Poly Royal board selects school alum as honored guest

Community, university work cited

By Ann Slaughter
Staff Writer

Phyllis Davies, a Cal Poly alumna committed to helping people help themselves, will be the honored guest at the 58th annual Poly Royal on April 27 and 28 at Cal Poly.

Davies was selected by the Poly Royal Board because of her involvement with the university and community.

She graduated from Cal Poly in 1966 with honors and earned a bachelor's degree in agricultural business management. She frequently returns to Cal Poly to speak on issues such as parenting, grief, international agriculture development and world hunger.

She was surprised to learn she was selected to be this year's honored guest.

"I don't think of myself in those terms," Davies said. "I'm just doing what I need to do."

She will make a short presentation at the opening ceremonies on April 27 at 10 a.m.

The theme of her presentation will be "making a difference in the world and how you do that," she said. "How students can capture an image

Cal Poly student found dead following countywide search

Journalism senior had been missing since last Thursday

By Laura Fleischer
Editorial Staff

Cal Poly journalism senior Jay Garner, who had been missing since last Thursday, was found dead on Monday at about 5:30 p.m., according to San Luis Obispo police.

The San Luis Obispo Police Department issued a statement Tuesday at about 5 p.m. stating that a passerby on Highway 166 noticed a vehicle at the bottom of a cliff Monday 15 miles northeast of Santa Maria. The California Highway Patrol and the San Luis Obispo County Sheriff's Department went to the scene and identified the car as being Garner's.

A deceased male was discovered inside the vehicle, the report said, and Bill Wammock, deputy coroner for the county, said officials positively identified the victim as Garner, age 24, on Tuesday morning.

Jay Garner

Garner, the sports editor for Mustang Daily, was reported last seen Thursday at about 3 p.m. by his co-workers, according to Colleen Kevany, the initial investigator on the case. Garner said he was going to try to add a class and would be back at 4:30 p.m.

When he failed to return and did not show up for work Friday, co-workers notified his parents, Ed and Kathy Garner of San Luis Obispo.

The discovery of Garner's vehicle ended a countywide search for Garner that began after his parents filed a missing person report on their son with SLOPD at about 3 p.m. Friday.

An autopsy was conducted on Tuesday, and the SLOPD report stated the cause of death was determined to be the result of injuries sustained when Garner's vehicle went over the cliff. The report also stated that evidence did not support a traffic accident and instead pointed to the possibility that Garner deliberately drove his car off the road.

Garner's father, a mechanical engineering professor at Cal Poly, said during the course of the investigation an undated suicide note was found in a file on his son's personal computer by one of Garner's roommates.

Garner's father added that his son has suffered from extreme anxiety and depression for the past four to five years, had been under medical treatment for his condition and made two suicide

Proposition 121 could bring construction funds to Cal Poly if voters give approval

By Monica Ortiz
Special to the Daily

Though unknown to many students, Proposition 121 on the June ballot has a direct effect on Cal Poly and the construction of its facilities.

Proposition 121, the "Higher Education Facilities Bond Act," is a general obligation bond measure that will equally divide $450 million between the University of California, the California State University and the community college systems.

If the proposition passes in June, Cal Poly will receive nearly $7.8 million from the $150 million allocated to the CSU system.

This money will be divided among the four top priority Cal Poly projects: The construction of the Physical Education/Recreational Sports facility, and the planning of the new Performing Arts Center, the Poultry Science Unit, and the Dairy Science II Unit.

Evaluations for transfer students delayed

Backlog woes due to staffers helping on other projects

By Caroline E. Pinola
Staff Writer

Recent Cal Poly transfers may find themselves a little confused about which classes to add and drop this quarter due to the transfer evaluations backlog.

Transfer students are not receiving their evaluations before they register for their first quarter, and are being advised to play it safe until they can be completed.

"The best advice that we can offer (transfer) students is simply to ask them to take courses they are definitely sure about, ones that they know they haven't already had similar material in," said Paula Ringer, office supervisor for the evaluations office.

Ringer said the evaluations office was called on to help with the implementation of the on-line computing system, OASIS, and this has taken up a great deal of staff time that is normally used to complete transfer evaluations on time.

OASIS was implemented in the fall of 1987, and the evaluations

The newspaper for Cal Poly. Since 1916.

Get more tools in your toolbox

By Dave Cox

Consider for a moment why you are here. Perhaps the bottom line is to get a piece of paper that will get you more money in the "real world." Or maybe you are one of those more altruistic persons that is here simply for the "enhancement of knowledge" that can, with a bit of effort, be gleaned from the system.

The people that tell us what classes to take for the knowledge that we are supposed to possess by the time that we graduate from here have written up these nice little sheets that spell out our entire course load for our college lives.

Certainly, the majority of the courses are in our major, or support courses that somehow relate directly to our future. But there are always a few of those General Education courses that, we are told, are supposed to make us more rounded in our knowledge; to make us more whole individuals.

Much of the time we forget that these courses are intended to benefit us, and we perceive them only as an inconvenience. With this in mind, we register for the courses with disdain or even genuine disgust.

We take them and do only as much homework and studying as we deem necessary to get the grade out of the class that we want. We might even take the class credit/no-credit, so that it is even less of an inconvenience to our admittedly busy schedules.

So we do some of the work, learn just what we need to get by and because we don't remember why it is important, we forget it all on the way out of the final. Thus it is that Keensian Economy, Baroque Art, Napoleonic Wars and Beginning Russian is lost from us forever.

Certainly in a job with a large corporation there would be little need for you to do anything but what you were trained for. So if you see that as your future, you are generally safe in a limited field of knowledge. But what happens when your boss wants to find out what makes you tick — what your interests are outside of work?

The boss asks you something about if you have any hobbies — what you do for fun. Then she starts talking about how much she enjoys Baroque Art. The word is familiar. Wasn't there some general education class that you took a few years ago that you just skimmed by? She asks if you do anything with your hands — painting or wood working. And what do you say?

Consider this. We are in school to build our knowledge and experiences, to fill our mental "toolbox" with neat new "tools" for specific tasks. Doesn't it make sense that the more tools you have, the more valuable you will be to a company and the more ready you will be for the real world?

General education gives us a little more to blend into the world with; a few more topics that, if we remember at least some of the material, we can feign understanding on. Our horizons are somewhat broadened, our lives are slightly enriched, and another tool or two is added.

But what about doing things that make you a better, more rounded person. Not because they are on your required course list, but rather because they develop your skills even further. Craft classes, for example are not only an extremely valuable way of adding to your arsenal of skills, but also can be a great deal of fun.

And in addition to the above benefits, these classes can be a great way to develop muscular coordination, creative talents and even mingle with other people not too incredibly (and in some cases very incredibly) different from yourself.

In memory of a friend

The Mustang Daily editorial staff would like to express our deep sense of loss over the death of fellow editor Jay Garner. We will always remember Jay as a good-natured friend and a hard-working reporter. It is a real tragedy that an individual who brought such joy to those around him would be plagued by such sadness that he would take his own life.

We would especially like to offer our most heartfelt sympathies to Jay's family. We can only imagine what you must be going through. Our thoughts and prayers are with you.

Anti-smoking ads long overdue

California will be the first state to launch a massive anti-smoking campaign using money from cigarette taxes. The program will target, among other groups, children aged six to 14. Massive media campaigns to stop drug use have ignored the equally serious problem of kids taking up smoking. Smoking kills an estimated 30,000 Californians each year, yet hundreds of possibly ill-informed children still take up the deadly habit everyday. One can't walk through Farmer's Market on a Thursday night without wading through the second-hand smoke from high school kids trying to be "cool." It was the tobacco industry that put the idea into their young minds, and it is high time our government acted to change those misperceptions. The legislature is to be applauded for this campaign that is long overdue.

Letters to the Editor

Drug legalization to solve problems

I read the commentary on the war on drugs. First I want to comment that I am in favor of the total legalization of all drugs. I am tired of watching all of our civil rights erode because of this so-called war. It is man's natural condition to want to change his states of consciousness and that's what drugs do. Why are we so worried about the illegal drugs? According to a report by the National Institute on Drug Abuse; heroin, cocaine, and marijuana account for a combined 6,000 deaths a year, while alcohol and tobacco kill 470,000 people a year.

Also, since our nation is growing very concerned over the condition of our environment, I felt it important to pass some information on to you. While everyone knows that most of our pollution comes from the manufacture and use of petrochemicals, few know that there is a natural substitute that can replace many of these petrochemicals. It is the fastest growing biomass on the planet and grows wild in all 50 states. It can be used to make cloth, food, fiber, paper, paints, varnishes, plastics, and fuel. This unique plant is called hemp, also known as marijuana. Unfortunately, it was outlawed in 1937 after the petrochemical industry helped railroad the laws' passage through Congress with little debate.

In 1916, the Department of Agriculture released a study of hemp paper. The report stated that an acre of hemp, in annual rotation over a 20-year period, would produce as much pulp for paper as 4.1 acres of trees over the same time period. Since the report was published, over half the planet has been deforested to make paper from trees!

The legalization of drugs can reduce crime by taking the profit motive out of selling drugs, give the government a new source of income through taxes, give true "freedom of choice" back to Americans, give struggling farmers a new crop with which they can hopefully succeed, and help save the environment. So what are we waiting for? It is time for legalization before the war on drugs takes away all of our civil rights and destroys the planet.

Qualifications not just pretty faces

It's difficult to believe that on a competitive campus, such as Cal Poly, there are hundreds of campaign signs, posters, and stickers with only the names and smiling faces of the candidates. This may help me recognize a candidate's wholesome face and name, but tells me nothing of who the candidate really is. Signs should have a brief list of goals, experience, and involved activities in order to help Poly students vote for the best qualified candidate, not the candidate with the prettiest face and most interesting name.

S.C. man challenges state religion law by running for governor

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A 47-year-old mathematics professor says he wants to run for governor, even though he is not allowed to according to South Carolina law.

Herb Silverman, a College of Charleston professor, says he wants to challenge Article IV of the state constitution, which prohibits candidates from seeking the governor's office if they deny "the existence of the Supreme Being."

"It's primarily to challenge the fact that technically I'm not allowed to run for governor," Silverman said from his office at the University of California at Davis, where he is on a research sabbatical.

"As a civil rights issue, as far as I'm concerned, that's unfair," he said.

"I am an atheist and feel that atheists should have the right to run for governor as all citizens."

Silverman said he would be "very surprised" if he won and "would probably ask for a recount."

Since South Carolina Republicans already have a probable candidate — Gov. Carroll

A. Campbell Jr. — and the state Democrats have not welcomed him, Silverman is investigating ways to get on the ballot, possibly as a United Citizens Party candidate.

He said he discussed the constitutionality of Article IV with representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union and decided that "the best way to change the law would be to challenge it. And to do that, it would be necessary to run for governor."

Silverman's political background is limited to service as the speaker of the faculty at the College of Charleston.

"I do care about the issues and I'm going to be campaigning on the issues. To me, winning would be to help change the minds of a lot of people concerning the issues," he said.

"This is not an anti-religion campaign — I view it as a civil rights issue."

Silverman, a Philadelphia native, joined the College of Charleston faculty in 1976 after receiving his undergraduate degree from Temple University and his doctorate in math at Syracuse University.

attempts prior to his death.

Last quarter, Garner wrote a two-part, in-depth article on the misconceptions surrounding mental illness for Mustang Daily. In one part, entitled "A struggle with suicide..." Garner actually told his own personal story, his father said, although this was not stated in the story itself.

Garner's parents issued a statement Tuesday thanking everyone for their help in the search for their son.

"We've been overwhelmed with everyone's generosity and concern," they said. "Jay was a wonderful son and brother who brought a lot of joy and laughter into our life; he was a loving, considerate and gentle person. We will miss him very much."

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Ed Garner also thanked members of the Cal Poly community for looking for their son and for placing electric banners on the UNIX computer system on campus that asked people to search for Garner.

"A lot of people in the campus community helped us a great deal in the last two or three days," Ed Garner said. "There was a lot of personal help from people on campus."

Kathy Garner said that her son had switched from being a mechanical engineering major to a journalism major and enjoyed his work on the Mustang Daily.

"He was happy as a journalism major," Garner's mother said. "He was really enjoying his journalism classes and looked forward to being the sports editor."

Garner had been a writer for the Mustang Daily since last June, first as a stringer for the Summer Mustang last year and then as a sports reporter during the fall and winter quarters. In March, Garner was selected as the sports editor for this quarter.

During Garner's two quarters as a sports writer, he worked closely with sports editor Rob Lorenz, who said that Garner was the best sports reporter who ever wrote for him.

"I probably learned more from him about writing than he did from me about editing," Lorenz said. "He was a big reason the sports section was so good this year; he was always willing to go the extra mile to make a story complete."

Ed Hein, a professor in the journalism department at Cal Poly and adviser to the Mustang Daily, worked with Garner during his time on staff.

"The death of Jay Garner is a tremendous loss for Mustang Daily and for the journalism department," he said. "We've lost one of our best reporters and editors. Jay was an inspiration to all of us, and he will be sorely missed."

The journalism department has set up a scholarship fund in Garner's name. Donations are being accepted; checks may be made payable to Cal Poly Foundation and sent to the Journalism Department, Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, Calif. 93407.

Nishan Havandjian, journalism department head, said the award will be given to qualified journalism majors with a news-editorial concentration who are planning careers in print journalism.

"The establishment of the memorial fund would be an appropriate tribute to a student who, by all accounts, embodied the high ideals and standards of print journalism," he said.

Garner was a long-time resident of San Luis Obispo and graduated from San Luis Obispo High School in 1984, where he ran track.

He was also a member of the Waterski Club for part of the time he was a student at Cal Poly.

Garner has two sisters: Patti, 22, and Susan, 11.

The family has announced a memorial service to be held for Garner on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Old Mission Hall in San Luis Obispo.

Two men accused of slaying UC student make first appearance in Richmond court

RICHMOND, Calif. (AP) — Two men accused in the kidnap, rape and murder of a University of California student made their first appearance before a judge Tuesday in a courtroom cleared of all other prisoners.

Julian Covington, 20, of Hawthorne in Los Angeles County, and Jamal Fountain, 19, of Richmond, stood before Bay Municipal Court Judge Bessie Dreibelbis as she read nine separate charges stemming from the slaying of Sally Ann Mayne, 20.

Mayne, a popular UC Berkeley student and athlete, vanished March 10 after playing hockey at an ice rink in Berkeley. Her body was found the next morning at Point Isabel Regional Park near Richmond. She had been shot once in the head.

Deputy Public Defender Bill Egan said his office could not represent two defendants in the same case because there would be a conflict of interest. He entered a plea of innocent for Covington.

The judge ordered Fountain to return later at which time she is expected to appoint a private attorney to represent him.

The two men were in jail in Marin County when they were arrested in the Mayne slaying last week. They were being held on charges of attempting to rob four women in a car in Sausalito nine days after Mayne's body was found.

Bernstein said that requests for bond money are aimed at particular phases of the planning and construction of facilities.

"We have four projects and there's a whole list of projects out," said Bernstein. "Each year, the university requests money for particular projects and that's all been figured out over umpteen years."

Bernstein said that there are a series of steps to the construction of a new facility. With every step the university will go back to the state system and make new fund requests for the planning, construction or equipping of the facilities, each being a separate process.

Director of Facilities Administration Doug Gerard likened bonds to mortgaging a home.

"The bond is essentially the same idea, except rather than going to a bank and borrowing, in this case $450 million... banks normally don't have that kind of money," said Gerard. "So what they do, the banks will sell to a range of other banks or other investors a portion of that money. What the bank does is sell a bond. The bank agrees to loan the system $450 million."

Gerard said that the State of California guarantees the repayment of the loan and is known to have a good rating among creditors and a fairly strong economy.

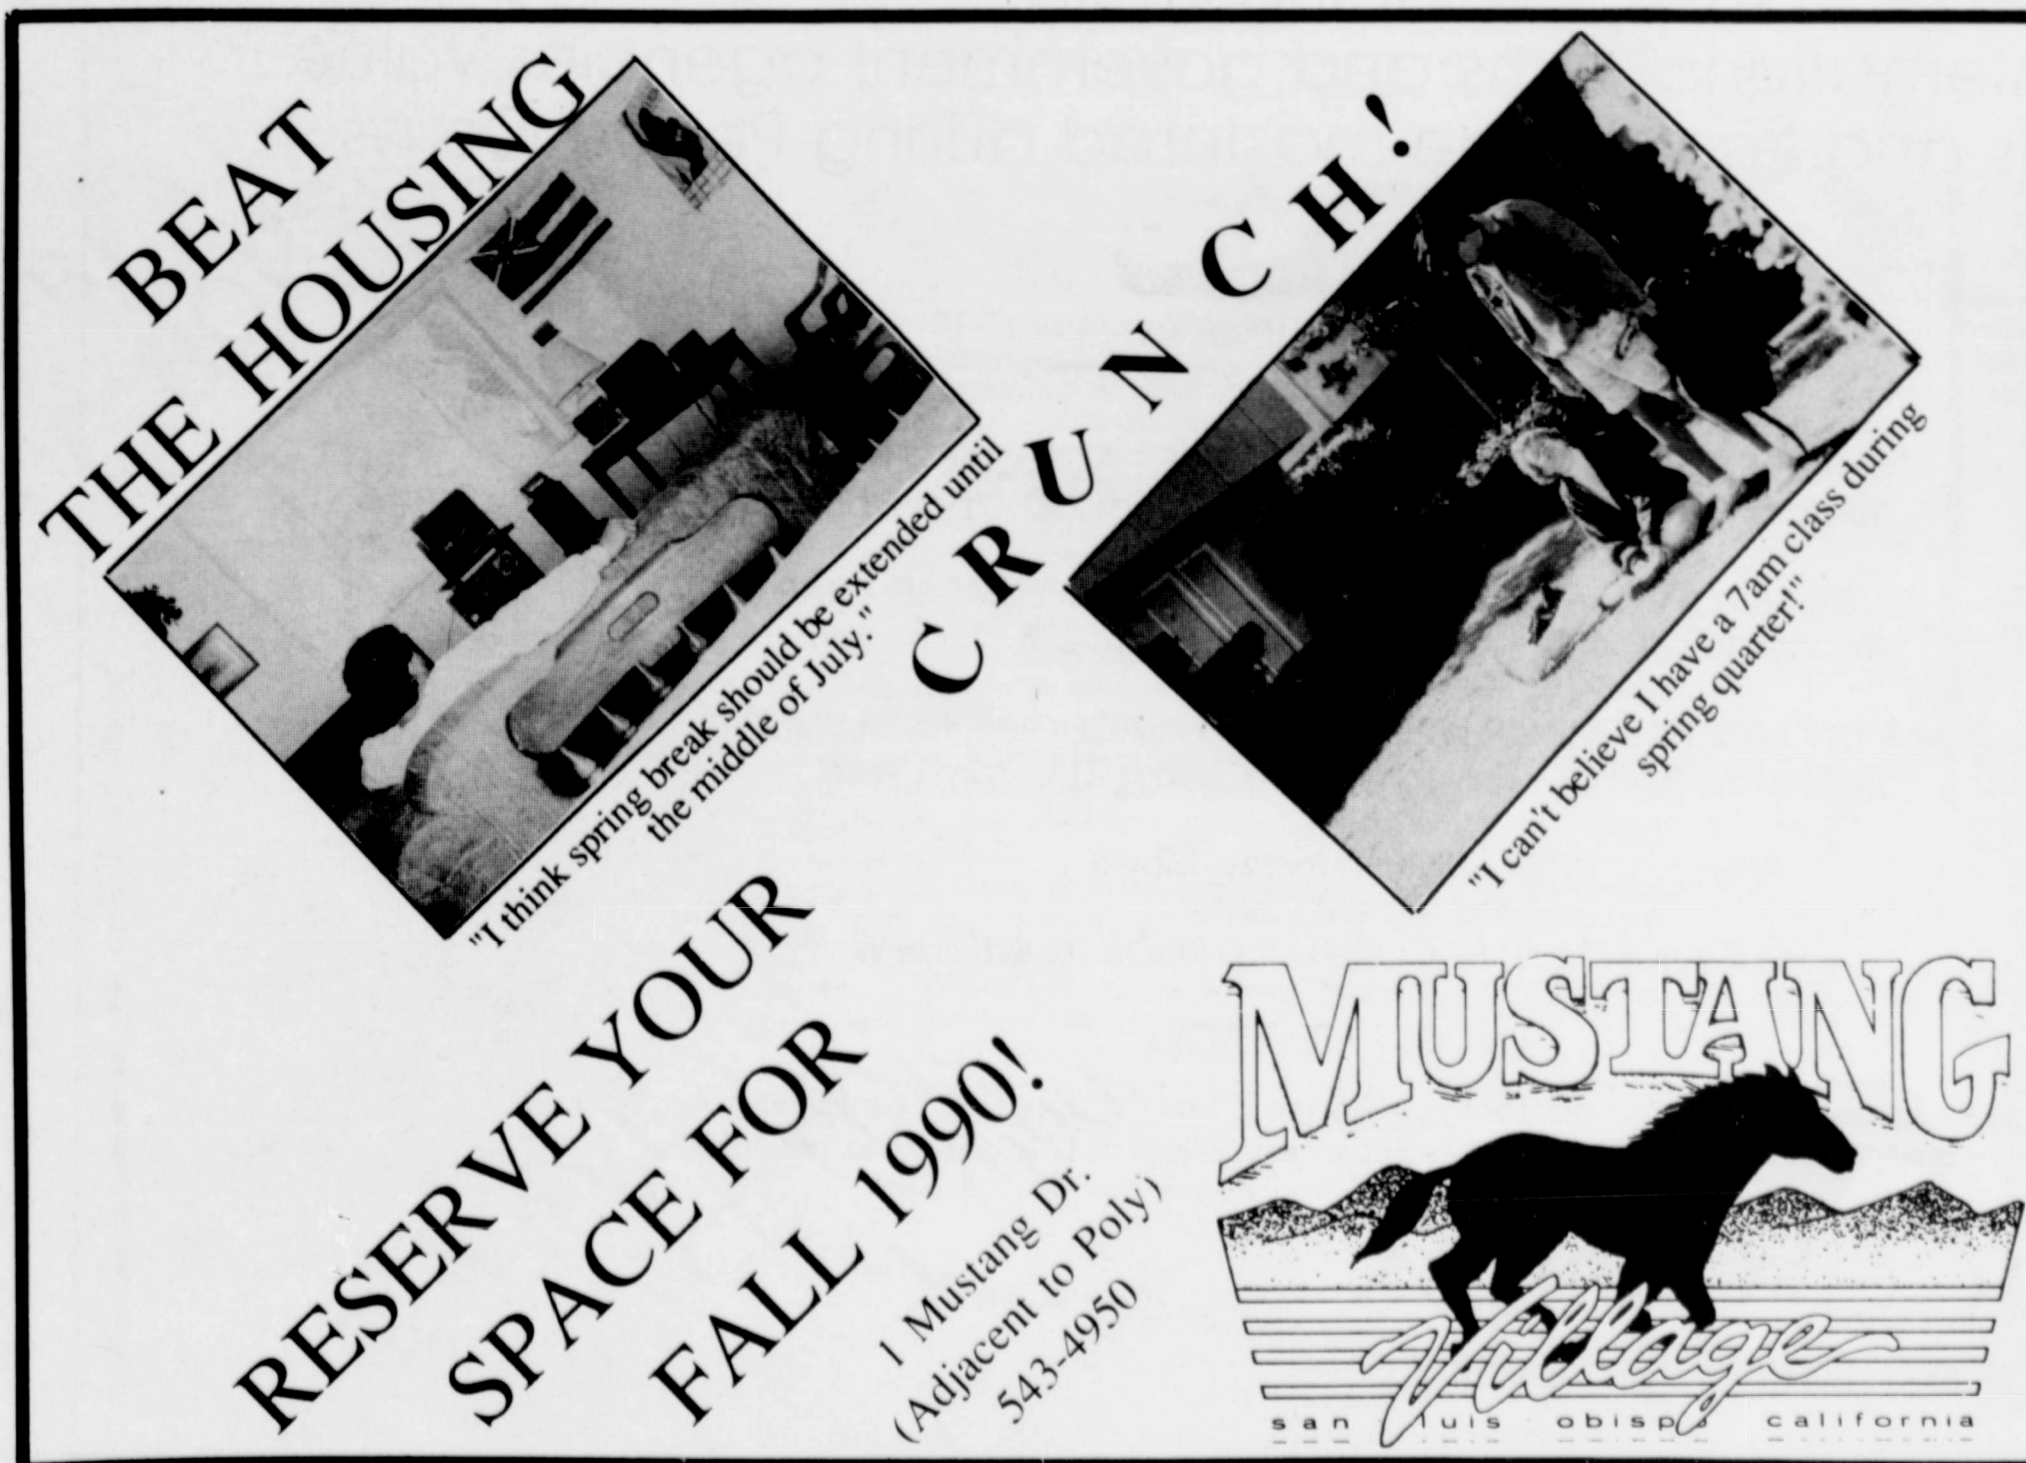

One drawback is that there is no guarantee that the proposition will pass. Gerard said the university systems are optimistic that it will pass, but that there are also no alternative sources of money now being considered.

"We don't know what would happen if the bond issues don't pass," said Gerard. "We'd have to re-look very carefully as to why the bond issue didn't pass."

Gerard said that if bond money is the preferred way to attain funds by state analysts, then the same projects may be requesting money again on a second ballot to be held on November.

"We have an information campaign that we need to get out," said Gerard. "And as long as California is the growing and viable state that it is... I think there is the desire out there to help."

There are two main purposes for the bond measures. One is to help the various higher education systems accommodate rising enrollments as more and more Californians reach college age. Another is to improve the safety of older buildings by bringing them up to environmental safety standards.

Amnesty International

A Flicker of Hope

By Patty
Hayes

"For years I was held in a tiny cell. My only human contact was with my torturers ... My only company were the cockroaches and mice ... On Christmas Eve the door to my cell opened, and the guard tossed in a crumpled piece of paper. It said, 'Take heart. The world knows you're alive. We're with you. Regards, Monica, Amnesty International.' That letter saved my life."

Those are the words of a released prisoner of conscience from Paraguay. The letter he received is one of thousands written by members of Amnesty International, hoping to free those who they believe have been wrongly imprisoned.

"It's the power of the pen," said Mark Bridgeford, chair of the tabling and outreach committees for Cal Poly's Amnesty International.

Amnesty's letter-writing is probably its most well-known and most effective activity. Members write letters to governmental officials concerning the three main goals of Amnesty International.

The first of these goals is the release of all prisoners of conscience. They are people who are imprisoned for their beliefs, race, gender or religion and have not used or advocated violence. The second goal is fair and speedy trials for all political prisoners. The third is to achieve an end to torture and executions in all cases. A research staff at the organization's head-

in London, England, collects informapeople who are believed to be conscience, political prisoners or on

They search newspapers, governmental reports and letters from prisoners and their family members "so they're pretty sure of what happened," Bridgeford said.

Amnesty groups are sent an Urgent Action sheet asking them to write letters on behalf of a particular prisoner. The letters are usually sent to the head(s) of state of the country holding that prisoner.

"The idea is to bombard the guy with letters," Bridgeford said. The letters should be "written in a diplomatic sense, asking for a report and requesting immediate release."

The diplomatic manner of the letters is to show that Amnesty is not necessarily accusing the government of wrongdoing, but is informed, concerned and determined to see a release, he said.

Bridgeford, a political science sophomore, said he was surprised that the letters really are effective. Often it is the official's fear of damaging his reputation that results in the release of a prisoner of conscience, he said.

"Amnesty is a non-political group," Bridgeford said. "We are just for human rights, but that often ends up working toward democracy."

Amnesty has taken some criticism for being so "non-political." Since the organization refuses to support any sort of violence or advocacy of violent acts, there are many unjustly imprisoned people who they overlook.

One such prisoner was recently-freed South African activist Nelson Mandela. Mandela, who was imprisoned for 27 years, has advocated violent uprising against the oppressive government.

Sue Davis, president of Amnesty's San Luis Obispo group, said that Amnesty has "sort of a Gandhian principle" in regard to violence.

"We can't say, 'this person's really a good person — he just acted like a thug,'" she said.

"There's enough work for us without those cases."

Amnesty members sometimes do write letters on behalf of a prisoner when it is unclear if the prisoner advocated violence or not. For such "investigative cases" members write letters but do not include Amnesty International in the

Stockton truck driver killed in train collision possibly blinded by fog

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blinding fog may have caused a train-truck crash near Stockton that killed three people shortly before Christmas, according to just-released federal documents.

The papers of federal investigators include testimony that the San Joaquin Valley's dangerous fog cut visibility to near zero on Dec. 19, the day David Haskell, 47, drove into the path of an Amtrak train. The impact killed the trucker, the train engineer and assistant engineer.

However, Edward Dobranetski, chief National Transportation Safety Board investigator, emphasized that the agency has not definitely blamed the crash on the fog.

"There is no conclusion yet," he said.

Medical reports in the documents released Monday show that neither engineer Edward McMillon, 48, or assistant engineer Michael Passarella, 40, had any drugs or alcohol in their systems.

Radio transcripts in the released papers show a crew member's reaction.

Shortly before the crash, a member of the crew said the train was cleared to leave Stockton. The next radio log entrance came at 9:37 a.m.

"Amtrak 708, emergency, emergency, emergency. Amtrak 708, emergency, emergency, emergency," a voice said.

Ten seconds passed, followed by: "Go ahead 708."

Five more seconds passed, then: "We're derailed. Our train is turned over. There's a fire. We've just struck a vehicle. I'll find out if we're all right or OK."

19-foot statues of Disney dwarfs are unveiled in L.A.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Some residents were happy, others grumpy about Dopey's rise to the top at the new Walt Disney Co. headquarters.

Disney officials on Monday unveiled giant statues of the Seven Dwarfs, made to look as if they are holding up the roof of the five-story building.

Happy, Grumpy, Sleepy, Sneezy, Dopey, Bashful and Doc each stand 19 feet tall. They'd been kept under wraps for more than three months.

Within hours, tourists began stopping to take pictures of the dwarfs, who starred with Snow White in the 1937 animated classic.

"We have Stone Mountain but these are cuter," said Diane Ward, 28, a Georgia native who stopped to look with her 12-year-old nephew as they made their way to visit the NBC Studios.

Some gazers were puzzled.

"How can you call it a dwarf if it's 20 feet tall?" asked Randy Garhan, 41, as he sat in the Pogo Club across the street.

of moving forward and accomplishing something toward a better world."

Working with the School of Agriculture, Davies has been instrumental in obtaining major donations for the school.

She is the author of "Grief: Climb Toward Understanding." She turned to writing to express her grief for the loss of her 13-year-old son, Derek, who died in a midair collision near San Luis Obispo in August 1984. It is a story of how she turned grief into growth.

Davies is a national co-chairman of volunteers for World Neighbors, a non-profit organization working to eliminate hunger, disease and poverty in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

She has led international development study and evaluation tours to many areas of the Third World, including Peru, Bolivia, Indonesia and Honduras. Davies will be making her fourth trip to Honduras in August.

She has had the opportunity to share this experience with her family.

"Through the experience with a global vision it's very special and unique to have youngsters growing up with a real sense of their connection to not only their own nation, but the Third World countries," she said.

Davies co-founded the San Luis Obispo County Compassionate Friends, a support group which helps parents deal with the loss of a child. With her husband, Bill, they find helping people through a difficult time a rewarding experience, she said.

Davies is a member of the National Speakers Association and Toastmasters International. She is also a Hospice volunteer and has been involved with efforts to find affordable housing for students, the disabled and those afflicted by mental illness.

She and her husband co-own the Davies Co. Inc., a property management company. They live on a farm near San Luis Obispo.

Want a job with great pay, great benefits and a low stress level?

Well, Mustang Daily isn't for you, then.

We are, however, looking for prospective Editor-in-Chief candidates for next academic year. They need not be journalism majors, but should have some newspaper experience (including copy editing abilities and familiarity with Associated Press style), plus good management qualities. It does pay, by the way (just not a lot).

To apply, submit a resume, clips of recent work, and a cover letter to Doug DiFranco, Editor, Mustang Daily, Graphic Arts 226, Cal Poly University. Call 756-1143 for more details (ask for Doug).

Mustangs get comeback win over Westmont, get a few days hiatus

By Rob Brockmeyer
Staff Writer

To find a solution to the Cal Poly baseball team's season-long woes, head coach Steve McFarland will give his team a couple of days off to regroup.

"I'm not satisfied with the way we're playing," said McFarland Monday. "We need to take a fresh look at why we're committing so many mistakes."

He said he will use the time before the next game on April 17 to re-examine his pitching staff.

"We don't have the pitching to rely on, so we dig ourselves into holes early in games," said McFarland.

That was exactly the case against Westmont College Monday night at Sinsheimer Stadium. Under a full moon, the Mustangs charged back from a 6-2 deficit in the third to win 9-8.

The Warriors batted around in the first and tagged Mustang starter Chris Romero for four runs on five hits. Westmont added two more and led 7-3 through 5½ innings.

In the bottom of the fifth, Cal Poly struck back, scoring two runs on no hits. With one out, Sean Harper grounded home Gerald Rucker, who had reached on an error. Harper later scored on a passed ball, but was hurt when he was spiked during a collision at home plate with pitcher John Lester. He received five stitches on his right leg, McFarland said, but is expected to return next week.

The Mustangs scored three more in the seventh and eighth innings, setting the stage for the ninth.

Westmont rightfielder Mike Kinnaman botched Rucker's lead-off single, enabling Rucker to take second. Reliever Mark Mattingly retired the next two, but intentionally walked Drew Herron. Doug Noce then ended the game with a RBI-single to left-center, scoring Rucker.

"Doug is the guy that you want up there in that kind of situation," said McFarland. "He waited patiently for his pitch and stroked it for the game-winner."

Senior reliever Dennis Reed picked up the win, while Mattingly suffered the loss.

Noce, Rucker and Phillip James each tallied three hits. Harper knocked in two runs, while Herron had one RBI and a double.

Cal Poly improved their overall record to 17-22 and 8-10 in the California Collegiate Athletic Association.

With 13 games remaining, McFarland said it would take almost a miracle for the Mustangs to reach the playoffs.

"It doesn't look like we will make the playoffs unless we get red hot," said McFarland. "Northridge, Riverside and Chapman College need to fall flat on their faces before we have a chance."

"But things are never for sure," he said. "Anything can happen."

Cal Poly's next game is at Fresno State on April 17.

Crew

Cal Poly rows well at San Diego regatta

The Cal Poly crew team competed in the San Diego Crew Classic over the past weekend, and did well in several classes of racing against stiff competition.

In the men's varsity eight-man race, the team placed third in its heat which qualified it for the Cal Cup finals. Poly placed sixth in the final race, but also qualified for the Cal-Visitors Challenge petite race, which is a secondary race for those who didn't place in the top three. The Mustangs placed second in the race behind San Diego State University.

The women's varsity eight-person team placed second in its heat behind Mills College, which qualified it for the final, where the team placed fifth.

In the lightweight novice men's eight race, there was only a final. Cal Poly placed third behind UC Berkeley and UC Davis.

The novice women's eight got squeezed into sixth place by one second, falling just short of overtaking Sacramento State and Santa Clara University.

Crew club President Ann Nebiker said that she was pleased with the results.

"Both of our varsity eights in the Cal Cup made their finals for the first time," she said, "and all of our crews showed they were very competitive."

letter, Davis said.

Amnesty chooses to support a prisoner only after two reports document that the person has not been involved in violent action.

The Rev. T.S. Farisani, a South African exile now teaching at a Lutheran seminary in Berkeley, supports Amnesty despite their lack of involvement in the Mandela case.

"There are many ways of fighting evil," Farisani said. "Organizations make different means to pursue their goals. Amnesty International has done very good works along their means."

Mandela is not an egotistical person, he said. "He would appreciate the wonderful work of Amnesty" in cases other than his own, Farisani said.

Amnesty should stick to its original intention of supporting only non-violent prisoners, Farisani said.

After a prisoner is determined non-violent, the information on the individual case is sent to a local group in one of over 150 countries. The local group, like the one in San Luis Obispo, adopts the prisoner and will write letters continually until release or a change of status is reported.

Missing in Liberia

"Some groups write for the same person for 10 or 15 years," Davis said. The San Luis Obispo group has been writing for one man for six months and "hasn't heard a single word" on his condition, she said.

The case is that of Joseph Kalapka Cooper, who is imprisoned in Liberia, a country in west Africa, Davis said. The Liberian government claims that Cooper was involved in an opposition party plot to kill the Liberian president. Davis and Amnesty International believe otherwise.

"We don't even know if he was in an opposition party," Davis said.

Receiving no word on a prisoner's status can be frustrating, she said. The local group has, however, had successful letter-writing endeavors in the past. In one case a leatherworker who had been imprisoned in Paraguay sent a letter of thanks and some of his leather crafts to the group after his release. Such feedback is extremely rewarding, Davis said.

The on-campus group tends to receive even less feedback because they do not focus on just one prisoner.

Clarissa Nantes, president of Cal Poly's Amnesty International group, said that "every month they (Amnesty International) put out a newsletter of people who are released or if their case is still pending."

In South Africa, 99 percent of the prisoners of conscience that Amnesty had been writing for were recently released, Nantes said. Many human rights violations, however, continue to occur there, she said.

Statistics such as these are reasons why Nantes has "felt really good about being in this organization."

Nantes, an engineering science senior, has been president of the group for two years. She discovered Cal Poly's Amnesty International group during University Union night during Week Of Welcome of her sophomore year.

"I knew Amnesty was involved in human rights, so I started going to the meetings," she said.

Currently, the on-campus group is involved in several activities.

A return to the grassroots

Bridgeford said "tabling has been the best event." Amnesty has had a table set up in front of the library with pamphlets and petitions for students to sign. An Amnesty member has been on hand to tell students about specific cases and Amnesty in general.

The information at the tables has focused on one particular country each month. In March the focus was El Salvador. Throughout April the group is focusing on Liberia, but will also be spending some time on the death penalty.

"We've gained six new members through tabling," Bridgeford said. Tabling reflects Amnesty's "return to grass roots," he said.

Some people sign the petitions but most just walk by. Bridgeford said that most people are concerned about human rights but not enough to disturb their busy schedules.

Opposed to the death penalty

At a table set up in the University Union, Amnesty members recently asked students to sign a petition for clemency for convicted murderer Robert Alton Harris. Harris was scheduled to be executed on April 3, but was granted a temporary stay that was appealed but upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. It would have been the first execution in California in 23 years.

Amnesty International, as an organization, is universally opposed to the death penalty. "We want a commutation (for Harris)," Nantes said. "That would change it from a death sentence to a life sentence."

Nantes and Bridgeford agree with Amnesty's stand on capital punishment.

Not all of the members of the Cal Poly group are totally opposed to the death penalty, Nantes said. The group often discusses the issue.

"We want to get people thinking about it," she said. "We want people to know why we're against it."

Bridgeford, who wears a button on his backpack which reads 'Abolish the Death Penalty,' said "I think if people knew the facts, they'd be against the death penalty — or at least how it's being carried out."

Bridgeford pointed to the long, expensive appeals process as a practical reason to oppose the death penalty. "And then there are the moral arguments," he added.

Bridgeford said that Amnesty is often mistakenly seen as an organization only for liberals and the politically active.

Bridgeford is the only political science major in the 15- to 20-member group. "Most are business or engineering majors," he said.

It's a way for someone who's not involved to become active," he said. "It's a breaking ground — bingo, you're into the whole activist mode."

"I encourage people to look in," he said. "Amnesty has been the most successful organization toward human rights."

For first time since early 1900s, male population outgrows female

Men closed gap on women in 80s — Census Bureau

WASHINGTON (AP) — Men are catching up, at least in numbers. The Census Bureau said Tuesday that the number of men grew faster than the number of women in the '80s, something that hasn't happened since the first decade of this century.

Death rates for men declined more rapidly than for women, extending male lifespans and allowing their population to increase more rapidly than women, the new study disclosed.

Cancer deaths increased among women while dropping for men, pointing to increased smoking by women beginning in the 1960s as a likely factor in the change, a Census expert said.

"The male population outgrew the female population in every age group under age 85," Frederick W. Hollmann of the Census Bureau reported.

From 1980 to 1989 the number of men in the nation increased by 10,557,000, while the female population grew 10,448,000, the Bureau reported.

Even so, women continue to outnumber men in America, 127 million to 121 million, the report showed.

The last decade in which the number of men increased faster than women was 1900-1910, the Census Bureau noted.

The balance of population is determined not only by the number of people born but by the number of years they remain alive, explained Hollmann in a telephone interview.

More male babies are born than females, he pointed out, but "generally a sort of equilibrium is reached since males don't live as long as females."

The higher death rate for men means that although they outnumber women at birth, women surpass men in total numbers later on.

One consequence of males increasing faster than females in the 1980s was that in 1989 there were more men than women at each age group below 34. In 1980 men had been more numerous only through age 26, Hollmann reported.

Hollmann said a major contributor to the males outpacing females in the 1980s was the change in death rates.

"Male life expectancy has continued to improve gradually during the decade. Female life expectancy has improved very little since 1982."

Life expectancy for men increased from 70.9 in 1982 to 71.5

years in 1987, an improvement of six-tenths of a year, he noted. During the same time period life expectancy for women went up only one-tenth of a year, from 78.2 to 78.3.

The reason seems to be changing patterns of disease as more and more women took up smoking and moved into traditionally male-dominated jobs and lifestyles, Hollmann commented.

"You could suggest that a lot of women took up smoking back in the 1960s, so the difference between men and women in smoking behavior tended to converge somewhat, said Hollmann. "If behavior (between the sexes) is converging, then you have to expect mortality rates to converge also."

"There is a time lag between the time someone takes up smoking and the time they come to highest risk of death," he said, accounting for the change in comparative death rates in the 1980s.

Between 1982 and 1986, for example, the cancer death rate for males declined from 164.8 deaths per 100,000 men to 163.6. For women the rate increased from 109.5 to 111.4.

For heart disease, the death rate for men declined from 264.4 per 100,000 to 238.2. Women had a smaller decline, from 132.5 to 124.6.

EVALUATIONS

office successfully balanced this extra task with their full-time duties. But with the recent increase in student enrollment, combined with implementing several more on-line programs and staff turnover, the evaluations office found themselves drowning in paperwork in May of last year.

"At that point, we had to make a decision," said Ringer. "We had to decide whether to complete the senior evaluations for students graduating in the spring of 1990, or put off transfer evaluations. We felt that there was a greater need to get the senior evaluations done, since they would be leaving us sooner, and then launch into the transfer evaluations."

Three evaluators have left the office over the past year, which has made it even more difficult for the remaining ones to pick up where they left off, said Ringer.

There was no provision made for hiring extra staff at any point during this backlog.

The first students affected by this backlog were 1,500 transfers that came to Cal Poly last fall. It has taken at least one quarter and often two for these students to receive their evaluations. Both the winter and spring transfers, although not as many, have faced the same problem.

Senior evaluations for graduation have not been affected.

"We seriously hope to be back on track by this summer" Ringer said. "This is our plan, but there is no 100 percent guarantee that we will indeed be done by then. We are putting in all the time we possibly can, plus overtime right now. Our staff is putting in tremendous effort to provide some excellent additional services."

Academic Affairs has put a high priority on the implementation of this on-line computer system, said Ringer. When completed, it will better meet the needs of the students and faculty in a more timely fashion. Students are already benefitting from the new system. They can now view their grades on line and make changes as necessary, grade reports are mailed out much quicker and degrees can now be posted.

For the evaluations office, it will be a great relief to have another piece of the system implemented called ON COURSE. Evaluators will be able to input degree requirements, and then match the student progress toward graduation when ON COURSE is in operation.

Currently, students cannot walk into the evaluations office in any given quarter and find out their academic status, said Ringer. The manual grade posting is very tedious, and is done only on a periodic basis. ON COURSE will provide an up-to-date report of students' status at any time.

"If students have questions, by all means, they should come and talk with us," said Ringer. "We have slowed down as we have forward, but we are doing the best we possibly can given our resources."

Protests delay reopening of U.S. cultural center in Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — U.S. officials have indefinitely postponed the reopening of a U.S. cultural center in the southern city of Kwangju at the request of the South Korean government, news reports said Tuesday.

U.S. officials had said the Kwangju facility would reopen at a new location Friday, nearly a year after a wave of firebomb attacks forced it to close.

Radicals have attacked the center about 30 times since a civil uprising in the city in 1980. City residents accused the United States of allowing South Korean troops under U.S. command to suppress the uprising, which killed 200 people.

"The Korean government has reportedly expressed views that it was undesirable to reopen the center a month before the 10th anniversary of the Kwangju protests on May 18," the South Korean news agency Yonhap said.

It quoted an official at the center as saying U.S. officials in Seoul had decided to postpone the reopening.

Radical student leaders Tuesday announced a campaign aimed at permanently closing the cultural center. About 500 students fought police with firebombs while trying to march off a campus in Kwangju and vowing to drive out "U.S. imperialists," Yonhap said.

In Seoul, about 200 students armed with hundreds of firebombs battled police at Sogang University, shouting anti-U.S. and anti-government slogans. The students demanded U.S. Ambassador Donald Gregg be expelled.

Six students armed with homemade bombs and clubs attacked Gregg's residence in October. Gregg escaped unhurt.

Meanwhile, in Itaewon, an entertainment district near the U.S. military headquarters in Seoul, four Korean citizens were injured in clashes Tuesday with two U.S. soldiers.

No details were immediately available, but sporadic clashes have erupted in the area between U.S. soldiers and Koreans in recent years.

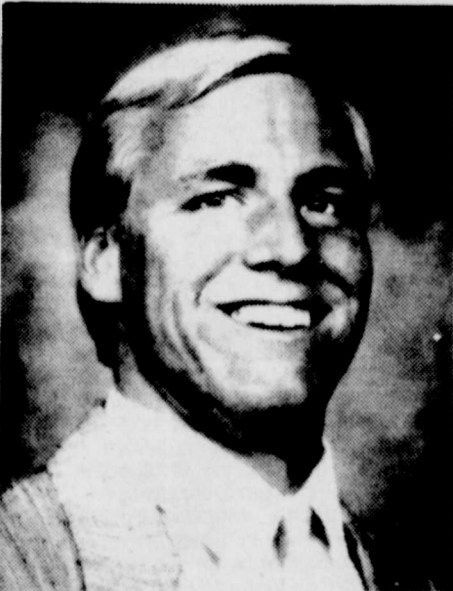

ELECT

FOR

PRESIDENT

The time to vote is approaching and you the voter are faced with the situation of who to be your next ASI President. I think I can help your decision; Vote for Jeff Denham. I have been a leader throughout my life in all aspects of school; Athletics, Student Government and Clubs. I feel that the experience I have gained is a great asset to my ability as a leader. Leadership to me is shown by example and by letting the students have direct input into all matters that concern them. Many candidates don't have my ability and none of them have my potential. I hope to receive your note as ASI President on April 18th and 19th. Vote for Jeff Denham.
