

Foundation celebrates move with open house

By Leslie Morris
Staff Writer

Cal Poly Foundation employees will celebrate the move into a new $2-million building with a ceremony, featuring President Warren J. Baker.

The Foundation Administration, almost a full quarter after moving out of the University Union, will have an official open house today at their new offices at 11:00 a.m.

The ceremony, to be held in the courtyard, will begin with of a brief introduction by Howard West, Foundation board chairman, followed by a short speech by Baker.

Refreshments, tours and slideshows explaining the various stages of construction will be available each half hour in the lobby, from 11:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m.

The ceremony for the new building at North Perimeter Road and Safety Way East is open to all students, staff and the community.

Many people aren't aware of the services the Foundation Administration provides. Yet, without them, Cal Poly wouldn't have workers in the bookstore, food servers in the cafeteria and cows in the classroom.

The Foundation Administration annually hires 200 regular employees and 1,000 students. Some of their responsibilities include grant and contract research, Foundation Food Service and El Corral Bookstore. They also own all the animals used for instruction.

Prior to construction, Foundation Administration offices were spread throughout the campus, with main offices in the U.U. Thirty-five regular employees will occupy the new building along with part-time student employees.

Previously occupied offices in the U.U. are now filled by Associated Students Inc., giving it two more offices and a larger conference room. Disabled Student Services and Rec sports have moved into ASI's former space.

Construction began in September 1988 and was completed June 22, 1989, according to Don Shemenske, director of financial services. The total cost was paid for through Foundation reserves and a five-year loan from Mid-State Bank.

Ken's Bicycle Store manager Keith McLaughlin showing off his cycling skills. He was the dual-slalom downhill winner at a national mountain bike race at Big Bear earlier this month.

Mountain Bikes Business booms for local retailer

By Jay Garner
Staff Writer

National Champion Keith McLaughlin kept trying to work on his $1,000 21-speed mountain bike, but the doorbell wouldn't stop ringing.

Each ring announced the entrance of another customer into Ken's Bicycle Shop, which McLaughlin manages. Many of the customers were Cal Poly students.

"Starting from WOW week on, business starts booming," McLaughlin said. "We've got 40 bikes in the back waiting to be repaired, and it stays like this the whole (school) year."

McLaughlin added that most of the bikes coming in for repairs are mountain bikes, which now dominate the industry and provide Ken's with 70 percent of its sales.

"Road bike sales are dead," he said. "It (mountain bike popularity) has been good for the industry. We needed it."

Mountain bikes became popular in the early 1980s, with organized competition starting in 1982.

McLaughlin won the dual-slalom downhill race at this year's national championships in Big Bear, Sept. 1-3.

"It's head-to-head competition, and you work your way through the ranks," he said. "It's just like dual-slalom ski races."

Other races in mountain bike competition include the uphill, downhill, cross country and the Kamikaze.

"At the Kamikaze we get going 50 mph," McLaughlin said. "It's a real fast downhill. They send racers off every 30 seconds."

Jim Eisenhood, a mechanic at Ken's and a competitive mountain bike racer, said the versatility of mountain bikes accounts for their popularity.

"They're great off road, and they're good around town," Eisenhood said. "I ride back and forth to work. If more people rode bikes, parking would be a lot easier."

A lot of people buy mountain bikes strictly for commuting around town.

"That's your average freshman college student," McLaughlin said. "They come here during WOW with their parents who buy them a $300 bike."

A good "dirt worthy" bike for off-road enthusiasts costs between $400 and $600. Despite the hefty price tag, sales of these bikes continue to rise, McLaughlin said, as more people discover the joys of mountain biking.

"It's fun," he said. "You cover a lot of ground. You get away from the concrete and the cars, and out into the wilderness where the air is clean. If you fall, it's just dirt. And there's nobody to run you over, except maybe your buddy."

Too many bikes overcrowd trails

By Jay Garner
Staff Writer

With more people getting into the serious side of the sport, available trails are becoming crowded, and some cyclists are trespassing and damaging private property.

Also, state parks such as Montana de Oro are closing many of their trails to mountain bikers because of erosion and complaints from horseback riders, hikers and bird watchers.

Jim Eisenhood, a mechanic at Ken's Bicycle Shop in San Luis Obispo and a competitive racer, said many of the complaints hinge on the behavior of a few cyclists.

"The thing to keep in mind is that a good majority of people that ride mountain bikes are really nature conscious people," Eisenhood said. "They don't litter, and they're aware of the people around them that are hiking and doing other things. It's just a few that actually ruin it for everybody. They're the ones that are out there causing damage to property — skidding, littering. It's just like any other sport — there's a few bad

From the editors' circular file

Rude parking calls for revenge

OK. So I wake up about 11 a.m., and I have about an hour before I have to be at school. So I figure I have time to run down to Burger King, grab some food, bring it back to the house and watch some TV before I go to class. So I go, and I get my food and I come back.

But there's a problem. Some proud owner of a Monte Carlo or a Chrysler Cordoba or a VW Microbus has decided to plant his/her monstrous vehicle in front of my house. So I have to drive around my block, looking for a parking spot within walking distance of my house. Is this fair? Is this right? I think not.

I live about three blocks from campus. It takes me five minutes to get to school if I ride my bike, 10 minutes if I walk. So basically what I'm trying to say is, I live a convenient distance from campus. Convenient for me, convenient for everyone else who discovers an empty spot in front of my house.

My landlord can afford to charge us a higher rent than she normally would be able to because she knows how close we are to campus. If we lived farther from school, we would have to pay less rent, and the extra money would go toward buying a parking permit. For on-campus parking. Because I wouldn't want to steal someone's parking spot if that person paid extra rent to live closer to campus.

Hey, that gives me an idea! I'm going to start taking note of the license plates of the cars that park in front of my house, and if I ever see one of them parked at a house in, say, Laguna Lake, I'll just plant my car in the owner's driveway for a couple of hours and see how he reacts. Because it would basically be payback.

We don't have a driveway at our house, so we have nowhere to park but on the street. So if I ever recognize an Impala in spot number '19 at a given apartment complex, I'll be sure to park my pile in that spot at the earliest possible opportunity.

"Hey," I'll say to my roommate. "Haven't I seen that Impala before?" And he will reply, "Of course you have. That Impala magically appeared in front of our house on Wednesday when you drove down to move your laundry from the washer to the dryer."

By Rob Lorenz

Why can't the city require permits for parking in front of my house, like they do just two blocks down the road? People that live on Hathway, just across from Via Carta, don't have a problem with parking. Neither do people on the first block of Kentucky. You know why? Because you need a permit to park there. But just a block away, anywhere on the street, if they happen to choose the right spot, they can not only park for the day (for free), but they can also ruin my day.

So you say to me, "Hey, he's talking about me! I always park my car on Stafford, or Kentucky or Hathway. Wherever I can find a spot. All I have to say to him is 'tough s——.' He rented near school, he should have known the consequences."

Well then, I guess you should know the consequences if you choose a spot in front of my house to parallel park your Pinto. First, myself or my roommates will jot down your license number. Then, we will proceed to box you in. Oh, we may leave six inches of air between our bumpers and yours, but hey, that probably won't be enough room for you to get out, will it? After completing our boxing maneuvers, we will sit down in the living room and wait for you to appear. We will grin widely as we observe your frustrated countenance. We will giggle as you throw up your arms in despair. By the time we walk out the front door, we will be in hysterics. In fact, it will be difficult to walk. We may have to crawl. And as we reach the sidewalk, we will ask in our most innocent voices, "Do you need us to move our cars?"

Voting gives students a voice

Recently, the concern about capping campus enrollments has been well-publicized. So have the conflicts between students and the community about single-family housing areas. Councilmember Peg Pinard and groups like Residents for Quality Neighborhoods have vocalized what they think are the best solutions to these problems that affect students, but the students themselves know just as well as anyone.

The students, however, are going unheard.

Cal Poly and Cuesta College boast a combined enrollment of more than 24,000, and these students make up greater than 50 percent of the San Luis Obispo population.

The problem is that most of them aren't registered to vote in the area.

If the majority of students were, they would compose a very powerful voting block. This Nov. 7, three seats (out of five) on the City Council are up for election, and students could and should vote to fill those seats with members of the community who not only say they want student needs considered, but who are willing to seriously consider student input as well.

Students may argue their residence in the Cal Poly/Cuesta College area is a temporary one, but four or five years is a good deal of time, especially considering a councilmember's term is only two years long.

The registration deadline for voting eligibility for this year's election is Oct. 10, and a new form must be filled out whenever a person changes addresses. The form will be available on campus at the Information Desk, in U.U. 217, at the Mustang Daily office in Graphic Arts room 226, and during Activity Hour Thursday in the University Union Plaza.

And if you're worried about being informed enough to vote — don't. San Luis Obispo's size makes it an ideal place to start getting politically involved. So dip your feet in, because you can make a difference.

Letters to the editor

Club's ad message concerns reader

Editor — I am sitting here, looking at crew club's ad in the Mustang Daily (Sept. 26), and wondering just what message they are sending to potential members.

If I (as a male) were to join crew club, should I expect to meet women who lounge around in sculls wearing string bikinis? If the woman next to me were to join, could she expect that this is how she would appear out on the bay? Maybe this is the only type of woman they want to join?

I don't believe the answer to any of these questions is "yes," however, the people responsible for this ad have demonstrated a distinct lack of awareness about the true image of a respectable sport club and the best way to convey that image to potential members.

Even if the woman in the photo is a member of crew club, this is not how she would look while working out. More importantly, the image portrayed in the ad has absolutely nothing to do with the sport of rowing — it is simply using sex to get memberships.

I hope the majority of crew club's members do not agree with this type of package advertising (if you join, you will get the girl) and that in the future the club will better represent its club by using photos of real athletes doing what they believe in — in this case rowing.

City may succeed at 'master plan'

Editor — I appreciated the humorous expose of the activities of the City Council and the proposal to restrict student housing (Sept. 25). However, I would like to remind the students of this city that this issue is no joke.

Some members of the community have recently begun to portray students in an extremely negative and distorted way. Their goal is to pass legislation that will severely restrict the ability of students to live in the community.

The motivations of these people go far beyond the legitimate complaints of trash, noise and parking problems. They are claiming the increasing number of students and renters is destroying the proper character of the community. They seem to feel that there is some sort of a "master plan" dictating the ideal society and any changing situations that threaten the stability must be stamped out.

This movement is blatantly undemocratic in its attempt to maintain a stagnant status quo in what is becoming an increasingly diverse society. Rather than try to introduce positive measures that will help different members of society live together, the solution of these people is to eliminate the more offensive groups. Unfortunately, because the students have been very apathetic politically, there is a good chance this movement will succeed.

New Rec addition may begin next year

By Jill Newhouse
Staff Writer

The $13-million Physical Education and Recreation addition could begin in a year despite delays over money.

Difficulty in obtaining state money has twice pushed back construction of the combined facilities building, which will house the physical education department and a recreational area for students, said Douglas Gerard, executive dean of facilities administration.

Using state money for building on campus is a complicated process and naturally takes a period of time, he said.

The plans were delayed this summer because many of the students involved in the construction were gone for the summer.

Plans were again delayed in June because of a $7-million cut-back in state construction money.

Ultimately, in order for the Rec building to move forward, voters must approve a $900 million bond measure which will include money for all public secondary schools.

The measure should go before the public in either June or November.

If the bond issue is approved by voters, construction could begin either within a year or in January of 1991.

Blueprints for the state- and student-funded building should be finished in February or March, Gerard said.

The preliminary plans, detailing the physical setup and character of the building, were approved in spring.

Building plans include staff offices and labs for the physical education department, handball courts, weight room, storage, a new 50-meter pool and an addition to Mott Gym.

eggs that ruin it for everybody.

"We feel like we have our right to ride on national forest property. Just like horseback riders have the right to ride horses or people hiking have their rights."

Jon Muench, supervising ranger at Montana de Oro State Park, drove his pickup to Coon Creek Trail, which is now off-limits to mountain bikers.

"Now you'll see the sign (forbidding mountain bikers to ride) that we put up here," he said. "Uh, wait, where is the sign? It might have been ripped out."

Muench walked up to where the sign had been and stared down at a two-foot-deep hole in the ground.

"Yeah, it's been pulled out," he said. "You can see right here — see the mountain bike tracks — somebody ripped off our sign. Obviously, there's people that disagree with our rules."

Those rules prohibit mountain bikers from riding south of Islay Creek Road, except for the bluff areas. That leaves about 60 percent of the trails at Montana de Oro open to mountain bikers.

But it could have been a lot worse for the mountain bikers.

Growing numbers of complaints about safety — mountain bikers conflicting with hikers and horseback riders — and erosion prompted the California State Parks System to adopt the Mountain Bike Use Policy on Jan. 1.

The policy gives state parks the right to close all trails to mountain bikes, restricting them to dirt roads and fire trails. But the policy also allows local officials to use their own judgment on which and how many trails to close.

Rick Ray, chief ranger for the San Luis Obispo Coast District of State Parks and Recreation, said he's been impressed with the "responsible bicyclists" — many of them Cal Poly students — who have volunteered to help repair damage caused by mountain bikers at Montana de Oro.

"We could have closed all the trails, (at Montana de Oro) but the community response to the problem has been great," Ray said.

Alex Madonna, owner of Cerro San Luis, another popular spot for mountain bikers, has recently placed no trespassing signs on his mountain.

"If they treat it with due respect, then I have no objections," Madonna said about cyclists on his mountain.

But he said that he's been forced to erect the no trespassing signs because some mountain bikers have been tearing down fences on the mountain, allowing his cattle to escape.

Muench, of Montana de Oro State Park, stressed that a small minority of mountain bikers give the rest a bad reputation.

"Most of the mountain bikers are pretty healthy individuals that are just out here for their health," he said. "They find it their personal way to enjoy nature. I see nothing wrong with that at all. I think it's great. In fact, I like to ride mountain bikes myself."

Leaked security files embarrass British in No. Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A mysterious rash of leaked security files has led to new accusations that Northern Ireland's embattled security forces are cooperating with Protestant murder squads.

The British government is embarrassed, the Irish government is expressing dismay, and the Irish Republican Army is enjoying a propaganda windfall in its war to rid Northern Ireland of British rule.

Desperate to build credibility with the deeply suspicious Catholic minority, the police force has taken the drastic step of calling in 15 detectives from England to conduct an inquiry into the source of the leaks.

The affair began Aug. 29, when British Broadcasting Corp. reporter Chris Moore was taken blindfolded to meet four masked men who had files and a videotape to show. Reporters are barred from talking to the IRA or its splinter groups by the British government.

The men claimed to belong to the Ulster Freedom Fighters, a shadowy Protestant organization that specializes in killing Catholics. Earlier that group had killed Loughlin Maginn, a 38-year-old Catholic father of four.

The masked men said they wanted to convince the reporter that Maginn was on file as an IRA suspect and was not an innocent victim.

If, as the Ulster group claimed, the files came from the security forces, then how did they fall into the hands of an illegal and murderous organization?

The furor has worsened in the ensuing weeks as at least eight more security files have surfaced.

The files consist mainly of sheets of photos with names and addresses of IRA suspects.

In the hands of the police or army, the files are routine anti-terrorism documents. In the hands of the Protestant group, they are death lists.

"This is an intolerable situation," said Seamus Mallon, a leading politician in Northern Ireland who, while consistently critical of the security forces, has in the past urged fellow Catholics to cooperate with police investigations of IRA outrages.

Sinn Fein, the IRA's political wing, has long claimed that collusion exists between the security forces and Protestant groups.

Mallon, who belongs to the more moderate Social Democratic and Labor Party, says the fact that files are leaking out of bases shows there's a problem.

Friday, September 29

• Women's Volleyball — The Lady Mustangs return to Mott Gym after dropping two tough matches last weekend. The team will face Pacific, the third-ranked team in the nation. The Tigers carry a 12-0 record into the match-up and are led by Krissy Fifer, who leads the team with 127 kills. The match begins at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday, September 30

• Football — The Mustang football squad, coming off its first loss of the season, returns home this weekend to begin conference play against CSU Northridge. The Matadors have an overall record of 2-2 and are coming off a 31-28 win over Central State Oklahoma on Saturday. Cal Poly holds a 23-5 lead in the all-time series between the teams. Cal Poly won last year's game over the Matadors by a lopsided score of 38-7. The game will begin at 7 p.m. at Mustang Stadium.

• Men's Soccer — The men will travel south this weekend to take on the defending CCAA champion, CSU Northridge. The Mustangs will carry an undefeated 4-0-3 mark into the conference match-up, while the Matadors enter the game with a mark of 3-2-2. Cal Poly is led by junior forward Tim Hire, who has six goals in seven games this season.

• Women's Volleyball — The women will face a San Jose State squad that is ranked 17th in the nation. The Spartans will carry a 4-2 overall record into the Saturday night match at Mott Gym. The Spartans are 0-1 in Big West play. The match will begin at 7:30 p.m.

A's, Giants are best in West

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Roger Craig is throwing a little party for the Giants at his home near San Diego Thursday, and thanks to the Cincinnati Reds, the get-together can be a celebration.

Craig would like to have included the Cincinnati players on the guest list, but they'll be traveling.

The San Francisco manager did, however, figure out one way to express his gratitude for the Reds' 2-1, 13-inning victory over San Diego Wednesday night that gave the Giants the NL West title and a playoff date against the East champion Cubs beginning Wednesday in Chicago.

"I'm going to send (Reds manager) Tommy Helms a quarter of a share," Craig said late Wednesday night after he and his players — who had just lost 1-0 to Los Angeles — learned that the Reds had eliminated the second-place Padres from the West race.

After being swept in three games by the Dodgers, the first time the Giants have lost a series all year and also matching their longest losing streak of 1989, Craig and his players spent a tense hour and a half in the clubhouse waiting for the game at San Diego to end.

Had the Padres won, the Giants would have faced a weekend series in San Diego needing a victory to clinch the West. Those final three regular-season games now are meaningless.

The Giants turned fervent Reds fans during the clubhouse wait, listening to the game from San Diego on the radio and cheering for Cincinnati.

When the game finally ended, there were shouts of joy — and relief.

"Whew," San Francisco slugger Will Clark said. "We're all glad it's over."

Looking ahead to the best-of-seven matchup with the Cubs, Craig said he plans to use Scott Garrelts, 14-5 after Wednesday's loss to the Dodgers and still the NL earned-run average leader, in the opening game of the playoffs, then go with 17-game winner Rick Reuschel in the second game.

The Giants had a 6-6 record against the Cubs this season, with the teams splitting six games at both Candlestick Park and Wrigley Field.

Craig said there are similarities between his team and the Cubs, who are managed by Don Zimmer, a former Craig teammate with the Dodgers in Brooklyn and Los Angeles and later with the New York Mets.

"I think we're a little like Zimmer's club," Craig said. "Nobody expected us to be here."

Craig said he was one of those that didn't expect the Cubs to win the NL East, but added that they earned the title.

"From what I saw in spring training and the way things looked, I'm surprised they're there," he said of the Cubs, who lost 23 of 32 spring games. "They just put everything together and Zimmer's done an outstanding job. You watch them play, they do something different every day to win."

"They've got an exciting ballclub. It's going to be an outstanding playoff."

"He knows me and I know him," Craig said. "We have no set pattern, what we're going to do once the game starts. I'm not going to change anything. I'm just going to manage the same way I've always managed and I'm sure he'll do the same thing."

"I know his bullpen, I know his extra men, and I'm sure he knows mine."

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The once-feeble American League West likely will boast three teams with 90 wins by week's end. But it still takes about 100 to contend with the repeat champion Athletics.

Just like last year, Oakland gets to spend the final weekend padding its stats and mapping out its approach to the playoffs while the AL East leaders exhaust all resources just to survive.

"The loss we had in LA (in the 1988 World Series), we don't forget," relief ace Dennis Eckersley said as the A's savored their second straight divisional crown, clinched Wednesday night. "But we can enjoy this one for about four or five days."

Going the rest of the way without a defeat would produce a second consecutive 100-win season, last achieved by the Baltimore Orioles a decade ago. Dave Parker, who homered Thursday, needs just four runs batted in for his first 100-RBI in the American League and fifth overall.

Mike Moore, 19-11 after pitching a one-hitter for seven innings in the 5-0 clincher over Texas, goes for the 20-victory plateau Sunday against Kansas City. And Carney Lansford, whose .336 batting average trails Minnesota's Kirby Puckett by four percentage points, seeks his second AL batting crown.

"That hasn't been on my mind at all," Lansford said, ending a month-long silence with the Bay area media. "I wouldn't trade this (title) for that. I wouldn't mind seeing Kirby Puckett do it so a right-handed hitter finally wins it again."

Lansford, who also has quietly stolen 37 bases, is proudest of the way he and his teammates held up through their ailments this year — and not just the well-publicized injuries that sidelined Jose Canseco, Mark McGwire, Walt Weiss and Eckersley.

"This is more gratifying than last year," he said. "There have been a lot of days when guys like Dave Henderson, Dave Parker and myself went out there and played even though we were dog-tired and banged up, because we had to play... I think everybody realizes what we had to go through this year."

Mark McGwire, disabled early in the year by a back injury, heard rumblings all season long about his low batting average, now .226. But he still managed to lead the club with 31 homers to become the second player in history to hit 30 in each of his first three full seasons; Canseco was the first.

"This year's a lot more meaningful," McGwire said. "I can't remember but a handful of blowout games this year. Last year, it seemed like we had a lot more."

Canseco isn't leading any category this year following his MVP season. But he has hit 17 homers in less than half a season, and considers it an impressive achievement in light of his wrist injury and bad publicity that has dogged him since last winter. In the clincher, he gave the A's the lead for good with a homer that he described on his 900 number as going "a mile high and a mile far" — actually an estimated 456 feet.

"I've been at the bottom and I've been at the top," Canseco said. "I've been from riches to rags and back to riches. I've been everywhere this year."

Rickey Henderson, who arrived in a trade from the Yankees at midseason, is savoring his first true division title. He was in on a strike-year division crown with Oakland in 1981.

Zsa Zsa awaits verdict, wears 'big diamonds'

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Zsa Zsa Gabor, dressed in red and dripping in jewels, threatened Thursday to call police on a mob of reporters who surrounded her Rolls-Royce as she awaited a jury verdict in her cop-slapping case.

Saying "No comment, no comment," the weary looking actress pushed through a crush of photographers, camera crews and reporters as she walked to her car during a lunch break.

"Don't scratch the car," she snapped at the media mob, pointing to some nearby Beverly Hills police officers. "There's the police."

A six-woman, six-man jury deliberated 90 minutes on Wednesday and resumed talks Thursday in the 14-day-old trial.

Gabor, following her June run-in with Officer Paul Kramer, could receive up to 18 months in jail if convicted of misdemeanor battery on a police officer, disobeying an officer's orders, driving with an expired license and having an open container of alcohol in her car.

She already has been fined $500 for violating what she called a "gagging order" by commenting to reporters on witnesses in the case.

On Thursday, the former Hungarian beauty queen stepped from her Rolls-Royce Corniche in a red dress and adorned with jewels.

"I came here to show you guys I'm not afraid," she told reporters. "I'm wearing my big diamonds today. I worked for it. I earned it."

On June 14, Kramer pulled Gabor over after noticing expired registration tags on her Corniche. As he checked for other violations, she drove off.

Gabor slapped Kramer when he pulled her over a second time. He said the attack was unprovoked but she said she reacted in self-defense when he forcibly removed her from her car.

Each day of the trial Gabor was a fountain bubbling with vitriol or sweet reason, depending on her mood.

Sometimes the two were swirled in the same sentence.

She couldn't resist referring to Kramer as "gorgeous," no matter how often she called him a brute or compared him to the Gestapo of Nazi Germany.
