Cal Poly uses $3 million in lottery funds for programs

By Barbara Courain
Staff Writer

Cal Poly received more than $3 million from California's Lottery Revenue Fund for the 1989-90 academic year.

Where does it go?

All seven schools and the Associated Students Inc. received portions of the money, said Frank Lebens, associate vice president for academic resources.

The Student Internships-Community Service Program, designed to fund student internships and work with social, educational and human service agencies, also benefited from the lottery money.

The Fine Arts Initiative, which improves instruction in the arts and the Instructional Development and Technology Program, were others.

Lebens also said about $1.5 million went to projects such as the Teacher Diversity program, designed to attract and enable minorities to enter the teaching profession; an outreach program for high school and community college minorities; and the Hispanic Students Scholarship Program.

More than $1 million was set aside for programs reviewed and approved by Cal Poly's Instructional Program Advisory Committee, said Lebens.

The committee in the past has based its recommendations on three main criteria: each proposal's merit, the number of students benefited and the impact the proposal has on the quality of the program. Of the 171 projects evaluated by the committee, 61 were given full or partial funding.

Almost $500,000 was put directly into an endowment account. The interest on this account — about $68,700 — was spent on such programs as an entry-level math preparatory course, faculty/student mentoring and the Emerging Scholars program.

"We can spend the interest we receive from this fund, but the rest must remain in the account," Lebens said. "This gives us an ongoing source of funding and helps us take the peaks and valleys out of lottery allocation."

Except for the Instructional Equipment Replacement program, all of the other programs are new and have been financed by the lottery since 1986-87, he added.

Student qualifies as write-in in bid for council seat

Says Cal Poly should demand representation

By Steve Jones
Staff Writer

In the midst of tension between the students and community, Cal Poly student David Blaine says the time is right for his write-in City Council candidacy.

Blaine, who has only his senior project to complete, works as an insurance agent and is part owner of Yugi's, a sushi bar here in town.

He says he is not worried about being a write-in candidate. In fact, he thinks it's an advantage.

"It makes you different," he says. "It gives the students something to look at — not just a name on a ballot — because they have to take an extra effort to get out there and put my name in."

He says now is the ideal time for the students to get a representative on the council.

"The housing ordinance seems to have gotten people interested," Blaine says. "This is the time. They (students) have to understand it's right now. This is your only chance to get a candidate."

"Once they get one, they'll say 'Hey, look what we did last time, it's easy.' But they have to see a result, they have to get out and vote."

"I'm hoping people will see it as their campaign, not just mine," Blaine says of his bid for a council seat. "I'm just a name."

With less than a month remaining until the elections, Blaine says he will concentrate primarily on campus. The top vote-getter in the last city election was Peg Pinard, who won with just over 2,800 votes. Blaine says if students turn out in force, he will easily get enough votes.

Blaine, a member of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, is hoping for a high voter turnout by fraternity and sorority members.

"We are hoping for a lot of greek support," he says. "We need them to take control of

'Mae West' and pals act up in SLO

By Marni Katz
Staff Writer

"Has anyone ever told you that you look just like ..."

Everyone has probably heard it before. Nearly every average person has, at some time in his life, had the luck or bad fortune of being told they bear resemblance to a Hollywood celebrity.

For most of these people, it's just an amusing anecdote that's fun to share with friends. But for Hollywood impersonators, Victoria Mills (a.k.a. Mae West), Whitney Rydbeck (a.k.a. Jack Benny) and Gene Daily (a.k.a. Clark Gable), it's a way of life.

Mae, Jack and Clark (as the impersonators prefer to be called and as they refer to each other) were in town last weekend for a benefit auction for KCBX public radio at the Vets Hall on Friday. Before their appearance, they took the time to talk to and entertain a Mustang Daily reporter.

"Oh, the Mustang Daily," said Mills with a typical Mae West nasal drawl, "Well I always love horsing around."

The three impersonators met while performing at the Queen Mary in Long Beach four years ago and have since been amazing audiences and drawing stares from people around the country.

While they now have the looks, characteristics and inflections of their celebrities down perfectly, they all claim to have gotten into the business accidentally after discovering that they bore a resemblance to the character.

Daily discovered he resembled Clark Gable 11 years ago while doing a stage play version of "Heaven Can Wait." His character required slicked-back hair and a streamlined mustache, now a trademark of Gable's, and it became a joke around the set that he looked just like the swooning superstar.

"When the review came out the next day," Daily recalled with one eyebrow raised and a Gable purr, "the critic said the play was OK, but Gable was great."

Following this discovery, Daily "started getting calls," and toured with the Bureau of Tourism in Old Mexico, and has since done numerous commercial appearances.

Life's not 'normal' with 7 roomies

By Barbara Courain

I always get the same reactions when I tell someone that I live with seven other roommates. "WOW, do you like it?" or "How many was that?" or "You've got to be crazy." Well, maybe I am ...

Normal people do not consider it a challenge to take a shower in the morning before school. I do. The immediate moment my eyes open, I glare toward my closed door and perk my ears to listen for running water. If I hear silence, my heart begins to pound.

I say to myself, "Seven other girls are contestants in today's shower race. I have a chance to win." I bolt toward the door, down the hall and grab the nearest clean towel. Bethany, one of the beloved seven, cuts me off at the bathroom door. "Good morning," she smiles, knowing she has won Tuesday's race.

Normal people do not suddenly decide to leave school and San Luis Obispo for the week when their name is turned to DISHWASHER MONITOR on the "chore wheel." But if you multiply eight roommates by three meals a day, that's 24 plates, 24 cups and 24 forks to monitor. And, although it was great in September when we all agreed to do our own dishes, October seems to have a different contract.

"Who's dishes are these?" I yell from the kitchen. "Not mine," yell back my seven roomies. Typical. I guess they all haven't been cooking or eating again. But, I can't complain. I never eat either, except for this week when the dreaded chore landed on my name.

Normal people do not get in their cars and drive to the nearest 7-11 pay phone to call their philosophy study partners and set a time to meet in the library. I do. And if I didn't? My partner would be waiting until 11 p.m. for my call.

You see, it's all very logical: one phone line and eight college girls. You can figure it out. There were three moms, four boyfriends and two prospective boyfriends to call that night. These all take precedence over calling my study partner, so I land at the bottom of the waiting list to use our one extremely popular phone.

Normal people do not fight to keep their chicken frozen or their milk cold. But, after all, there are seven other milk cartons and chicken wings wanting the same freezer and refrigerator space as mine.

Who will be the first to go to Lucky this week and stock-up on all the key buys? Probably the nameless roommate who I so willingly agreed to share my refrigerator shelf with at the beginning of the year. "Compromise" and "share" are words you use when you have one or two roommates, not SEVEN. We use, more appropriately, the words conquer and steal.

Normal people do not look out the window and dash out the front door when they see their date's car in view. I didn't at first, but I learned rather quickly to take any measure to avoid having my date set foot in our living room (especially if it's a first date).

It never fails. At least six of the roommates will be home, sitting on the couch like vultures waiting for their prey. As it goes, immediately after the introductions take place: "What time will you be home? Doesn't Barb look cute tonight? Gosh, Barb hasn't been on a date in a long time." Then come the winks and smiles and long goodbyes. By this time, my date is sweating and just wants the evening to be over.

So, I'm not normal. I have accepted this fact. But, if I could reverse the clock to the day I signed this year-long lease, would I still choose to have seven other signatures accompany mine? You bet — just don't ask me that when I am in need of a shower, have just finished everyone's dishes, get mugged at 7-11, get sick off warm milk and don't get another date until next September.

Learn about candidates, issues

OK, so you've taken the first step and turned in your registration form as part of this year's voter participation drive, but what's next?

As of last Friday, Ron Bearce, director of Concerned Citizens of San Luis Obispo County, estimated that 4,000 to 5,000 students have already registered to vote. This figure, he said, is about the average final voter registration number for previous years.

And this year's estimate doesn't take into account all those students who wait until the last minute to register, or who are still planning to register on the last day, which happens to be TODAY.

If enough students register to vote, they could potentially become a powerful political group. It seems likely that the candidates would then take notice and begin to develop campaigns aimed at students.

Already, some candidates are claiming to be pro-student, or the students' choice. But stop and take a look beyond the slogans and buzz words that surround each candidate. Find out how they feel about the issues that concern you — growth, housing, college-community relations.

It's presumptuous for any candidate to even say he or she represents student interests, because that encompasses a diverse group of people. It's true that Cal Poly and Cuesta are known for their fairly homogeneous populations, but even people from similar backgrounds have different opinions about the issues in their lives.

Did you notice the four-week gap between the registration deadline Oct. 10 and the election Nov. 7? Not only does it allow time to process each voter's paper work, it also gives the voters themselves time to research candidates and issues and to decide how they want to vote.

Three seats on the City Council, including the mayor, are up for re-election next month. Since that's a majority of the seats available, this election could change the makeup of the council and affect the outcome of future issues.

The editorial board encourages you to take time to read the Mustang Daily and other newspapers for candidate profiles and vote intelligently.

And keep in mind the saying, "Talk is cheap." It's nice if candidates say they're pro-student, but where they stand on the issues is what really counts.

Letters to the Editor

S. Senate should organize students

Editor — Last week a student voiced a need for a student political party. While I strongly believe in the need for students organizing and playing a more important role in city politics, I do not feel this should be done by a self-appointed group.

Since the Student Senate is elected into office, it should be its responsibility to organize students, submit information on candidates it supports, organize its own candidate for City Council and so on. If a group on campus is interested in organizing a party, its action should go through the senate.

While I do agree with the need for political parties on campus, I also believe our senate should represent us on outside issues. This would help to polarize students as well as creating a more effective student political machine.

Reader looks out for self and others

Editor — I agree with Lisa Hunsaker's letter in the Mustang Daily Oct. 5 about everyone practicing more caution.

Pedestrians should look before they step off a curb whether they're on campus or not. They shouldn't walk in the bike lanes on the perimeter roads and in the green lane on Via Carta.

Pedestrians aren't inside a protective bubble.

Bicyclists should also be cautious. Bicyclists are required to obey the rules of the road just like car drivers. They should follow the flow of traffic and not cut corners or race through stop signs. Bicyclists are also not very protected, even while wearing a helmet.

Car drivers should just be watchful of everything around them. They shouldn't cut corners through a parking lot or to run a stop sign without even slowing down. They are the most protected, but they still have to obey the law.

Speaking as a pedestrian, bicyclist and car driver, I look out for my life and your own.

Poly kickers split pair of matches

Beats Fresno, loses to Sac.

By Adrian Hodgson
Staff Writer

After playing probably its best game of the season against Fresno State Thursday, the Cal Poly men's soccer team played probably its worst Sunday against Sacramento State.

Thursday's game, which was played in Fresno, was the Mustangs' third straight overtime game. After the Bulldogs scored on a penalty kick four minutes from the end of overtime, Cal Poly Head Coach Wolfgang Gartner thought his team's hopes of a tie or a win were lost.

But with less than a minute remaining, fullback David Hatcher sent a ball up the field. Gartner said Grant Landy, who had stayed upfield because he was too tired to help out on defense, was in perfect position to receive Hatcher's pass. He chested the ball down and turned towards goal. Landy slipped the ball under the goalkeeper as he got upended and salvaged a tie for a weary and sore Mustang team.

However, Sunday's story was completely different. Neither team deserved to win. The Mustangs were flat and tired and didn't get into their rhythm until the game was out of reach. The Hornets were very physical, three of their players getting yellow cards. But they were also lucky to come away with a 3-2 victory.

After a scoreless first half which saw two Mustang shots cleared off the goal line, it took just 11 minutes of the second half for the Hornets to take the lead.

Midfielder Mark Broers volleyed a partial clearance of a Sacramento corner kick past Poly goalkeeper Harry Crouch from 25 yards away. The Hornets had been applying relentless pressure for almost four minutes, and the normally rigid Mustang defense had failed to clear the ball a number of times.

Twenty minutes later, Sac. State added to its lead when John Hughes hit a free kick which deflected off a defender's foot.

Crouch, who appeared to have the initial kick covered, had no time to react to the ricochet and the ball flew into the top corner of the goal.

The Mustangs then began to spring to life — only to fall further behind.

Minutes after senior striker Poe Allan shot inches wide, Broers floated a cross from the left side, which Crouch mistimed, and forward Mark Baena headed in for a 3-0 Hornet lead.

Gartner said it is unfortunate Crouch made some mistakes

AMBER WISDOM/Mustang Daily

Cal Poly's Todd Henry kicks for a goal against the Sacramento Hornets in a close loss of 3-2.

because he has been "outstanding" for the team all year.

The Mustangs made the score more respectable with late goals by Matt Tillotson, who hit a rocket into the top left corner of the goal; and Todd Henry, whose play is improving with every game.

Gartner was disappointed with his team's second loss of the season, but said he may have been too ambitious when he was making the schedule.

(The Mustangs had played four games in eight days; three went into overtime).

"We were very flat, but (Sacramento) really didn't have clear chances," Gartner said. "Maybe we just didn't have the spark."

The Mustangs must now concentrate on their upcoming conference games.

They travel to Los Angeles to play Chapman College Wednesday before returning back to Cal Poly for a three game homestand, in which they will play CSU Northridge, CSU Dominguez Hills and CSU Bakersfield.

Poly signs 4,000-plus voters

Local activist pushes for more involvement

By Karen Kendzor
Staff Writer

Students have until midnight to join the 4,000 to 5,000 students already registered for the Nov. 7 election, said Ron Bearce, director of a political organization called Concerned Citizens of SLO County.

Concerned Citizens has 240 active members including both homeowners and renters. The group's main focus is to inform the public of pertinent political issues and to find solutions for problems that exist, said Bearce.

There are approximately 16,000 students enrolled at Cal Poly, said Bearce. Of those 16,000, about 3,000 live on campus and another 3,000 live outside city limits. This leaves approximately 11,000 students including those that attend Cuesta College, said Bearce.

A survey taken by Concerned Citizens two years ago revealed that about 40 percent of registered students were registered in their home towns.

Of the 4,000 to 5,000 students registered within city limits, there has been only a 10 percent voter turnout in past years, said Bearce.

"The City Council's planning policies for years have discriminated against a large sense of people, but they're people who tend not to vote," said Bearce. "If the people who don't support these individual council people and their policies turn out and vote, they'd overwhelmingly vote out those people."

Bearce said he believes there is definite discrimination against the majority of citizens in one form or another.

"Peg Pinard came in first (during the last city council election two years ago) with 18 percent of the vote," said Bearce. "And if you only get 18 percent of the vote, you only have to listen to that 18 percent of the people."

Bearce said people need to vote, especially students and renters with the majority of students voting for two council people and one mayoral candidate rather than splitting their vote among too many people.

Although Concerned Citizens would like to see students at the poles, Bearce said the group is not endorsing any candidates at this time.

According to Bearce, City Council members have at one time owned an average of $1 million in property each, a lot of which was rental property.

"I think people will turn out and vote when they find they have the landlord City Council," said Bearce.

Under mayoral candidate Allen K. Settle's name on county property tax records, seven pieces of property are listed. Settle said he has sold four of those property holdings. Moreover, Settle said he still owns three of the seven listings, two of which he uses as rentals to students.

Settle said his motion Tuesday night at the City Council meeting to limit the ordinance to six or more people will affect only 5 percent of the students.

"The City Council needs the students as much as the students need the councilmembers," said Settle.

Mayor Ron Dunin said he withheld his vote on the housing ordinance due to the advice of his lawyers.

"If the ordinance is passed, the ultimate result will be that property price will go up," said Dunin.

"Mayor Dunin has a few conflicts of interest, but he came in to office owning 16 units and will probably leave with 16 units," said Bearce.

According to Bearce, Concerned Citizens plans to file a "conflict of interest" complaint some time this week with the state's Fair Political Practice Commission. Ultimately, the group hopes to overturn the housing ordinance, said Bearce.

"It is a political conflict of interest for people to be buying and selling houses, voting for absolute building moratoriums that drive up housing prices, and then voting on rental issues while owning rentals," said Bearce.

Bearce said his group will be working with ASI officers, fraternities, sororities and clubs to educate students about pertinent issues before they step into voting booths.

ASI President Ricardo Echeverria said he is not familiar enough with Bearce's group to comment on whether ASI will work with it. He did, however, stress the importance of getting students out to the polls.

"A group that votes is a group that's listened to," said Echeverria.

Bearce said he has actively supported student issues and will continue to educate students throughout the campaign.

IMPERSONATORS

and four movies as Gable. He is grateful for his uncanny resemblance, but says it also has a negative impact on his acting career.

"It's sort of a double-edged sword. It gets me a lot of work, but then it also keeps me from getting a lot of jobs outside the role," he said.

Mills said she was discovered as a Mae West impersonator by accident, while singing in a club four years ago. "After my show I jokingly did some Mae West, and there was an agent in the audience who hired me — not as a singer, but as Mae West."

It's Mills' blond wig, long lashes and push-up bra that make her resemble Mae West; but her wink, rolled eyes and dry humour, full of characteristic sexual innuendo, make her a dead ringer for the legendary lecher. She introduces herself as "Mae West, the famous two-some," and rebuts every comment with a humorous sexual reference.

Unlike Mae and Clark, Rydbeck said that he has been doing Jack Benny impersonations since he was a child.

"When I was 11 years old I used to run straight home from school to watch the Jack Benny show, and I found myself starting to impersonate him. I looked in the mirror a few years later and said to myself, 'Hey, I look exactly like a 14-year-old Jack Benny,'" he said.

Rydbeck, who is an established actor outside of his role as Benny, having done parts in "Murder She Wrote," "Star Trek" and his own show for children, didn't use his impersonation of Benny professionally until his 39th birthday.

"I had a 'Jack Benny/Cheap' 39th birthday party and everyone dressed up as Jack Benny," he recalled. "A friend of mine at the party was a party planner, and he got me jobs doing Jack Benny at parties. And from there it's history."

Rydbeck said that learning the character has taken years of studying the personality, learning Benny's life history and subtle mannerisms. He even learned to scratch his way through a tune on the violin as Benny often did on his show — much to the dismay of reluctant audience members' ears.

All three impersonators stress the importance of learning everything they can about their characters.

"A lot of people we run into play games and try to catch us on things we don't know about the real celebrity," Daily (Gable) said.

"I've met probably 200 people in the industry who knew (Gable), worked for him or are related to him," he said. This means Daily and the others must continue studying their characters to know as much as possible about them in order to keep their credibility.

"We could do the characters in our sleep," said Rydbeck (Benny).

"All of us love the characters that we do," he said. "They're a part of us."

the Police Beat

Poly police report thefts, rolling car, illegal mag sales

• Three separate reports of illegal magazine subscription sales on campus were reported to Public Safety last week. The first report, at 3:19 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 4, was of sales on the Cal Poly Theatre lawn. At 6:46 p.m. the same day, sales were reported in Tenaya Hall. No one was caught in either incident. At 11:49 a.m. on Thursday, Oct. 5, Ann Whitacre, 22, was caught selling subscriptions in Sierra Madre dorm and was warned by a Public Safety officer that soliciting on campus is prohibited.

• A white Jetta was reported stolen from a spot in the G-1 parking lot on Friday, Oct. 6. Police determined it had just rolled to another spot, as it had also done the day before. No citations were issued.

their house and say 'Hey, this is what's going on. Let's go out and do something about it.' "

Yet Blaine doesn't want to be seen as an angry student.

"I'm not a militant student that just wants to get in there and screw things up," he says. "But, I think I'm someone who the students and the community can work through."

Blaine says that his business ownership has put him in touch with the needs of the business community as well.

"I think a big part of this community is small business owners, and I fit into that category, so I have some feel for what they're going through."

Aside from housing and business concerns, Blaine says he thinks the water shortage will be a main focus of the election.

Blaine says he thinks the answer to the water problem is to bring water in from other places, as proposed in the State Water Project, which he supports.

He says the town is going to grow, and the council should do something to prepare for that.

"I like this town small, too, but I'm just one person and I can't change it," he says. "It's going to grow."

He says the present council's desire to keep the town small has left them ill-prepared for the growth with respect to water.

Blaine also says Greek Row should be a high priority in the council's review of housing.

Though he would like to see it close to campus, he says a Greek Row out by the airport is "better than nothing."

He calls the recent rental regulation ordinance "a waste of time" and said it doesn't solve any of the problems.

"The ordinance itself isn't going to affect a whole lot of people but I think it's the principle of it that has everyone so upset," he says.

They (students) are being singled out because they don't have a say (on the council).

"It's just a lack of respect for what the students do for the community."

"This is the time. This is your only chance to get a candidate."

Deukmejian starts European trip, discusses Italian trade

ROME (AP) - California Gov. George Deukmejian discussed trade issues with Italian Premier Giulio Andreotti Monday at the start of an 11-day European trip.

The Republican governor said he told Andreotti that California hoped to increase trade with Italy and encourage Italian investment in the state.

"Primarily, of course, what we want to convey is that even though California looks out on the Pacific Ocean, and we are a gateway to the Pacific rim, we are constantly striving to increase our presence and our economic activity with the countries of Europe," Deukmejian said after the 25-minute meeting at the 16th-century Villa Madama used for state occasions.

"I pointed out to him (An-dreotti) that while it might be a surprise to many, California actually exports more of its products to the European countries than we do to Japan."

Deukmejian said he asked the Italian premier about the impact on trade of the internal market to be created by the 12 European Economic Community members after 1992. The countries plan to drop all barriers on movement of goods, capital and services among themselves.

"He hoped there would be extensive cooperation and that there would be increased opportunities that would result for a state like California," the governor said.

In 1988, California exported 911 million dollars in products to Italy, the state's 14th largest export market. Trade between Italy and California was more than 1.8 billion dollars in 1987, the last year for which such figures were available.

Deukmejian had lunch with members of Italy's main business federation, Confindustria.

His schedule also included a dinner Monday with the government council of the region including Rome.

Town mayor snaps over pit bull law

LIVINGSTON, Calif. (AP) — Lupe Garcia, mayor of one of the few California towns believed to have specifically banned pit bulldogs, is snapping at a new state law that leashes Livingston's ordinance.

Prodded by dog owners, the 1989 Legislature adopted and Gov. Deukmejian signed a bill that prevents local authorities from barring a specific breed of dog such as this northern Merced County community, Santa Clara County and Union City in the San Francisco Bay Area did with pit bulls. Other cities and counties concerned by reports of pit bulls mauling and sometimes killing children took a broader approach by banning vicious dogs, but not specifically pit bulls.

Garcia growled that the new state law fences in cities and counties that are merely trying to avert serious injuries or even deaths to their citizens.

"We have to do something to protect our people from pit bulls," Garcia said. "They're unpredictable, dangerous killers, and they shouldn't be on the street."

But an aide to state Sen. Art Torres, D-Los Angeles, who sponsored the bill that governs vicious dogs and banned ordinances as specific as Livingston's, contended that it's impossible to define a pit bull.

"There isn't a veterinarian in the world who can identify a pit bull," said Alan Gordon, staff counsel to Torres. "We've got no standard whatsoever for identifying a pit bull. It is not a breed recognized by the American Kennel Club, so there's no way you can legally define what is or what isn't a pit bull."

Livingston Police Chief Earl Wearin said he'd like to see a legislator "get bit by a pit bull, then see what they call it. Just because some kennel club doesn't recognize them doesn't mean they don't exist."

The Livingston ordinance was adopted after a citizen was mauled by a pit bull in March 1987. Wearin said there hasn't been a dog bite in Livingston since, and all of the pit bulls have been run out of town, so far as he knows. "Most of them just voluntarily got rid of their pit bulls," Wearin said.

Poly students open studio in SLO Ballroom dancing waltzes back into vogue

By Nadya Williams
Staff Writer

In between calculating differential equations and vectors, three enterprising Cal Poly engineering seniors opened a ballroom dance studio in downtown San Luis Obispo last August.

Charles Buffington, an electrical engineering student, owns and directs the Footnotes Dance Studio. Teana Chandler, an aeronautical engineering student, and Oscar Siguenza, also an electrical engineering student, are part-time instructors.

What's the engineering connection?

"Dancing is a wonderful way to relax from mental fatigue," said owner Buffington. "And these days it has become an increasingly important part of the social and business world."

Ballroom dancing has had a tremendous upsurge in popularity in the last three to four years, Buffington said, especially among the "yuppie" crowd.

"I think two of the main catalysts were the movies 'Dirty Dancing' and 'Salsa,'" he said.

Buffington, 25, has an extensive background in dance, starting in high school with jazz and ballet classes. For the past seven years he has taught ballroom and Latin dance throughout Southern California, and in 1988 he won the Fred Astaire National Championship.

"The best way to compete and to survive is to open your own studio," he said. "Dancing is not only fun, it can be lucrative as well."

About a dozen major dance competitions are held every year on the West Coast alone, he said.

Instructor Teana Chandler got the ballroom bug through the social dance classes offered at Cal Poly.

"I took five quarters in a row — only beginning ballroom is offered here," she said. "So when Charles opened his studio, I was delighted at the chance to teach and learn more myself."

Moonja Suhr, Cal Poly's long-time dance instructor, agrees the university does not fill student demands.

"We always have waiting lists for the social dance classes," she said. "There is just not enough studio space on campus to meet our needs."

Chandler said more single men than women are learning to dance at his studio.

"Ballroom dance is really big on some college campuses," he said. "At Brigham Young University in Utah, for example, more than half the students take (dance) classes."

Chandler said ballroom dancing also seem to appeal to professional people.

"Besides the usual seniors, we have quite a few people from Diablo Canyon, young working people in general, some students and even professors," Chandler said.

Instructors at Footnotes teach such dances as the waltz, rhumba, mambo, tango, samba, bolero, salsa and paso doble.

The studio offers three types of dance settings: group classes, private classes and the once-a-week dance socials, which are open to anyone, he said.

Footnotes is currently looking to hire three more instructors, Buffington said. Students are preferred, and extensive training will be included.

UCSF medical researchers garner Nobel Prize

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A jubilant J. Michael Bishop and Harold E. Varmus celebrated their Nobel Prize in medicine Monday with champagne, orange juice and box seats at the fifth game of the National League baseball playoffs.

Bishop described his feelings about winning the award as "surreal," while Varmus said it was "frightening" because it was delivered by his 16-year-old son who received the news by telephone at 4 a.m.

"We just assumed one of the grandparents had some trouble, so we were frightened," he said about hearing the pre-dawn phone ringing.

But he heard good news instead, and by mid-morning the pair managed to snare previously elusive tickets to Candlestick Park to watch their favorites, the San Francisco Giants, go against the Chicago Cubs in hopes of winning the National League pennant, baseball's version of the Nobel Prize.

The 50-member Nobel Assembly of the Karolinska Institute, Sweden's largest and oldest medical university, cited Bishop and Varmus for their discovery of the cellular origin of retroviral oncogenes.

In 1976, Bishop and Varmus "published the remarkable conclusion that the oncogene in the virus did not represent a true viral gene, but instead was a normal cellular gene," the citation said.

That is, cancer viruses cause cancer with the help of animal genes that have become incorporated into the viruses. The animal genes normally help control the regular growth of cells. But when the genes become part of viruses, they can trigger the uncontrolled cell growth that typifies cancer tumors.

The research helped scientists understand how cancer begins, and it "widened our insight into the complicated signal systems which govern the normal growth of cells," the assembly said.

Varmus called the research by him and Bishop a "cornerstone in understanding the genetic mosaic of cancer."

"The basic idea that we helped establish is that cancer has its origins in genes that normally do us some good. But after they become abnormal through mutation, they cause a role in cancer."

Bishop and Varmus were optimistic about the practical applications of their work, how it helps understand the nature of cancer and possibly some aspects of the AIDS virus. But they were cautious about forecasting a cancer cure in the foreseeable future.

"This is just another step in what's a long journey..." Bishop said. "It's very difficult to predict when a full view of the cancer cell will be at hand."

The researchers shared their feelings of their work in a news conference. "We all stand on the shoulders of those who came before us," Varnus said.
