Where are they going and why?

My mind drifts and thinks about mountain biking up the hills, sitting on the beach, swimming in a pool — outdoor things that allow one to enjoy the weather, relax and take advantage of the summer.

But no, I'm driving to school to sit in class and sweat.

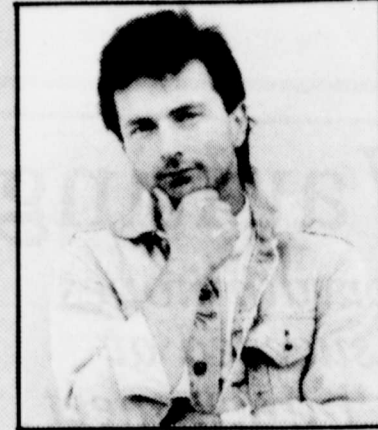

I find my parking space easily (compared to last quarter's car wars) and put the horseless carriage to rest. I think for a second about getting a ticket for not having a summer parking permit yet. Maybe the golf-cart cop won't notice and I can save a few much-needed dollars this summer. The thought subsides as the pressing business of getting to class takes my attention. I grab my backpack and jog-walk to class.

Once there, I look around the classroom and wonder why all these people are here and if they feel the same way, too. Wouldn't they also rather be at the beach?

Some guy a few rows back is drifting off to sleep. I laugh to myself. Yes, this is summer school.

The professor arrives and I wonder if he wouldn't rather be somewhere else as well.

In class my mind drifts to the financial aid that won't arrive until about mid-term. I wonder why

By

they even bother offering it for summer because it won't be here for another week or two — and that's already three weeks too late for my bill collectors. My anxiety level rises as I recall trying to get an emergency loan from the financial aid office but couldn't because I need 12 units not six.

I think briefly about how nice it would be to win the Lotto and throw a couple of thousand dollars off the balcony in the University Union. And if I won really big I could have a new extension built on to the library and they would name it after me.

Or maybe I could start a scholarship called 'the Steve Harmon anxiety from all the bureaucracy scholarship for students who would rather be at the beach in the summer.' It would be about $5,000 to a lucky student who would like to relax in Jamaica for three months.

But then my thoughts drift back to the classroom activity — heat with no air conditioning.

My usual classroom attention span of about 15 to 20 minutes has been drastically reduced to about 4 to 5 minutes because of the heat.

The professor has a few interesting things to say. I jot down some notes and look at the clock — half an hour left.

But still the heat gets in the way. Maybe we could relocate to the pool and have class while we stand in the shallow end sipping Slurpees from 7-Eleven.

There has to be some way to keep the cranium cool.

Either that or hold school at Avila. Maybe we're all just feeling a little overwhelmed by the intensity of the schooling here. Perhaps we need a new perspective on things.

Why don't we all just stand up on the top of our desks for a little different perspective on things? I think we're all pretty much familiar with the view from sitting in these cramped desks.

"Carpe diem," as Robin Williams said in 'The Dead Poet's Society.'

Seize the day, students, seize the day!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A chilled wind or warmed breeze?

Editor:

I know it's considered popular on most college campuses to be pro-abortion, so I wasn't surprised to see your editorial (July 6, "How art thou, abortion"). This letter is in reference to the "chill wind" that one of the Supreme Court justices sees blowing following the decision.

Editor:

In regards to the Supreme Court's decision regarding abortion, it is crucial Cal Poly students understand the threat at hand. We as college age females should be especially concerned. Why? Because we are among the highest percentage of Americans affected by what others are deciding for us — what to do with our own bodies. Since the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision by the Supreme Court, this right has been protected. With the recent ruling, however, states may bar public employees from assisting in abortions and prohibit them from being performed in publicly-owned facilities. This would be a tragedy for many younger women; according to the State Dept. of Health Services, more than 60 percent of Medi-Cal abortions are performed on women ages 15 to 24. Barring them at public facilities only leaves a pregnant woman with fewer choices. As usual, the poor and young will suffer the most.

Anti-abortion activists claim more women are harmed by abortion than by childbirth and Perhaps you might consider the "chill wind" from the viewpoint of a baby who may be born now instead of being destroyed by heartless, short-sighted expediency. I'm sure that baby would find the decision a "warm breeze" of humanity.

Tom Dau
Graduate studies, English

Planned Parenthood is "out to make a buck." Women have a much better chance of being harmed going through with childbirth than with abortion, and Planned Parenthood is non-profit. Many of the biggest anti-abortion activists are the religious enthusiasts who believe in teaching young adults "abstinence." Even they don't practice what they preach. Just ask Jimmy Swaggart.

Although California officials say the laws will remain for now, it is obvious California will be a key state in the dispute. We are now faced with a threat to our freedom of choice. Anyone can experience an unwanted pregnancy, and the rights we take for granted now could affect us later. Just as they affected the thousands who had dangerous, unsanitary, back-alley abortions before 1973. Are the frightful incidences of our past so forgotten we are destined to make the mistake of regressing to a society that condones such barbarianism?

in the streets, a burgeoning middle class and, of course, the noblemen and the queen's court, Esther Smith said.

"The Queen's courtiers take on actual characters from Queen Elizabeth's court. They use improvisational acting, but they must know their history," she said. "A courtier must know if he was in favor with the queen, the political and moral issues of the time, if he agrees with the queen and why he is in the court now. A courtier does a lot of research for his role."

Members of the middle class and the peasants must give the queen and her court proper reverence, and if a peasant is in any way disrespectful, he may just find himself in jail or in the stocks, she said.

Also, a guard may be hired, or bribed, to put someone in jail. Later, prisoners will be transferred to the stocks where they must perform to get out, she said.

"I never really thought of myself in acting, but we are improvising all day," Esther Smith said. Even her eight-year-old son gets involved.

"Mathew dresses as a peasant and asks for alms," Esther Smith said about her son.

"We approximate an Elizabethan speech pattern," she said. "When you can use one word, they used 10."

Language was the entertainment of the time, she said. "There weren't any stereos, TVs or video games. Wit was judged by how well you used the language by creating puns and singing," Esther Smith said.

The Smith family has been involved with the fair since its beginning in 1985.

The fair was first held at a local winery, but Carlson did not want to say which one. Next year the faire moved to El Chorro Regional Park, where it has been growing yearly.

"The public is now recognizing us as a viable group," said Marianne Carlson, president of the Central Coast Renaissance Historical Society and Faire organizer. "It took years for public awareness."

"The community has been very supportive. There have been time and equipment donations," she said.

The organization is an educational non-profit corporation. The members meet monthly and hold seminars on the Renaissance period and entertain at local events to fulfill their non-profit status, Carlson said.

Now, the Faire is a means of supporting the historical society as well as other non-profit organizations.

"We have a lot of groups participating. HOSPICE runs our beer booth, this is their largest fund raiser of the year," Carlson said. "We try to make it as financially comfortable for the vendors as possible."

HOSPICE is a local organization that helps the critically ill and their families.

To rent a small booth space at the fair costs about $50 while larger booth spaces cost $65 to $75, Smith said.

"The vendors must have period looking booths," she said. And then the vendors become actors sharing in the environment.

"There will be Renaissance-period-type foods such as ribs and banger and, of course, wine and ale," Smith said. "As for the crafts, we concentrate on what was available in the 16th century such as leather work, pottery, jewelry and needlework."

"The Renaissance Faire is kin to living in that era — or at least a close approximation," she said.

 "I think the consensus of the downtown people is that the Pavilion is a good thing. It's going to create a lot of activity," said Bob Douglas, owner of San Luis Variety, a retail store whose property was purchased by the Frenchs' to add additional space to the Pavilion.

New inn meets opposition

Residents say downtown housing is needed

By Julia Scuri
Staff Writer

Once again, some local residents are finding themselves at odds with developers who want to change the face of downtown San Luis Obispo.

Last week the city council gave the go-ahead to a project which will turn an apartment building into a bed and breakfast inn.

Residents of the 91-year-old structure, located at 1212 Garden St., are challenging the decision. They cite the Housing Conversion Regulation MC 17-86 which states housing in the downtown area should be preserved, and low and moderate income shelter should be kept.

Mike Lombardo, a Cal Poly student and a tenant of the building, is "just trying to save our house."

"There is very little downtown housing, and no way of finding anything comparable to what we have now," said Lombardo.

Lombardo, an architecture senior, was concerned with the precedent this may set.

"If we let this change go through without protest, others who live in the downtown area are also threatened by this type of development," Lombardo said. "Look at what happened on Palm Street (a row of residences were turned into lawyer's offices)," Lombardo said.

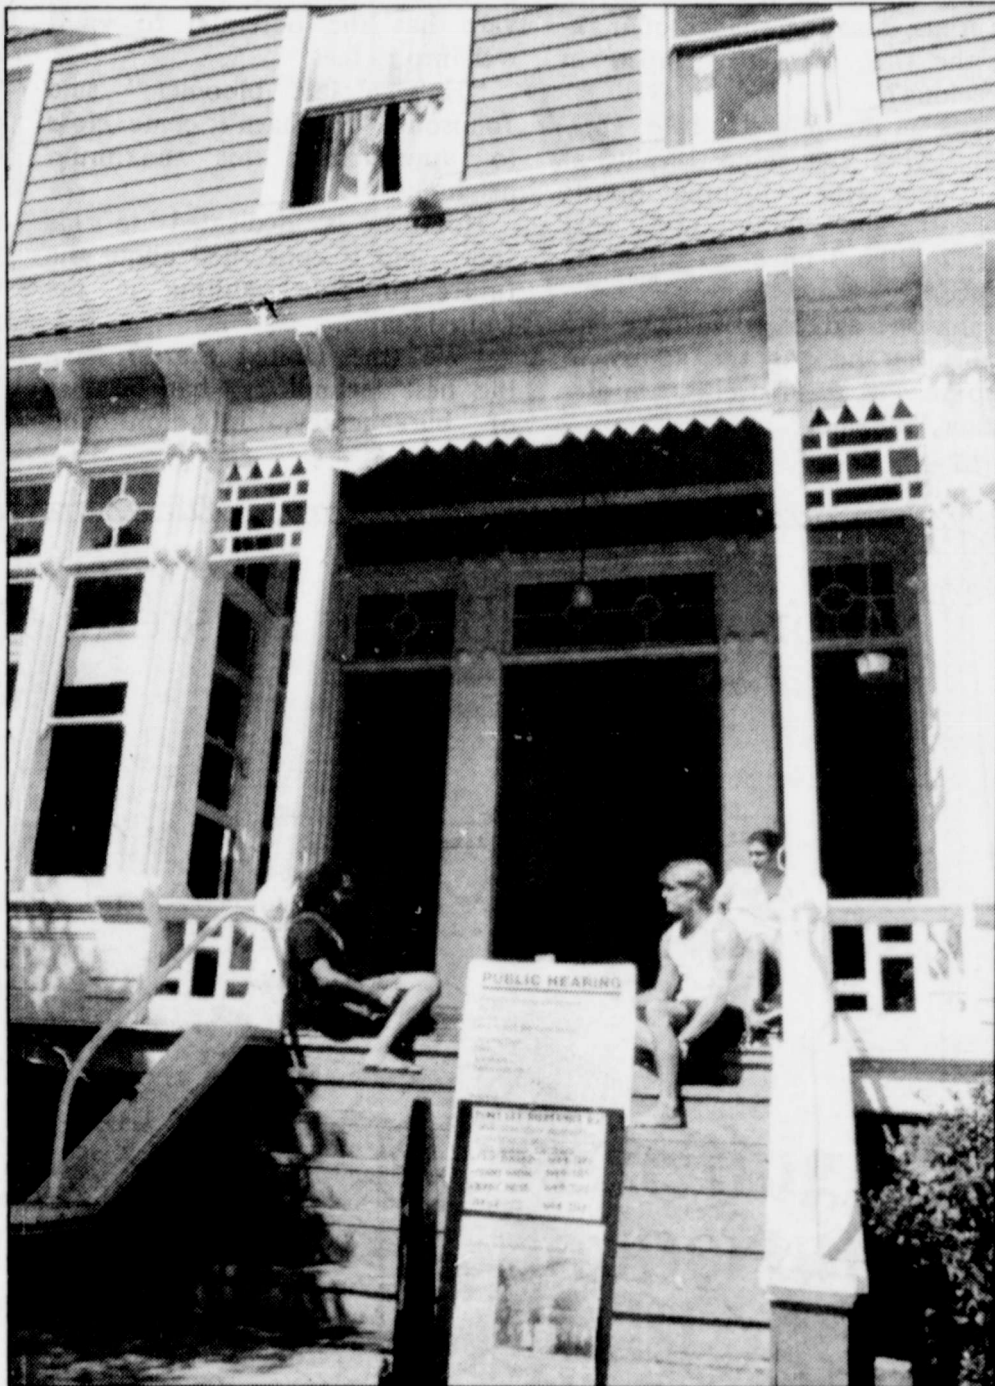

He was also upset by the statement made by building owners Kathy Judge and Dan Smith at the meeting, implying residents were "just Cal Poly students, transient residents who only lived in the area for nine months out of the year," he added. Of the 12 occupants only three are students. Lombardo said most of the tenants have lived in the area between six and seven years.

Bill Roalman, San Luis Obispo planning commissioner, agreed with the tenants.

"The community needs more affordable housing for low and moderate income people, not another $95-a-night hotel room," he said.

Roalman said the downtown housing needs to stay.

The two 'no' votes at the

AMBER WISDOM/Summer Mustang

council meeting came from Councilman Allen Settle and Mayor Ron Dunin, who voted two years ago for the project. They said they had changed their positions on the subject, citing an overcrowded parking situation downtown and concern over what would happen to the current residents of the building.

Owners Judge and Smith want to convert the eight-unit apartment building into a 15-room bed and breakfast inn at a cost of about $700,000. They are trying to qualify the house for a State Historical Site status, because of the building's age and longevity as a continuously operating boarding house.

Judge and Smith feel the inn will be an asset to the downtown area by providing increased revenue for nearby businesses. They plan to solve the parking problem by providing customers with valet parking.

Another resident of the building, Isabel Nunes, said she is also afraid of what will happen to residents if the bed and breakfast inn is allowed.

Lombardo said residents plan to fight this issue, starting with the next Architectural Review Committee meeting.

"We hope to flood the meeting with protestors... maybe it will make them realize our point," Lombardo said.

Student OK in 'P' fall

By Kim Stone
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly aeronautical engineering student remains in stable condition at Sierra Vista Hospital after fracturing his pelvis and suffering other minor injuries near the Cal Poly 'P' last Sunday.

Sgt. Steve Schroeder of Public Safety said Christopher Benton, 19, was found near the 'P' on Sunday about 4:45 a.m. after Officer Joseph Baranek responded to a call from a woman reporting someone calling for help up in that area.

At 5 a.m., with the help of the Cal Poly Fire Department, Benton was moved from the hillside and treated for his injuries, including possible hypothermia and other minor head and leg injuries.

Baranek, the reporting officer, was unavailable for comment.

According to Schroeder, Public Safety frequently receives calls from students who hear screams for help near the 'P', and every call is responded to.

"Most of the time the calls aren't serious," Schroeder said. "They're usually students up there messing around."

The night of Benton's accident an officer reported to the first call, which was from Joanna Mahoney, a woman staying in the dorms while attending a conference on campus. Schroeder said there were several calls thereafter reporting yells for help.

Public Safety estimates that Benton's accident happened about 3 a.m.

According to Cal Poly Fire Chief John Paulsen there was no evidence that Benton was under the influence of alcohol or any type of drug.

Oil spillage from Valdez lessens

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Oil-like discharges from the Exxon Valdez lessened Wednesday, but the process laid out for bringing the damaged tanker into San Diego Bay for repairs includes the likelihood of more spills, officials said.

Sold to San Diego officials by Exxon as one of the cleanest ships going into dry dock, the Valdez has instead become a major environmental headache. The Coast Guard blames it for three oil slicks over the past three days.

The vessel responsible for the nation's worst oil spill remained about 50 miles off San Diego and has been barred from entering the bay until it is free of environmental and navigational hazards.

Coast Guard Cmdr. Jack Scarborough said the ship was trailing an oil slick about 1½-miles long Wednesday but that the discharges have become intermittent and less concentrated.

Two other, longer slicks that formed on Monday and Tuesday were said to be dissipating. Exxon agreed Wednesday to contract a vessel for a cleanup to mitigate any environmental damage.

HORVATH

thought he would."

In the summer Johnson, who's unaffiliated with Cal Poly, holds vaulting camps around the U.S.

Horvath is training for the Olympic Sports Festival with Frank Burke, another of Johnson's trainees, who will be vaulting for Cal Poly next year.

"We coach each other," said Horvath. "He's (Johnson) taught us how to coach each other by the way the way he coaches us."

They vault about three days a week. The rest of the time they run, do speed and jumping drills and surf. Surfing, Horvath said, is a legitimate part of his training routine.

"The rowing motion in vaulting is the same motion as paddling on a surf board," said Horvath.

Horvath also sticks to a strict high-carbohydrate diet. He said he hasn't eaten red meat in over two months.

A senior in graphic communications, Horvath plans on graduating next June. Instead of taking classes this summer, he's working part-time to support his training.

Horvath experienced his most successful year in 1988. He finished first in the NCAA Division II national meet and in the top ten in the Division I meet. But he said he was disappointed he didn't qualify for Olympic trials.

So what about the 1992 Olympic trials, and the chance of making the U.S. team to compete in Barcelona?

"It's a possibility," said Horvath. "If I can jump 18-plus at this meet (the Olympic Sports Festival) and jump 18-8 next year, I think I have a real strong chance."

Johnson agrees. "I have no doubt that he has the ability to become a world-class pole-vaulter," he said.

At the Olympic trials, the top three vaulters make the team. The third vaulter who made the 1988 Olympic team cleared 18-8. Johnson predicts it will take a vault of 18-10 to make the team in 1992. And he believes Horvath has the potential to vault well into 19 feet.

"He's a late bloomer," said Johnson. "He hasn't come close to approaching his maximum height."

Horvath is dedicated to his sport, and is concerned about the future of pole vaulting in the United States.

"We (the United States) have the best technology, but because of bureaucracy, litigation and lawyers (a lot of pole-vaulters sue their schools after getting injured) there's no support for high schools for vaulting and track," he said.

"We need more training programs for kids, and legitimate coaching," he added. "75 percent of the coaches in the United States that are coaching pole vaulting right now have no idea what they're doing."

Before Horvath has a chance to affect the future of U.S. pole vaulting, his first step is to do well at the Olympic Sports Festival which happens to fall on his 23rd birthday, July 30.

"Yeah, that would be a nice birthday present," said Horvath.
