'The sky is cryin'...

Poly students react to the first round of San Luis Obispo's seasonal rains

"If a kid asks where rain comes from, I think a cute thing to tell him is 'God is Crying.' And if he asks why God is crying, another cute thing to tell him is 'Probably because of something you did.'"

— from Saturday Night Live's "Deep Thoughts," by Jack Handy

By Gabe Joynt
Staff Writer

Cal Poly was sprinkled with the first rain of autumn Wednesday — and one Cal Poly student thinks she may be partly responsible for it.

Agribusiness senior Regan Williams said she was upset about a love interest the night before the rain came, and the rain was meant as a sign that she should move on.

"It's a sign that it's okay to be sad," Williams said.

"When I first heard the rain I thought someone was breaking into my house," she said. "Then, I thought of Guns 'n' Roses because they've got that song 'November Rain,'" she said. "Then I thought October rain, because it's October."

"Then I thought, 'It's time for me to get some new shoes, some winter shoes.'"

Williams said the rain brought slick roads that caused her to "get crazy" in her Jeep on the way to school.

"I was all over the road," Williams said.

Local meteorologist Sharon Graves said San Luis Obispo received .12-inch of rain from the frontal system. Cambria earned the highest local total, registering a quarter inch.

"When I first heard the rain I thought someone was breaking into my house."

Graves said Monday's 4.5 Central Valley earthquake and Wednesday morning's freak rainfall hadn't prompted any phone calls to her.

Graves said earthquake lore purports a correlation between temblors and hot, humid weather — not rain.

"Usually when it rains, they don't say too much," she said.

Growth has no easy solution

Environment and economics are two conflicting San Luis Obispo concerns

By David Polk
and Rod Trett
Staff Writers

Urban sprawl, water shortages, air pollution, traffic congestion and landfill shortages.

Sound like a description of Los Angeles?

It may, but these are some of the real problems faced by a growing San Luis Obispo.

Some residents here say they feel growth is necessary for a healthy economy, but many also say the environment must play a part in this development.

"My philosophy on growth is rather clear and uncomplicated," said San Luis Obispo Mayor Ron Dunin. "A city is a corporation, and no corporation can survive without progression and the most important factor is how that corporation grows."

Architect Craig Smith, a former Cal Poly lecturer, said growth is necessary and important in San Luis Obispo. "(But) there has to be a well-thought-out, long-term plan for any development," he said.

Smith said he sees environmental compromise as a necessary part of development.

"I don't care what you say. All development has (environmental) impact," he said.

"And impact itself has to have some formula that's fair, but protective," he added. "There's always going to be compromise."

City Council candidate Allen Settle said he sees ways to take the environment into consideration where development is concerned.

"The environment can be accommodated by designating areas as open space, (and others as) higher density cluster-development, as opposed to urban sprawl," he said.

Local developer Stanley Bell said he sees growth as a way to cut down local air pollution.

"We need to stop all of the commuting from the peripheral communities to the city of San Luis, which is the center of the job base," he said.

"The reason there is all of the commuting along (Highway) 101 and from Los Osos is because there is not (enough) reasonably-priced housing," he added. "If there were some reasonable housing prices, I think we could reduce the environmental pollution that's caused by the cars."

Mayoral candidate Cal Massey, who has based his campaign partly on a staunch pro-growth platform, said he would give jobs priority over the environment.

"Most of those who are concerned about the beauty of our city would like to keep it intact as much as possible, in the sense that it wouldn't devastate the economy," Massey said.

"(But) I think that if it comes to saving the spotted owl or losing thousands of jobs, that's not too much of a (tough) decision for me. I'm going to provide the jobs."

Jim Merkel, a former engineer and local environmental activist, said he would like to see the environment get equal — or higher — consideration.

"Growth causes a litany of environmental problems — urban sprawl, air pollution, traffic congestion and species extinction," Merkel said.

"Many of these problems are

Students beat a noisy path

Fraternity posts signs in effort to quiet shortcut users

By Jodi Ross
Staff Writer

Students may be surprised to find private property signs being posted along a popular shortcut to campus.

Sigma Chi fraternity has placed signs along the path between its house and Alpha Gamma Rho's.

Dave Becnel, president of Sigma Chi fraternity, said the signs were put up some time last week.

He said that "essentially, it's our property" and the fraternity has the right to post the signs.

According to Becnel, the sign, which reads "Private Property — Right to pass revocable at any time," is to make people aware that Sigma Chi has the right to put up fences and gates.

"As of now, there is no problem with people using the path," he said. "But if we want to close it off, we can."

Eventually the fraternity would like to put up a fence, Becnel said.

But, he added, "this doesn't necessarily mean we will close it (the path) off during school hours."

Daytime use is "no problem," Becnel said. "But sometimes at night, it upsets the tenants because of the noise level."

Becnel added that during rush and social events, it is inconvenient for people to walk through their property.

"We like to know who is on our property during our events," he said.

Francisco Carrasco, a business junior, uses the path daily. He believes that the signs are "bullshit." He said he uses the path because it is a shortcut.

Carrasco said he knows it's private property, but he "would assume they would put up a gate" if they wanted to keep people out.

Nicole Buckley, a political science senior, said she knew the property was private.

"(But) I don't want them to think they can block it (the path) off all the time," she said.

"I think that they have the right, but it makes for bad relations with neighbors," she added.

Buckley uses the path daily and said it would "make people go out of their way" if the path was blocked.

Nicki Reyburn, an agricultural science sophomore, passes through every Tuesday and Thursday night.

"It's an easy way to go," she said. "And there are people around so I feel safer."

Reyburn said she is not sure what the signs mean.

"Are they going to stop us from using the path or what?" she asked.

Marc Haywood, a member of Alpha Gamma Rho, said Sigma Chi should be able to do what it wants with its property.

"It doesn't bother me, it's their property," he said. "They should be able to do what's best for them."

Haywood's fraternity house runs along the side of the Sigma Chi house.

"People use our parking lot all the time," he said.

He agrees with Becnel about the noise level at night.

"Sometimes it's annoying at night when people are being too loud," he said.

Gunmen attack tourist bus, woman killed, 2 wounded

ASSIUT, Egypt (AP) — Unknown gunmen opened fire today on a tourist bus near a hotbed of Muslim extremist violence, killing a British woman and wounding two men, news reports and sources said.

If Muslim extremists are behind the attack, the British woman would be the first Westerner to die in the violent campaign begun by the extremists this year. Seventy-three people have died and 95 have been wounded in the violence, including today's casualties.

Middle East News Agency said the two British men were being treated for their wounds. As transliterated from Arabic, the news agency identified the victim as Chalote Belle.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there were nine passengers on the bus.

The news agency said the bus was headed from Cairo to the provincial capital, Assiut, when it came under "heavy fire" near Dairut.

Anita Sheldon, consul at the British Embassy in Cairo, said she had heard reports of an incident but had been unable to confirm anything.

Dairut is 37 miles north of Assiut, which is 240 miles south of Cairo.

Bush administration sides with Israelis in key dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration came down on Israel's side in a key dispute with Palestinians as Mideast peace talks reopened at the State Department today.

Senior U.S. officials, holding a private session with Palestinian negotiators, said they should defer any attempt to persuade Israel to commit itself to relinquish the West Bank and Gaza, an official said.

The issue snagged the last round, with the Palestinians insisting that Israel affirm its adherence to U.N. Security Council resolutions that, in effect, call for trading territory for peace.

Israel refused and little headway was made on arrangements for limited Palestinian self-rule in the territories the Arabs lost in the 1967 Mideast war.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Palestinians were told the resolutions did not apply to negotiations over Palestinian autonomy. The issue should be deferred until a later stage, when an overall settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute is on the table, the Palestinians were told.

Clinton's final two weeks: Hit Bush, push people first

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Bill Clinton is closing out his presidential campaign much the way he started it, returning to the sharper rhetoric that his double-digit poll leads have allowed him to forgo in recent weeks.

"In the next two weeks, I'm going to go back to the themes I started with," his assaults on President Bush's economic record and his own economic plan. "I want so badly to reaffirm the clear direction of the campaign. I want people to know what I stand for."

The Democratic nominee, who's been waging a front-runner's campaign for weeks and avoiding harsh attacks on Bush, intensified his attack on Tuesday, turning Bush's trust issue back on the president.

"This is a guy," Clinton said, "who said read my lips, 15 million new jobs, you'll be better off than you were four years ago. ... And he wants you to trust him?"

Clinton, heading out today on a three-day Western swing, will press these themes until Nov. 3, focusing on what's happened to middle-income Americans over the past 12 years, Clinton aides said.

"We wanted to come out swinging for the last two weeks," said Clinton strategist Paul Begala.

"We're the challenger; he's the incumbent president. We are still the underdog here. We're going to take it right to him."

Bush, on a whistlestop tour through Georgia and the Carolinas on Tuesday, took a combative tone, too, accusing Clinton of deliberately deceiving voters and ridiculing the Democratic governor's stewardship of Arkansas.

Bush attempted to spell out differences between his and Clinton's plans for reviving the economy.

He acknowledged that "our economy needs fixing," but he sought to soften the point by saying the U.S. economy was being pulled down by a worldwide recession.

"We're caught up in something global," he said.

Perot kept his campaigning confined to television, with three ads airing later this week.

But he worked to persuade Americans they would not be wasting a vote by picking Perot.

"You've got to stop letting these folks in the press tell you you're throwing your vote away," Perot said. "You've got to start using your own head."

Both Bush and Clinton vowed to campaign nearly non-stop until Election Day, hitting multiple cities each day.

The Democrat tested out a new theme that's also the focus of a 15-second spot he's putting up that uses Bush's own words of 1988.

"He said, in four years, you'll be better off than you are today," Clinton said, quoting Bush. "I've got a question for you. How are you doing?"

Homeless lose shelter; rise in mental illness, addictions

STANFORD (AP) — Nearly half of the homeless people in Santa Clara County became alcoholics, addicted to drugs or mentally ill only after they lost their shelter, according to a recent study.

Stanford University researcher Marilyn Winkleby said of the 1,400 people she followed, more than a third became alcoholics after losing their home, a fourth began using drugs and a fifth were hospitalized for mental illness.

"We have really stereotyped the homeless," Winkleby said Tuesday. "I think this shows that we better start learning more about the very large group of people without those problems."

She said her study proves false the common converse belief that drugs, alcohol and mental illness cause homelessness.

The study was conducted among single adults at three county armories during the winter of 1989-90.

Boy Scouts fire gay officer; police stop program support

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The police department has ended an almost 30-year affiliation between its Explorer program for teen-agers and the Boy Scouts of America because the scouts ousted a gay police officer from an Explorer post.

Police Chief Bob Burgreen said the department would no longer work with the Boy Scouts because of the suspension of El Cajon police Officer Chuck Merino as an advisor to that department's Explorer program. Merino was expelled by the scouts in August after he publicly declared his homosexuality.

Burgreen said, "This department cannot continue to affiliate with an organization that discriminates against a group of people."

Burgreen angrily compared the Boy Scouts' decision to oust Merino to the racial segregation of the 1960s. The group forbids association with homosexuals because it mistakenly equates homosexuals with child molesters, he said.

The scouting organization's national policy prohibits local councils from employing homosexuals.

Burgreen said the Boy Scouts' charter to the police department will be returned immediately.

Burgreen intends to continue the Explorer program independent of the Boy Scouts, however, and said he would encourage the other six law-enforcement agencies in San Diego County to do likewise.

Senate candidate hopes only to unseat incumbent

Libertarian Boddie runs to spread message, not to win

The Libertarian candidate for Congress visited Cal Poly Tuesday, calling one opponent a "political whore" and comparing democracy to sheep and wolves deciding on breakfast.

In an interview with Mustang Daily, Richard Boddie said he knows it will be close to impossible for him to win the election in November, but said that doesn't stop him from spreading the Libertarian message.

Boddie, who describes himself as "an outspoken radical," said he approaches the election in a different sense.

Boddie said he believes if he keeps the incumbent out of office, he has gained a "victory" for the Libertarian party.

"You don't want to vote for Dianne Feinstein or John Seymour," Boddie said. "All hell will break loose if you do. Vote for Boddie in 92."

Boddie referred to Dianne Feinstein as a "political whore" and said the only reason Feinstein is a candidate is because she is "wired in."

Feinstein officials didn't return phone calls Wednesday.

"I could beat Feinstein," Boddie said, leaning forward in his chair, "if people just wake up and vote. That's the problem with democracy — people don't vote the way they feel."

Boddie depicted democracy as "two wolves and a sheep voting on what they are going to have for breakfast."

Boddie said the Libertarian party is the third largest political party in the United States.

He said he feels the government doesn't want the Libertarians to get their message out.

"If the people of the United States hear our message they will embrace it," Boddie said. "The government won't allow that because it's an anti-government message."

Boddie said he believes in letting people live their lives the way they want. He said he feels all the functions of government are immoral except for protection of the people.

"Our objective is not to wow you through advertising," Boddie said.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

'Ladies and Gentlemen, children of all ages...'

By Craig Abernathy

With the 1992 presidential election just around the corner, it's time to start considering who we want in the oval office. Somebody ought to put a tent over this circus and start charging admission.

In the beginning there was George Bush, the Super-Republican that led us through the Persian Gulf crisis. Then came the Governor of Arkansas, Bill Clinton, who for the Democrats represents that light at the end of the tunnel. And then just when we thought it was safe to get back in the water, Texas billionaire Ross Perot jumped into the race. What are people to do? Now there are three major candidates instead of two.

Too bad one of them couldn't be the right man for the job.

What's going on with these debates? Are we talking serious political issues, or did Bill Clinton steal George Bush's girlfriend in high school? It has been kind of hard to tell with all of the petty bickering going on between George and Dan.

Then there is Ross Perot; neither of the candidates and their respective parties seem to be taking him too seriously. At least, he hasn't been subject to as much mud throwing as his opposing candidates.

George Bush seems to be basing his campaign on his assertion that Bill Clinton is not an honest man. He gives examples from when Clinton protested the Vietnam war. He accuses Clinton of not being able to take a stand on important public issues, like abortion, without changing his mind. Bush accused Clinton during the second debate of previously working with the pro-life movement and changing sides to pro-choice.

How about Vice-President Dan Quayle, he's been one of the biggest jokes in the country for the past four years. He surprisingly did all right in the debates, hanging tough with his opponents Al Gore and Admiral James Stockdale.

Well George, if we're gonna start digging things up from the past, how about when you were at the top of the ladder in the Central Intelligence Agency. They may be an American agency but they don't have the most reputable record around the world. If honesty is a big concern maybe you ought to sit back and of yours for the presidency, then take a long look in the mirror before making any career decisions.

Bill Clinton believes that George Bush's ideas are out of date and it's time for a new face in the White House, preferably a democratic face. Clinton has attacked Bush for his "read my lips; no new taxes" campaign in 1988. Clinton repeatedly stands behind his assertion that he will rebuild the nation without breaking the backs of the middle class. He will do this by raising taxes on the rich. Clinton has also taken a big stand as a pro-choice advocate while George Bush stands on the other side of the fence with a strong pro-life following.

Well, what do you think of Democratic vice-presidential candidate Al Gore? He acts and sounds like one of those dolls you pull the string on to make it talk. We all know his wife, Tipper Gore, who was one of the strongest forces behind requiring warning labels on records with explicit lyrics.

Then there is Ross Perot. Who is this masked man and what's his problem? In the beginning of the race, a lot of Americans thought Ross Perot was a savior sent from God to save the American people. Then in June the flame burnt out when Perot announced he was withdrawing from the campaign. Now he has decided that he wants to be President again. Make up your mind!!

All kinds of rumors have surfaced in regards to Perot's re-entry into the presidential race. Some say it was a big public relations move on Perot's part by saving money over the months he wasn't in the election. Others believe that it was his pride that got to him after everyone labeled him as a quitter.

You can't help but like Perot's running mate, Admiral James Stockdale. You may not think he's a good politician, but you've got to admit it was funny as hell watching him debate. It was very obvious that Stockdale is not a politician and doesn't claim to be, unlike his vice-presidential opponents, who are, for the most part, professional politicians.

This is definitely one election that will go down in history as one of the strangest.

From the Republicans we have President George Bush running for a second term, making the same promises he was unable to keep in his previous campaign.

Then we look at Democratic hopeful Bill Clinton, saying he is going to bring this country out of the toilet by raising taxes on the rich. Bill Clinton will always be remembered as the candidate who smoked pot but didn't inhale. Come on now, Bill.

Ross Perot, the surprise candidate who is ready to run this country like a big business, grabbed the hearts of some of the American people and made an interesting election out of a what seems to be a quarrel between two little boys.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Clarification on Measure H

The article, "Should State Water Come to SLO?" that appeared in the Oct. 14 issue of Mustang Daily needs to have one point clarified. The article stated that, "Measure H, if passed, will request 3,000 acre-feet of water per year for the city of San Luis Obispo."

Actually, just the opposite is true.

Measure H is what some people refer to as a reverse measure. A yes vote on Measure H will repeal the City Council vote that asked for the 3,000 acre feet of water for the city. A no vote on Measure H will let stand the decision of the City Council asking for water. If Measure H PASSES (a yes vote), the city will NOT be requesting the water that the City Council voted to bring to the city from the State Water Project.

I feel that this very important point should be clarified for any people who are going to vote on this very important local matter in the upcoming election.

Editor's column: 'grave mistake'

I feel compelled to respond to the editorial, "City politics are going to hell," by Bryan Bailey (Mustang Daily, Oct. 20).

In his article, Mr. Bailey is attempting to make the point that the U.S. Constitution guarantees that religion be kept "as far out of the political ball-park as possible." I believe that Mr. Bailey is gravely and dangerously mistaken!

Any honest reading of the First Amendment shows quite the contrary to be the case: not that religion should be kept out of politics, but rather that politics should be kept out of religion. What Mr. Bailey seems to be advocating is the removal of religion from the political process — is he saying that the citizens of the United States have the right to express themselves freely, as long as their views aren't religious?

Don't forget the second clause of the First Amendment, which specifically prohibits any laws abridging the freedom of speech. Any person has the right to express themselves on any subject in this country, regardless of the origin or background of their beliefs.

So, Mr. Bailey, if you don't like the philosophy or platform or religion of someone running for political office, then exercise your right to vote against that person. But to exclude anyone from the political process, regardless of their personal motivations, is blatantly unconstitutional, and in my opinion extremely dangerous. You don't have to agree with someone's point of view in order to agree that they have the right to express themselves, a point that all students at this university should spend some time considering.

Cattlemen rebuff 'tree-huggers'

Tom Kirk's letter on cattle and the environment is another example of the tree-hugging, bandwagon environmentalism running rampant across America today. Too often, the beef industry has been subjected to false accusations and emotional half-truths that have become the basis for environmentalist claims, which Tom has used in an attempt to cut beef consumption.

First, Tom rants about the problem of carbon-dioxide released in the atmosphere when forests are burned. Tom, the day the cows start burning the forests is the day you can blame cattle for this problem. Until then, we suggest you focus more on the political and socioeconomic structures causing the third world countries to take the actions they do.

Second, Tom raises the issue that cattle are fed too much grain that could otherwise be used to feed the world's starving population. Here's a little fact, Tom; 86 percent of all the feed consumed by beef cattle (from birth to slaughter) is non-grain. The grain that is fed is feed grain, generally not eaten by humans.

As for habitat destruction and native specie depletion, it is in the cattleman's best interest to preserve the resources which are the fuel for our industry. Countless studies can be cited where habitats have been improved by the grazing of cattle. Cattle do not require large amounts of water. In fact, it only takes 411 gallons of water from birth to slaughter to produce a pound of beef.

So Tom, while you're saving the spotted owl we're putting tomorrow's dinner on the table.

Mary's Danish brings rock-folk music to Loco

Vocalist talks about third album

By Carissa Wreden
Staff Writer

If three is truly a lucky number, then San Luis Obispo had better get prepared. Mary's Danish will be making its third appearance in town to promote its third album, "American Standard," when the band plays Loco Ranchero Sunday night for one explosive show.

"American Standard" is anything but standard Danish. The album is cohesive and focused, with a definite rock thrust, quite a contrast to 1991's eclectic release "Circa."

According to vocalist Gretchen Seager, Mary's Danish is really three bands in one.

"You have a country folk band, a rock band, and then kind of a pop band," she said.

Diversity of this magnitude was breaking the six member band apart, Seager said.

"We were on tour behind 'Circa,' we all felt bad and we didn't know why," she said. "We came to the conclusion at one point or another that people in the band were feeling alienated from the set."

The bad feelings stemmed from disagreements over which songs to include in the typical 15 song set, Seager said.

"Some of those (songs) you'd never have written, and wouldn't necessarily care for," she explained, "People (in the band) would openly say 'I'm not really crazy about that song we just played.'"

To save their sanity and the band, the six sat down and took a hard look at what kind of music they really wanted to make for "American Standard,"

Seager said.

"Everybody wrote music, everybody contributed to each song and we decided what kind of music we all agreed upon," Seager said. "Although rock may seem like a generic, sort of across-the-board term, for us it was narrowing it down quite a bit."

Rock may be the musical thrust on "American Standard," but the lyrics are still as deeply emotional as those on any other Danish album.

In the ballad, "Ode to Life," Seager explores romantic insecurities, while conquering a few of her own.

"I wasn't sure I'd be able to carry it off. I really sat down as an exercise and forced myself to do it," she said.

The group's first single from the album, "Leave it Alone," has been described as "a supremely clear kiss-off, telegraphed in heavy, staccato fury that rings of L7 and Bad Religion."

The setting for the song's video was a mock political rally shot at an abandoned warehouse southeast of Los Angeles.

Seager said the band put out a call over the air telling people the band was filming a video. Press release information said close to 1,000 fans showed up to the shoot.

"Leave it Alone" debuted on MTV's 120 minutes this week. Even so, Seager said she is skeptical about making any video because, "MTV is such a powerful medium, that if they decide to get behind us, then we're in luck and if they don't, then we just went and spent all this money and why did we do it."

Seager went on to say, "I don't know why bands like us make videos, it's kind of a joke. The truth of the matter is we're not a big band and a video like ours gets lost if 100 videos are submitted each week."

Seager shared the sentiment of the band when she said, if given her way she wouldn't even make videos. She added she has always respected Metallica because, "They didn't make videos for so long."

"The sad thing about videos is that they take away everybody's personal interpretation of the song," Seager said.

The vocalist said she would like to see the group wait before making the video for its next single, "Underwater."

"Let's wait and see how it does. If it starts getting played a lot, then let's make a video," she said.

"To me it's just such a waste of money," Seager added. "If they're (the record company) gonna spend that kind of money on the band, give it to the band members who are starving and can't pay their rent."

Videos aside, Seager said the Danish love playing small venues. Seager explained that the group feeds off the energy of its audience.

"We really love to get energy from our audience and that's why I think we really prefer playing smaller clubs, because you are allowed to participate in your show more."

Loco Ranchero should offer the Danish just what they like, a small intimate venue where they can turn audience energy into dynamic alternative rock.

Mary's Danish is an 18 and over show. Doors open at 8 p.m. Tickets are available for $8 at Big Music and Boo Boo records or at the door for $10.

Fate and the Cantina bring Nighthawks to town

Washington D.C.-based band The Nighthawks will play two shows at the Cantina this Saturday night.

By Michelle Van Der Linden
Staff Writer

Through a twist in fate, the Nighthawks will be wailing out the blues tunes this Saturday night at T.A.'s Cantina.

The Washington D.C.-based band was originally booked to play a show in Los Angeles, but the club went out of business, said Kevin Shaw, president of the SLO Blues Society.

With pre-purchased west coast plane tickets in hand, Shaw said the band's manager contacted the SLO Blues Society and they began to look for an open venue. "We've had the Nighthawks before with great success," Shaw said.

After checking with Loco Ranchero and other clubs in the area, Shaw said the Cantina was able to book the Hawks at the last minute for two shows on Saturday.

"T.A.'s has been very cooperative," Shaw said.

Troy Oshann, the Cantina's music manager, said another band was scheduled to play Saturday, but they had to cancel, which opened the date for the Nighthawks.

"Anytime you can get that type of quality entertainment, you jump on it," Oshann said.

Shaw described the band as a "tight and hard-driving blues band who have been around for a long time."

According to a press release, the Nighthawks have played over 3,000 shows and released a number of albums, including "Open All Night," "Hot Spot," "Live in Europe" and "Trouble."

"The Blues Society here in San Luis Obispo has a real loyal following and I don't think we'll have a problem selling the place out," Shaw said.

He added the band has packed the SLO Veterans Memorial Building the three times they have played in town.

"I imagine it will be quite loud and you may want to bring some earplugs," Shaw said, but "if you say Nighthawks, people are going to come."

Show times are at 8:30 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the door for $10 for Blues members and $12 for the public.

Baywood Park celebrates 14th annual Oktoberfest

By Cynthia Nelson
Staff Writer

Opportunities to drink beer and wine, eat German sausages and take part in creative events will be abundant this Sunday at the 14th Annual Baywood Oktoberfest.

Locals, as well as California residents along the coast, will gather for the event from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Second Street.

Artisans, cooks, merchants and politicians will line the street with their wares.

The 150 booths will overlook the water of Morro Bay, where a human-powered boat race will take place.

Shar Gregory, of the Los Osos/Baywood Park Chamber of Commerce, encouraged everyone to enter the race.

When asked what types of small craft will be allowed to enter, Gregory said, "Whatever anyone wants to invent, as long as it is human powered."

Proceeds will benefit Friends of the Estuary, an environmental group working to preserve Morro Bay's bird sanctuary.

Baywood Park's Oktoberfest began 13 years ago when two men, one from Austria and the other from Germany, began a festival by selling sausages on Second Street, where both had businesses.

Roland Muschenetz and Vladimir von Rauner obtained a permit from the city, put up road blockades and began cooking.

Stocked with homemade potato salad, wieners and a keg of beer, their radio created a German atmosphere, with folk tunes from Bavaria.

Hoping 100 or so people would show up, the men were surprised when 300 to 500 attended.

When asked why they had the Oktoberfest, Muschenetz said, "It was the traditional thing to do in Germany."

The event also was to promote the community of Baywood Park, as well as to combine Halloween and Oktoberfest, von Rauner said.

Now, nearly 10,000 individuals join in the day's events, and it is the community's biggest festival, Gregory said.

People come from as far away as Los Angeles and San Francisco, Muschenetz added.

Residents begin inquiring about the event weeks in advance.

The day will be jam-packed with events and entertainment.

Participation events include a four-mile run at 9 a.m. Registration is from 7:30 a.m. to 8:45 a.m., at the pier. There is a $5 registration fee and an additional $5 fee for a T-shirt.

All proceeds will go to Morro Bay High School's cross country team.

race will begin at 10 a.m.

Entertainment will begin at 9 a.m. with the Cuesta College Jazz and Vocal Ensemble on the main stage.

The B.O.O.F. band, (Bunch of Old Farts band) will play a variety of rock, jazz, blues and oldies at 11 a.m., also on the main stage.

At 11:45 a.m., the Morro Bay High School marching band and drill team will parade down Santa Ysabel and Second Street for two blocks to the pier.

Joining them will be the children's costume parade. Anyone with a costumed child is encouraged to attend.

Also at 11:45 a.m. is soloist Kevin Rees, who will play his acoustic troubadour on the main stage, followed by The Central Coast School of Dance, who will perform on the street by the main stage at 12:15 p.m.

On the corner of Second Street and Santa Ysabel, the Central Coast Cloggers will perform from 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. Rhythm and Rock band Midnight Rider will perform at 12:45 p.m.

Y.A.P.A., an antidrug rap group, will perform on the corner of Second Street and Santa Maria in the afternoon.

Weekend Update, a rhythm, blues and rock band will close out the entertainment with a show from 2:15 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Teacher-student concert opens SLO Symphony season

First show features conductor-music director as soloist

By Jackie Jones
Staff Writer

San Luis Obispo County Symphony opens its season with a concert that has a student-teacher relationship.

For the first time since joining the San Luis Obispo County Symphony as conductor and music director in 1984, Michael Nowak will perform as soloist for the Saturday series opener.

Anshel Brusilow, Nowak's teacher 20 years ago, will be guest conductor. Nowak will play the viola solo for Beriloz' "Harold in Italy".

"I am delighted to be performing with Mr. Brusilow," Nowak said. "I first met Anshel in 1971 when I was a student at the University of Indiana and he came from the Dallas Symphony to guest conduct the school's premier orchestra."

"Shortly after, I was engaged as Assistant Conductor and violist with the Dallas Symphony under Anshel's direction," Nowak added. "Twenty years later, I have the wonderful pleasure of returning the musical favor."

Cricket Handler, director of the San Luis Obispo County Symphony, said this concert will be very special for Nowak, and that in rehearsal he has been very excited.

"I think the main focus of the concert is their relationship in that it is a student-teacher relationship," Handler said.

Nowak began his musical training on the violin in public schools, where he also learned to play the clarinet and the tuba.

He was admitted to the Curtis Institute of Music at the age of 11. At 16, Nowak was the youngest conducting student accepted by the late Pierre Monteux. For years he gave recitals and performed as a soloist with all the major orchestras in the United States.

Nowak attended Boston University and then Indiana University as a composition major. At Indiana, Nowak's teacher, William Primrose, inspired him to concentrate on the violin.

Nowak served as Dallas' assistant conductor, and later was a member of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra.

In 1980, he was a member of the California Chamber Symphony, which toured Hong Kong.

Nowak also has been a conductor of the Monterey Chamber Orchestra and guest conducted the USC, Santa Barbara and Oregon Mozart Chamber Orchestras.

He is principal violist with the San Luis Obispo Mozart and the Oregon Bach Festivals and also a member of the UCLA chamber ensemble Music for Mischa.

Brusilow has developed orchestra programs and graduate conducting studies at North Texas State University and Southern Methodist University since 1973. He has guest conducted orchestras nationally and internationally.

In 1990, Brusilow conducted a series of concerts in Belgrade, Yugoslavia and in 1992 he toured Spain with the same orchestra.

The Saturday night program includes "Capriccio Espagnol" by Rimsky-Korsakov and Barber's "Adagio for Strings."

The concert begins at 8:15 p.m., at the Church of the Nazarene in Pismo Beach.

A preconcert "Informance" will be presented by Craig Russell at 7:15 p.m. in the church's education building.

The Symphony has a series of Saturday concerts planned. On February 1, 1993, Tamaki Kawakubo will perform on violin Vieuxtemps' concertos, "Concerto No. 5 for Violin and Orchestra in A minor."

In March, two concerts will feature Jeanne Crittenden on cello and Barbara Hoff on piano.

The series ends with Mary Ratcliffe, soprano, performing "Mahler's Symphony No. 4 in G Major."

Tickets are still available. Season tickets are $36, $60, $80 and $96. Single tickets are $9, $15, $20 and $24.

Students on the campaign trail

Poly pupils 'inspired' to volunteer for local candidates

By Krystn Shrieve
Staff Writer

Just as every cloud has a silver lining, every good politician has a corps of dedicated supporters which brings the campaign to life.

This election year, many Cal Poly students volunteered their time to help local candidates.

Chiara Falco, an agribusiness junior, volunteers for congressional candidate Michael Huffington.

Falco said she decided to volunteer after hearing the candidate's wife speak in her political science class.

"I really liked what she had to say, so I decided to work for Huffington," she said.

Falco said after working on the campaign, she realized she should continue her involvement in politics.

"I learned something like this takes a lot of time, but as a volunteer, I can actually make a difference," she said.

"We do a lot of phone calling and little things like that, but in the end they all add up," Falco added. "It's been great to be a part of it all."

History senior Jeff Hollister has been working with Brent Petersen who is striving for a seat on the City Council. Hollister said he learned a lot while working on the campaign.

"This is my first exposure to city politics," he said. "It certainly has been an eye-opening experience. It's amazing how much spending time putting up posters, knocking on doors or answering phones.

Mat Higbee, a journalism senior, worked for presidential candidate Pat Buchanan. He said his most memorable moment while working with Buchanan was being at the Republican National Convention in Houston.

"Hearing Pat's keynote address at the convention was inspiring to say the least," Higbee said. "I didn't just hear it, I was there — and it was incredible."

Higbee said he admires Buchanan's ability to maintain his sense of identity, despite his increased exposure to the public.

"Running for president didn't change Pat. He was still the same funny, down-to-earth guy that he was the day we met," he said.

"He's just like anybody else," Higbee added. "I've had dinner at his house and hung out with him a lot. He's a regular guy."

Higbee said working with Buchanan gave him the opporhas been a great experience," Medvin added. "It has really broadened my view of politics."

Medvin said she got involved in the campaign as a way to fulfill her internship requirement.

"I'm a political science major, but my concentration is in pre-law," she said. "There were a number of internships available at law offices, but I figured I'd be doing that for the rest of my life."

"I wanted to do something different," Medvin added. "I wanted to get some experience in another aspect for my own personal satisfaction. When a professor suggested I volunteer for a candidate, I decided to do it."

Medvin said she wishes more students would get involved in political campaigns.

"Students aren't as aware as they should be when it comes to voting," she said. "I wish more students would become involved so they could learn more about the issues."

"It's good experience. I've learned a lot about the different parties and their philosophies," she said. "A lot of the issues have to do with people our age. The budget crisis and problems facing public schools and universities are things that directly affect us. It's important to know what's going on these days."

Medvin said she found personal inspiration in Ochoa's campaign.

"The fact that she's a woman who has worked hard to get to where she is has encouraged me to pursue my goals too."

Medvin said she volunteers a lot of time, but has found it to be a worthwhile experience.

"Sometimes I think, 'If I have to file one more index card, walk one more precinct or answer one more telephone...' (But) Gloria keeps me going. She's a great person and I really enjoy working with her."

tunity to see a different side of politics.

"I always knew politics were rough and tumble and down in the dirt," he said. "But working with Pat Buchanan, I learned even good people have to get dirty to clean everything up."

"It would be bold of me to say I inspired Pat in any way," Higbee added. "I'd like to think I did, but I doubt it. It's been the other way around. He's definitely been the one who has inspired me."

Political science senior Kim Medvin said she found inspiration in Gloria Ochoa. Ochoa is running against Huffington for the 22nd Congressional District seat.

Medvin said working with Ochoa has made her more politically aware.

"Growing up, my family wasn't politically involved at all," she said. "There were a lot of things I didn't know about or really think a lot about."

"I wish more people would get involved in this sort of thing because there is so much to learn," Hollister added. "I've met a lot of people and heard all different views on city politics. It's been enlightening."

Hollister said he spends a lot of time doing door-to-door campaigning. He said he is only one of many people who is excited about what Petersen is doing.

Hollister said he doesn't mind

Locals sound off on bike lanes

Council hears gripes over Santa Barbara Street lanes

By Liz Weber
Staff Writer

A local woman urged the San Luis Obispo City Council Tuesday night to change what she called "dangerous" bike lanes on Santa Barbara Street.

Avila Beach resident Kathleen Hasey presented the council with a letter signed by "a variety of residents," which declared lanes unsafe for bicyclists, motorists and pedestrians alike.

Hasey said the inconsistency of the bike lanes and parking is hazardous and suggested a simultaneous end to bike lanes on both sides of the street.

Also on Tuesday, the council heard from George Schreff, a resident of the San Luis Obispo homeless shelter, who urged the council to allocate more money to the shelter.

"What you can do to help the administrative costs will be very helpful," Schreff said. "I hope you all can give them a hand because they're running out of dough."

The council also voted to maintain the same fee for profit organizations who use the conference rooms at the San Luis Obispo City/County Library. It also cut the fee for nonprofit groups.

The fee for nonprofit groups had been 50 percent of the for-profit fee and now ranges from zero to 50 percent, depending on the time of day.

The council also altered non-profit status to include groups whose "primary purpose for existing is community-oriented and not for the purpose of generating profits for itself."

The council also voted to apply rent control to spaces that have been sold in mobile home parks. Currently, if people sell their space, the park owners are able to raise the rent at their discretion.

Another vote was scheduled for Nov. 10 to apply rent control to parks where two-thirds of the occupants have leases or own the land. Currently, those residents in parks where two-thirds of the occupants rent their spaces are not protected.

Volleyball team sheds image of last year's woes

By Brad Hamilton
Staff Writer

Andre Agassi may think "image is everything," but the Cal Poly women's volleyball team thinks differently.

During a criminal case last year involving two former players, the team's image could be likened to that of an innocent child strapped onto the back of a Jeep and taken through some rough territory.

Cal Poly head coach Craig Cummings said his team's image was tainted during last spring's Kim Kaaia trial, in which Kaaia — Cal Poly's all-time assist leader — was acquitted of attempting to murder former teammate Michelle Hansen.

The case, which received a whirlwind of media attention, had interwoven elements of drug use, lesbianism and violence.

"It made us look bad when it shouldn't have," Cummings said. "It had innuendos of guilt by association."

"I know differently," he added. "The players are confident in their identity."

This year's team appears to know who it is, having compiled a record of 15-6 — Cal Poly's best start since 1986. It can be seen why the team has discarded Agassi's image concept like a carton of lumpy milk.

"As far as we're concerned, that was last year," said undergraduate assistant Nels Rydberg. "That was not us."

Most of the players and coaches were reluctant to talk about the incident, saying it's a dead issue because it has had no bearing on this year's season.

"(The trial) is an old topic and has no reflection of the present team," Cummings said. "It did not deal with the team. It dealt with the relationship between two people."

Outside of the team, others around campus seem to feel the same way.

"(The trial) was an unfortunate case, and it did not give me a distorted perception of the volleyball team," said speech communication sophomore Sara Karvasek.

Industrial Technology senior Will Frederickson said he recognizes the trial as an isolated personal incident.

Liberal studies sophomore Jill Kevan said "the top Cal Poly scandal" of last year did not alter the way she viewed the team either.

"It's one of those things where you hope it was an isolated incident," Kevan said. "If I hear (students) talking about volleyball players, it is not negative."

But she said the incident opened the door for others to think that the rest of the volleyball players are bisexuals or drug users.

According to freshman middle blocker Jennifer Kaylor, members of other volleyball teams have said Cal Poly's team has a bad reputation.

"If people talk, that's fine," Kaylor said. "I don't give a crap. We have a good volleyball team, and we'll go far."

She said she accepts the fact that people stereotype others.

"We stereotype sorority girls as foo foos," Kaylor said.

Kaylor's roommate and teammate Allison Brady said she thought about the incident when deciding which college to attend. But she decided to attend Cal Poly over other schools vying for her talents because of her confidence in the volleyball program.

"I can't relate to (the trial)," Brady said. "I am here after the fact."

"It's done with."

Ninth inning heroics continue for Toronto

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays lost their reputation for blowing big games. Jeff Reardon found it.

A topsy-turvy World Series took another crazy turn Tuesday night when baseball's all-time saves leader allowed his second straight game-losing hit to a team known for prime-time problems.

Reardon hung a two-strike breaking ball and Candy Maldonado drove a bases-loaded liner in the bottom of the ninth. It sailed over center fielder Otis Nixon's head, and Reardon hung his as Toronto beat the Atlanta Braves 3-2 for a 2-1 Series lead.

"I'm doing the best I can," Reardon said. "It's just not working out."

"We're all pulling together because we want to win this thing," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "We make some mistakes, but everybody does."

Like Reardon.

The Blue Jays won Game 2 5-4 when Ed Sprague cracked a two-run pinch homer off Reardon in the top of the ninth.

"We've been known as the comeback Jays," Kelly Gruber said. "That's an attitude we're pretty proud of."

Atlanta tied the score with David Justice's run-scoring single in the sixth and Lonnie Smith had a run-scoring single in the eighth to give the Braves a 2-1 lead Tuesday.

Gruber's then tied the game 2-2 with a solo homer in the eighth.

Roberto Alomar led off with a ninth-inning single against Steve Avery, who was then relieved by Mark Wohlers.

With the count 2-0 on Carter, Alomar stole second, a gamble that changed the entire inning. It forced Wohlers to walk Carter intentionally and set up a sacrifice situation with Dave Winfield, known more for his power than his bunting ability.

He laid down a perfect bunt, only the 19th in his 19 big-league seasons. Lefty Mike Stanton replaced Wohlers and Sprague, hitting for lefty John Olerud, was walked intentionally.

In came righty Reardon to pitch to righty Maldonado, who promptly drove the ball over the drawn-in outfield.

The Braves blew numerous scoring opportunities, including one that nearly ended in a triple play.

In the fourth, they had runners at first and second with no outs on singles by Deion Sanders and Terry Pendleton. Justice hit a blast to center that Devon White hauled in with a leap at the wall.

Pendleton was called out for passing Sanders on the basepaths. Gruber ran Sanders back to second and appeared to tag him on the heel for the second triple play in Series history. But umpire Bob Davidson called Sanders safe.

GROWTH

getting serious — loss of agriculture, loss of wildlife habitat, crime, drug abuse, smog and lack of community feeling," he added. "When our city or county reaches what planners call 'build out,' when every bare inch of earth is paved and the buildings have become skyscrapers, stopping or slowing growth will have the same greedy developers crying for more."

Merkel said he sees what he believes are preferable alternatives.

"Why not create a stable local economy and community while we still have something worth saving?" he said.

"People who live in a sustainable society assume the responsibility of passing the Earth on to the next generation in better shape than when they entered it," he added.

Merkel's proposed alternatives include:

• Living with the local ecology in a harmonious way, by encouraging recycling and the reduction of consumption.

• Beginning restoration projects. Much of the county has been deforested for agribusiness use, Merkel said. Jobs could be created to replant creeks, hillsides and valleys.

• Local government providing incentives for small, local businesses and organic growers.

• Decentralizing work and shopping centers so they become part of the community. This reorganization will create jobs but not growth, Merkel said.

• Allowing a rezoning of residential areas to encourage cottage industry and community shops, markets and schools. People could walk to work, schools and shopping, Merkel said.

RAIN

Mechanical engineering junior Chet Johnston said he was happy about the rain.

"I'm tired of it being as dry as it has been," said Johnston, who bought a parking permit so he could drive to school.

Construction management junior Christine Roveda said the rain "doesn't mean a damn thing because everyone still wants state water."

But, Roveda said, the rain "means that everything smells better," and "I like it when the worms come out."

Lambda Chi Alpha's Dave Sakamoto said his fraternity's U.U. "Trash-A-Thon" was delayed by the rain somewhat but shouldn't cut into the success of their fund-raising efforts.

Local law enforcement agencies did not report any traffic accidents caused by the rain.

Today's forecast, according to Graves, calls for patchy morning fog to give way to clear skies and temperatures in the 70's. Northwest winds will reach 10 to 20 miles per hour.
